But we notice the claim that the verb is frequentive. The real word which should be used is not "frequentive," but frequentative, and means a repetition of acts, or more than one act. That the verb for baptize is of that character, I admit, and do not even wait to admit it, but affirm it, and should in an argument for "one baptism," as it is generally performed. More than one act is necessary to fill the meaning of the Greek verb, and more than one act is performed in administering baptism, and therefore "trine immersion" is not called for. The proof is in this, that the meaning of the verb is, literally, to dip in a vessel and draw it out,—the dipping and drawing of a bucket, for instance,—and the candidate is immersed in the water and lifted out of it, and hence two acts, or frequentative acts, are performed in one immersion, followed by one lifting out of the water. Any one can therefore see at a glance that "trine immersion" is uncalled for, either by the commission or the verb itself. One can see, also, that even immersion alone does not constitute baptism, as that is only one act, and is not frequentative, unless one is also lifted or drawn out of the water; for immersion only, leaves the thing or person in the water. So baptism is more than immersion, and yet is not of necessity more than *one im*mersion, and one emersion; for it is simply both.

If it is asked whether a frequentative verb will not allow of more than two acts under any circumstances? I answer, Yes, when more than two acts are required; but not otherwise, for two different acts as in "one baptism" constitute the frequentative action. Let all who want the truth on this question ponder well this fact, and be careful not to let a show of reasoning lead them to doing more than is required of them. One should be careful to do all that is commanded, but overdoing spoils the ordinance by robbing it of its simplicity and beauty and impressiveness, and destroys it entirely, by turning it into something else.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. C. Smith.

Dear Editors, and all of like precious faith in the Master's cause, we should be very glad could we be with you at the yearly Springfield meeting; also at Alton Bay; but duty demands our attention in this destitute State, where there are but few laborers, and where hundreds of places have never been warned of the approaching judgment that is just before us. How glad we should be could we attend those meetings, and listen to the words of eternal life as they flow from those filled with the Spirit of Christ. The Lord grant that you may have a heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus, and that his saving power may be felt and made known, and that all may be united together in the love of Christ and the spirit of patience, that you may endure unto the end. My heart's desire goes out even now to the Lord for your welfare, and the prosperity of Zion. "O for a closer walk with God," should be the desire of every heart, as we near the port of rest and glory. O that each one may be filled with the Spirit of life from on high, and so live that others "seeing their good works may be led to glorify our Father in heaven."

Will not some of our preaching Brn. from the East come to this State and labor during the fall and winter months? We do hope some may feel the woe of the gospel resting upon them, and move forward as did Abraham by faith, and receive the recompense at the resurrection of the just. We do need some whole-hearted men here, that are entirely given up to the work of the Lord. Many doors are open on every hand for faithful laborers. We hope none will come to cause divisions, or create a strife. The cause is weak here, but the Lord has done a great work, and the seed scattered is springing up all over this large State. O for more noble-hearted workers; those who are willing to help bear each other's burdens and fulfill the law of Christ. We need men who are willing to be men of low estate, and who will help all they can for Jesus' sake and his blessed cause. O that such men as these may be sent out to help build up, instead of tearing down, and finding fault, and destroying the cause, making many hearts to mourn and sigh over the desolation of Zion, caused by unprincipled men, not having the grace of God. O that such men would see, and repent, and bring forth fruit meet for repentance, doing their first work, esteeming others better than themselves. Brn. and Srs., let us all strive for the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace.

We have already had five tent-meetings in this State. Our last was at Ottawa, Franklin Co., where much good was done in Jesus' name. We were with them over two Sundays. Brethren from Centroplis, twelve miles away, helped in putting up the tent. Brn. Hunt and Rote aided in preaching the word. We had full attendance most of the time. A goodly number were stirred up to search the Scriptures, and some embraced the "gospel hope." A great door of usefulness has been opened at this place, and an impression left that will redound to the glory of God.

Aug. 4th, we took the tent down and had it shipped to Topeka, the capital of the State, where it will be erected again, the Lord willing, on the 13th, to continue over two Sundays. Then we rode a distance of twelve miles, to where we labored last winter, having meeting in the evening, and then again the next evening at another schoolhouse. Both were powerful meetings. One Bro., a Methodist formerly, came out, and the next day, with a Sr. Whitney, went forward in baptism. The members of the church in this place are doing well, because they are in the Living Vine, and I do trust they will ever continue steadfast unto the end, warning their neighbors and friends around them of the impending judgment.

The crops in many counties in this State have been almost entirely cut off, and hundreds of families must suffer the coming fall and winter, unless they receive help from some quarter. They have nothing with which to help themselves. Their farms are mortgaged, and nothing to do with, and on the whole, they are in trying circumstances. The Lord raise up helpers for the poor, is our earnest prayer. On our return to Arvonia, we found all well. We must soon start again into other new fields. We hope the friends East will remember the work in Kansas, and that prayers may go up for our welfare in the Lord.

One thing more I desire to mention, and that is, our mission for tracts, books, etc. O that every one may feel an interest in this matter, and send means to help on the Publication Society. Great good is being done by these silent messengers. May thousands of them be sent forth, and means provided to send them. The Lord bless you all, is our earnest prayer, and may we soon meet where partings will never be known.

Arvonia, Osage Co., Kansas.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

I am situated where I have but few to sympathize with me in the doctrine I believe and love. As I have none to talk with, I have to talk with my pen; so you must excuse me if I write too often. I am old and infirm, yet I do not forget God the great Creator, nor Jesus Christ my Redeemer; and I do not forget his blessed word, nor his people. I remember the hospitable homes, and kind treatment of brethren and sisters all over the country, and I want to say a few words of counsel and comfort to them.

I still remain firm in the doctrine I have so long believed and advocated, and I think I have progressed some in knowledge in the thirty years I have been searching and investigating the Bible; but I see there is much yet to learn. Some have intimated that we have got to the end of the Bible; but it is not so. There are some prophecies yet to be fulfilled, and great and important events to transpire. Thus far the prophecies have had a literal fulfillment; so we may well expect that the remaining prophecies will have just as literal a fulfillment. We see how literally every prophecy concerning Jesus' first advent was fulfilled; such as, he should be born in Bethlehem of Judea, be called out of Egypt, be called a Nazarene; they should give him vinegar to drink, should part his garments among them, and cast lots for his vesture; that he should be numbered with transgressors, and make his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death. All such prophecies were literally fulfilled to the letter. Now, then, may we not expect that other prophecies will be just as literally fulfilled?—such as, "If I go away I will come again"; "This same Jesus shall so come, in like manner, as ye have seen him go into heaven"; "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him"; and the wicked "shall hide themselves in the dens and caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord," and "their goods shall become a booty, and their houses a desolation"; and "they shall build houses, but not inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, but not drink the wine of them; they shall pour out their blood as dust, and their flesh as dung upon the earth; their silver and gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; and the slain shall be from one end of the earth to the other, and they shall not be lamented nor buried."

Now, brethren and sisters, keep searching the Scriptures; keep your minds open to conviction, and when you get the evidence of a truth, receive it, but not before. We have to learn little by little. Keep your hearts in order, your lights shining, for the signs of the times show plainly that Jesus' coming is very nigh. Brn., write to me, for I am alone.

Chelmsford, Mass.

From Bro. August L. Kling.

One of the tracts published by you, in the year of our Lord 1866, called the "Personal Coming of Christ," the only true time of our redemption, was sent me in the German language, and one in the English language. I have been spreading the mighty truths contained in the tract, and shown it to five of our German preachers, and thereby got myself into trouble. I will pay you whatever the charge will be, for the tracts I published in the New York Free Zeitung, if any one could help me to a copy of the same; but all to no avail. On the 29th day of June, I was brought before the Essex County Court, to answer the charge for spreading and advocating the doctrine and contents of said tract; and probably next Monday I will be heard again by the said tribunal. I must hereby let you know that I am at present in Essex Co. Jail, awaiting my trial for the above offence. I must further profess that the tract contains some prophecy which is gospel truth. I could write a great deal, but I fear I may disturb your good feeling with my scribbling.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Hoosic Valley Advent Christian Conference met for its third quarterly session at Woodford, Vt., July 23rd, 1847, as per appointment. The preachers present were Eld. A. W. Sibley, Sandy Hill, N. Y.; H. K. Flagg, Rutland, Vt.; R. L. Harrison, Hoosic, N. Y.; Wm. Blanchard, Pownal, Vt.; E. D. Kemp, Pownal, Vt.; W. O. Higley, Bennington, Vt.; Sr. Mary Tower, North Adams, Mass.; Bro. J. B. White, Hoosic Falls, N. Y., Treasurer. There was preaching by Brn. Sibley, Blanchard, Sr. Tower, and Bro. Munger, from Chicopee Falls, Mass.

Conference business was taken up Saturday, 25th, the meeting being called to order by the President. In the absence of the Secretary, W. O. Higley was appointed Secretary pro tem.

The delegates present were S. Worthington, Christopher Lawton, Hoosic, N. Y. Oscar Munson, Wm. Lincoln, Hebron, N. Y.; Geo. F. Townsend, Woodford, Vt.; A. W. Sibley, Sandy Hill, N. Y.; H. K. Flagg, Rutland, Vt. Bro. Hiram Munger being present, was invited to take a seat with us.

The reports of preachers and delegates were cheering. Eld. Flagg reported that as pastor of the church in Rutland, his labors were mostly confined there, though he had preached at Whipple Hollow, Clarendon, and other places. As a result, some from these places had united with the church in Rutland. Since he had taken the pastorate of the church, seventeen had united with it, and others will probably unite with them soon. The church is alive and at work for God. They have a very interesting Sunday school.

Eld. A. W. Sibley reported that his labors were mostly confined with the church in Sandy Hill, N. Y. Since the April conference, five had united with the church, and others think of uniting with them soon. He had preached in the school-house, on Morse St., where there had been a good interest to hear, and as a result some have united with the church. Had preached at the Presbyterian church once, and had another appointment to preach there in the absence of their pastor. A spirit of union prevails. Had a very interesting Sunday school, which numbers about ninety. It is under the care of Bro. French, formerly of Rutland, as superintendent, and is prospering finely.

Eld. Wm. Blanchard reported that he had preached in Pownal, North Adams, Cambridge, and Hebron. Had seen the work of God revived. Had many trials, but meant to live for God.

Eld. R. L. Harrison reported that he had not preached any during the last quarter on account of ill health; but his heart was in the work. He loved the doctrine of the coming of the Lord.

Bro. E. D. Kemp had labored some in the Methodist Sunday school in Pownal, and had been invited to preach for them.

Brn. Munson and Lincoln reported that the church in Hebron is holding its own. They have preaching one half of the time by Bro. Blanchard. Have a Sunday school.

Bro. Lawton reported for the church in Hoosic, N. Y. Have lost one member by death since last conference. Have preaching three-fourths of the time.

Bro. G. F. Townsend reported for the church in Woodford. Eld. W. O. Higley was laboring with the church as pastor, and superintendent of the Sunday school. The church is in harmony. They had prayer-meetings, though there was not as good attendance as could be wished.

The conference decided that there should be five tent meetings this season within the limits of the conference; the first to commence immediately after the Springfield campmeeting; notice of which will be given by the tent committee in due time. A vote of thanks was rendered to the kind friends in Woodford, who so hospitably entertained members of the conference.

Voted, That a report of the Conference be sent to the World's Crisis and Advent Christian Times, after which the conference adjourned until the annual meeting in October.

Our new chapel was dedicated to the worship of God, Friday, July 24th. Bro. A. W. Sibley delivered the dedicatory discourse, which was founded on the words of Paul, as recorded in Heb. 3: 4. It was full of deep thought and was generally appreciated.

It was found that nearly $300.00 were needed to clear the church from debt, which was speedily raised in cash and pledges. Brn. from Hoosic most kindly and generously put their shoulders to the wheel, and finished up the chapel, after the church had gone about as far as they could without borrowing money; and now, by the blessing of God, we have a very neat and attractive place of worship, and we hope it may be a place where God will love to record his name. We have received help in this work from christians of other denominations, as well as from those of our own faith. To God be all of the praise; for every good gift, and every perfect gift cometh from him, the great source of all blessing.

WEBB—STOCKWELL. At the residence of the bride's parents, in Royalston, Mass., June 28th, 1874, by Elder J. A. Packard, Mr. CHARLES F. WEBB, of Winchendon, Mass., and Miss SARAH A. STOCKWELL, of Royalston.

HOWARD—McKEEN. In Chatham, N. H., July 4th, by I. E. Clay, Esq., Mr. JOSEPH C. HOWARD and Miss NANCY McKEAN, both of Stowe, Me.

SMALL—MOULTON. At Whitefield, N. H., Aug 3d, by Elder W. M. Harmon, REUBEN A. SMALL, of Pittsfield, Me., and SUSIE M. MOULTON, of Whitefield.

GRINNELL—LITTLE. In Portsmouth, N. H., Aug. 15th, by Eld. E. Owen, Mr. WILLIAM H. GRINNELL and Mrs. SUSAN E. LITTLE, both of Portsmouth.

Obituaries.

MIXON. In Darlington Co., S. C., July 11th, 1874, Bro. C. C. Mixon, aged fifty-seven years and seven days.

Bro. Mixon is the first one seized by death from the church in Darlington Co. He fell asleep in Jesus in the full assurance of a part in the first resurrection, at the last trump, when this mortal shall put on immortality. Bro. Mixon was converted under my ministry, in the Methodist church. After my suspension, he was among the first to embrace our views of the Bible, and unite with us in covenant brotherhood. He lived and died a good and blessed man, and I hope to see him soon among the redeemed. May a holy God bless his widow and children, and prepare them all to meet the Lord when he comes.

P. G. BOWMAN.

A. C. Times, please copy.

BARTLETT. In Portsmouth, N. H., Aug. 13th, 1874, John H. Bartlett, aged seventy-two.

Bro. B. was converted in early life, and for many years was actively connected with the Christian church, but when the good tidings of Jesus' coming and kindred truths fell upon his ear, he heartily embraced them; and through years of suffering they have proved a perennial source of comfort and strength. The last year of his life has been one of unusual suffering, but for six or eight months past, they seemed unparalled; yet he bore them with christian fortitude, grace abundantly triumphing over the infirmities of flesh. His end was peace, his life consistent. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

E. OWEN.

LOOMIS. Bro. Alvah Loomis died of paralysis, at Champlain, N. Y., on Aug. 7th, 1874, aged seventy-three years, nine months.

Our brother died suddenly, stricken to insensibility in an hour, and living but two days without speaking; died in full vigor and strength, and in fulness of bodily form. He has been an Adventist since 1842, and a prominent, active, and respected citizen. He loved and defended our doctrines. He came six miles to hear Eld. Munger when here last; it was the last adventual sermon he heard. D. T. Taylor buried him, speaking from Heb. 9: 27. A large audience was in attendance. A wife, a son, and numerous daughters weep, in hope of resurrection.—Com.

GOODWIN. Died in the Lord, suddenly and unexpectedly, while at church in Edinboro, Pa., Aug. 9th, 8 P. M., Sister Sally Goodwin, aged seventy-four.

She was a sister of our lamented Bro. Jacob Goodwin, who was among the first here to embrace and preach fearlessly the grand fundamental Bible truth of immortality for the poor sin sick and death-stricken soul of man in and through our Lord Jesus Christ only. Like him she believed, and lived and loved and died in the Lord. Her quiet, peaceful life, went out like a lamp from which the oil was consumed, and to her the mode of dissolution was a most merciful and gracious dispensation of divine goodness. Funeral services on Tuesday P. M., from 2 Saml. 14: 14.

G. W. STETSON.

KINGSBURY.—Fell asleep in Jesus in Amherst, Mass., Aug. 11th, 1874, our dear mother, Annie B. Kingsbury, aged eighty-five years.

She loved the word of God and the place of prayer. While we mourn for her, we mourn not as those who have no hope; for we have the blessed assurance that she will come forth in the morning of the resurrection, clothed with immortality and eternal life, and live with Christ forever on the new earth. Words of comfort were spoken at the funeral by Eld. H. F. Carpenter, from 1 Thess. 4: 13–18.

E. G. and C. F. KINGSBURY.

SMITH. In Marion, N. Y., June 1st, 1874, Sr. Sarah Smith.

She sleeps in Jesus. For many years she had loved the blessed hope, and died with a longing desire to see Jesus, and an ardent expectation that she should soon be awakened to see him coming in glory to gather the faithful.

DR. STEWART of Leghorn, Italy, gives a rather discouraging account of the work of the Protestants in Italy. He says that the country has been fully open to the Protestants for fifteen years, but that the results have been very meagre. There are in all one hundred stations where Protestantism is preached, but the great hindrance is the spirit of opposition and rivalship between the missionaries of different sects. Especially in Rome the missionaries have crowded in so thickly, attracted by the prestige of the place, that they actually tread on each other's heels and give the priests a fine chance to expatiate on Protestant divisions. Including the Waldensians, the Evangelicals in Italy number 30,000; excluding the Waldensians but 10,000, out of the 24,000,000 of Italy.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 18. The destructive fires raging in the vicinity of Ottawa are a repetition of the devasting fires of 1870. The most disastrous scene is in the direction of Aylmer, where the fire is three miles in length, and making rapid progress towards Duchine. On the farms of Messrs Telinstle and Mulligan the fire is raging most fiercely. One of the Ottawa engines and fire brigade was sent to fight the flames near Skead's mills. The citizens are hard at work fighting the element. Business operations are suspended this afternoon, and the city is enveloped in a cloud of smoke and ashes. Many are packing up their valuables preparatory to flight.

CALIFORNIA.—Of seventy-nine cities and towns in California in which the question of license or no license of the sale of intoxicating drinks has been submitted to the voters, fifty-nine have given a majority for no license. A very good showing for the Pacific State. In the smaller villages and in the townships where most of the people are farmers, the temperance party almost always triumphs. The large towns and cities are the stronghold of rum.

Notices.

☞ TICKETS can be obtained to Alton Bay Campmeeting and return by the Nashua, Concord, Wiers, and the Lake R. R., for $4.90. From Worcester and return, good from Aug. 12th to Sept. 5th, inclusive.

E. G. HIGGINS.

Bethel, Vt., Campmeeting.

The Bethel (Vt.) Campmeeting will commence (D.V.) SATURDAY, SEPT. 5TH. The camp-ground never looked prettier than now. It smiles in beauty and neatness. It awaits in loveliness to greet all who can come. Friends are arranging to put up several new tents. We are expecting a better meeting than ever. We expect the same R. R. arrangements as last year.

Pay full fare from any station upon the Vermont Central R. R to the meeting, and receive from the committee a free return pass. This includes also all the roads operated by the Vermont Central, for the names of which see late copies of the Crisis. We also expect a reduction of fare on the Montpelier and Wells River R. R.

Bro. Chapman is preparing to furnish good board at seventy cents per day. As we expect quite a number of preachers, those churches that can, would do well to adopt one, and furnish a home for him in their tent. Private lodgings and horse keeping can be very readily obtained near by at reasonable rates.

TENT BUILDING. The committee will be on the ground Aug. 31st, and through the week, and all who intend to build tents of wood are especially requested to have them completed before the meeting commences, as it seems a pity to sacrifice so much of the spirit and power of devotion to the sound and toil of the hammer. We need the entire meeting from SEPT. 5TH to SEPT. 14TH for worship. Come, brethren and sisters, come up to this feast. Lay aside toil and care, and come. We have engaged efficient help from abroad. We shall expect you, coming with holy hearts and happy faces. H. F. C., for Com.

Pittsfield Me. Campmeeting.

The Annual Campmeeting for the eastern part of Maine will be held, if the Lord will, on the ground occupied last year, in Hathorn's grove at Pittsfield, commencing Sunday, August 30th, and hold over Sunday, Sept. 6th. The grove has been much improved by clearing, grading, and deepening wells. It is expected that all who can will put up tents for themselves, and furnish plenty of bedding and food. The Maine Mission Tent will be on hand, and will afford lodging for those who cannot put up tents for themselves; but all must provide bedding for themselves. Be prepared for cold storms. Good board will be furnished at the boarding tent. Breakfast and supper, 25 cents each; dinner, 40 cents, except the last Sunday, when dinner will be fifty cents. Also horse keeping, hay, straw and board, will be provided on the ground for all who wish, at reasonable rates.

☞ No reduction of Rail Road fare can possibly be obtained.

COMMITTEE: Jer. Carr, F. A. Baker, S. K. Partridge, Oren S. French, J. M. Tozier, Oscar Farnum, M. W. Corliss, G. L. McKenney, William Clark, Abner Millet.

THE R. I. AND EAST CONN. CAMPMEETING will commence Aug. 26th, and continue to Sept. 4th. The fare is reduced one third on the Hartford and Providence R. R.,—one dollar from Providence and return. The same from Plainfield Junction. Inquire for campmeeting tickets at all way stations between Providence and Plainfield. We expect all our preachers within the limits of this meeting, and others from abroad. Come, brethren and sisters, make a little sacrifice to attend. Do not let trifling things keep you away. Bring your children and unconverted neighbors. We will do the best we can for your comfort. Let much prayer go up from all hearts for the salvation of the people. Do not fail to carefully read Brn. Couch's and Grant's articles on Campmeeting interests. If all take heed to those instructions, we cannot doubt the good results. The Lord will help. Board and horse-keeping the same as last year.

E. R. WOOD, Secretary.

NEW PRESTON TENT MEETING.—If the Lord will, the Mission tent will be pitched in Camp's grove (the old place), on Tuesday, Sept. 1st. The meeting is to hold over the following Sunday, and should it be thought best, the meetings will be continued longer, either in the tent or hall in the village. We hope to have a general gathering at this meeting. Come prepared to camp out as at campmeeting. What you lack, we will do the best we can to help you to obtain. We propose to cook and eat together as one family. Come the first day, and stay through. We wish the preaching Brn. to come, whether we have spoken to you or not. To all we say, Come. Whether you have anything to bring or not, come.

H. J. BALDWIN.
C. L. CALHOUN.

CAMPMEETING NOTICE.—The annual campmeeting of the A. C. Conference, in Northern Illinois, will be holden at Wyanet, Bureau Co., Illinois. The meeting will commence Saturday evening, Aug. 29th, and close Sunday evening, Sept. 6th. We anticipate a large and interesting meeting. It is hoped that every church will be represented by a tent, and that all will come to work for God and the salvation of the perishing. Eld. S. W. Thurber, of Minneapolis, Minn., will be at the meeting to labor in the gospel. Other prominent ministers will also be present. And above all, the Lord by his Spirit will be there. Come, then, to the meeting, one and all, and come early. Provisions will be made at an ample boarding tent for victualling all who may desire. The tents will be pitched on the old camp-ground, one half mile east of the depot.

The annual conference will also convene at the same time, but will be so arranged as not to interfere with social meetings. Each church should shnd a delegate or letter, and each minister should report either by person or by letter.

For the Committee, C. W SMITH, President.
C. C. MARSTON, Sec.

THE first quarterly meeting for the Eastern District of Wisconsin A. C. Conference will be held with the church at Big Creek, commencing Friday, Sept. 4th, to hold over the Lord's day. We expect a number of the preaching brethren to be present to assist in preaching the word.

E. P. GRAVES.

I WOULD say to all the brethren and sisters in the State of Kansas, that I am now traveling with the Advent Christian Mission Tent of Kansas, with Bro. and Sr. Smith. I expect to go with the tent until the last of September; after which time, I will visit and hold meetings with all who may write to me, and inform me of their whereabouts. If it is the Lord's will, and the people desire it, I will devote Oct., Nov. and Dec., to holding meetings from place to place, as the interest demands. Let all who want me to visit their neighborhoods during those three months, and preach the word, write to me, and inform me when they would like me to come. Direct to VIRGIL HUNT, Wellington, Sumner Co., Kansas, Box 104.

I HAVE moved to Raymond, Iowa, and taken the pastoral charge of the church there.

J. W. BURROUGHS.

THE campmeeting located at Coventry Centre, R. I., will commence Aug. 26th, and continue to Sept. 4th. E. R. WOOD, Secretary.

Mechanic Falls Campmeeting.

Providence permitting, a campmeeting will be held at Mechanic Falls, Me., commencing SATURDAY, SEPT. 5TH, to continue over Sunday, Sept. 13th. Provision will be made for board and horse keeping. The boarding tent is under the management of Bro. J. Moulton, who will furnish single meals,—breakfast or supper at 35 cts. each; dinner 50 cts.; or 85 cts. per day. The stable is managed by the committee the same as last year. Teams will be provided to convey all from the depot to the ground who wish to ride. The fare on the Grand Trunk Road will be about one half the usual rate. The Maine Central utterly refuse to make any reduction of fare.

Committee: M. H. Mitchell, C. Dennen, I. N. Thompson, Geo. Humphrey, Joshua Howard.

PORTLAND AND OGDENSBURG R. R.—Persons intending to pass over this railroad to the Mechanic Falls Campmeeting, can secure a return pass free of charge by dropping me a line, stating from what station they are to start.

C. H. SWEET, Steep Falls, Me.

West Hawley Advent Campmeeting.

Two and a half miles from the old time honored camp-ground in Savoy, Mass.

An Advent campmeeting at Fullerville, West Hawley, Mass., will commence Saturday evening, August 29th, and continue through one week, including two Sabbaths, and closing Monday morning, Sept. 7th. Good and able preachers from abroad are engaged to preach the word during the meeting. Board will be provided for those who wish, by the day, or through the meeting. Those wishing to board themselves, bring your provisions with you; or, if you prefer, you can have at common prices the provisions you want at a large grocery store near by. The large Hoosick Valley preaching tent will be on the ground for meetings, and also for lodging to all those who come to camp out during the meetings. Those who intend to camp out nights, should bring an empty bed-tick, blankets, etc.

It is evident from an extraordinary increase of the last-day tokens, that this will be the last great gathering of those who love Christ's appearing and kingdom, who are dwelling in this Hoosick mountain region. Brethren and sisters, do lay aside all your cares and labor, for one week's rest at this feast of tabernacles. Those coming with teams will find ample provision for their horses.

H. K. FLAGG,
A. W. SIBLEY, } Committee.
E. McCULLOCK,

VERMONT CONFERENCE.—The next annual Advent Conference will be held on the camp-ground, at Bethel, commencing Wednesday, Sept. 9th, at four o'clock P. M. Each church is entitled to one delegate, and one additional delegate to every ten above the number of ten. Let this conference be fully represented, and thus show your interest in the cause we so much love.

R. N. STETSON, Sec'y.

TENT MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a tent meeting at Groveland, Mass., on the Newburyport Branch R. R., three miles from Haverhill, commencing Tuesday evvening, Sept. 8th, and continue afternoons and evenings through the week, and over Sunday, Sept. 13th.

ENOCH MORRILL.

TENT MEETING.—We expect to have the N. H. Mission Tent pitched in Sutton, N. H., to have meeting over Sunday, Sept. 20th, and onward as duty may demand. Particulars hereafter.

ENOCH MORRILL.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The first quarterly meeting of the A. C. Quarterly Conference of N. W. Kansas, for the second conference year, will be held, the Lord willing, with the A. C. Church of West Creek, Republic county, commencing Friday evening, Sept. 25th, and continuing over Sunday, and as long as the interest demands. Bro. J. C. Smith, State Evangelist, is expected to be present with the State Mission Tent, to assist in preaching; also Sr. M. J. Clark is expected to be present to preach the word. All of like precious faith are cordially invited to attend.

DISTRICT MEETING.—The Bolton District Meeting, the fourth and last of the Conference year, will be held in the Page school-house, East Bolton, P. Q., to commence Thursday, Sept. 3d, at two P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. A full attendance is earnestly desired and expected. Let the true friends of the cause of the coming Savior come together from Magog, Orford, East and West Bolton, and parts adjacent, to confer upon its wants, and unite in earnest labor for its promotion. Ministers, official and leading members, are especially expected to be present. Let all the friends circulate the appointment. Elders Marsh and Chadsey, and others from the Farnham District, are expected to attend. Come, all who can, and unite in the good work. CHAS. P. DOW.

KANSAS CAMPMEETINGS.—The Northern Campmeeting of Advent Christians of Kansas will convene at Clyde, Cloud Co., Kansas, on Thursday, Sept. 10th, the Lord willing, and continue over two Sundays. The State tent will be on the ground, which will contain five hundred people. The following preachers will be there to preach the word: Eld. J. C. Smith, State Evangelist; Eld. Virgil Hunt, Asst. State Evangelist; Elder R. F. Clark, and Mrs. Clark. Others are expected. We have written to Bro. Sheldon to be present, and shall do all we can to have him there. The following have been appointed as committee of arrangements, and are prepared to be on the ground the day appointed, to make full arrangements. I will be there to meet you, if the Lord will: Frank Wilson, Chairman, Clyde, Cloud Co.; W. H. Rich, Clifton, Washington Co.; T. J. Hay, Peach Creek, Wash. Co.; C. D. Potter, Peach Creek, Wash. Co.; J. Roberts, Lake Sibley, Cloud Co.; C. M. Collins, Bransford, Washington Co.; B. S. Conley, Glen Elder, Mitchell Co.

Now, my dear brethren and sisters, and all who love Jesus, we want a general rally from all quarters at this meeting. Shall we have it? Let us give up our worldly business and pleasures for a little time, and come and work for the Lord, that our souls may be blest, and sinners converted and come to Jesus. Preaching brethren who preach the word are invited to attend. Let your baskets be well filled. Come equipped for camping. All bring tents who can. R. F. CLARK, Sec., Peach Creek, Washington Co., Kansas.

THE IOWA GENERAL UNION CONFERENCE AND CAMPMEETING will be held in Brooklyn, Poweskeik Co., Iowa, beginning Sept. 11th, and holding over two Sundays. A boarding tent will be on the ground, where board can be obtained at reasonablea rates. We desire to see a large attendance at this meeting. Bring your tents and bedding. J. RIDLEY, Secretary.

P. S. The conference will convene during the first part of the meeting. J. R.

NOTICE.—Edinboro, Pa., local (adjourned) S. A. C. Quarterly Conference is now set for August 29th, 2 and 7 P. M.; and Sunday, 30th, love-feast at 9 A. M., and preaching at 10 A. M. and 7 P. M. Lord's Supper at 12 to 1 M. Ordinance of baptism from 1 to 3 P. M. Let as many as can, come up to this meeting of God's loved ones.

G. W. STETSON, Pastor.

NOTICE.—I understand that there is a young gentleman traveling as a book agent, and claiming to be at work for George T. Adams. He pretends to be preparing for the ministry, asking people for money to assist him. He called at one place in Ct., and wanted to go to North Adams to hear Bro. Munger preach, and to see his mother, etc., claiming to be a nephew of mine. I would like to say, that I have not any nephew traveling, and that this is an impostor. Beware of him, and all others like him. Let me here suggest that whenever any one claims to be a relative of any of our preaching brethren as a passport, you had better write to such an one at once, and have the matter settled. Your Bro. in Christ,

GEO. A. STREETER.

NOTICE.—As I expect my labors in this section will soon close, I would say I shall be ready to go and preach "the gospel of the kingdom" anywhere, as the Lord may open the way, the coming fall and winter. Any wishing to correspond with me can direct for the present to A. P. MOORE, Linden, Genesee Co., N. Y.

WE wish some of our preaching brethren would call on us. We will find a place for them to speak in, for we are in need of help here. Please correspond with A. P. Scribner, New Market, N. H.

☞ I cannot visit Scitico, Ct., until Sept. in consequence of previous engagements. Will the Sr. Pease, from Scitico, please send me her address? Address H. C. SMITH, No. 44 Chesnut Street, Hartford, Ct.

☞ Believing it to be my duty to give my labors to the protracted meeting in Philadelphia during the next three weeks, I shall be obliged to withdraw my N. H. appointments for the present. Will replace them at earliest convenience.

ROLAND D. GRANT.

"THE MYSTERY EXPLAINED:

OR,

AN EXPOSITION OF THE WOMAN AND THE SCARLET-COLORED BEAST

In the 17th Chapter of Revelation.

SHOWING WE ARE NEAR THE END OF THE PRESENT DISPENSATION."

BY MILES GRANT.

This valuable and interesting tract is now ready, and for sale at this Office. Price by mail, single copy, 8 cts; four copies for 25 cts.; per dozen, 75 cts. AG'T.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express. AG'T.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

For sale at this Office. AG'T.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

LOOKING FOR HIS APPEARING.

In the lonely midnight watches,
Hear us, Father, while we pray;
We are watching, we are waiting,
For the coming of thy day;
Day for all our woes atoning,
Of our mortal life the end,
Day of glorious appearing
With our ever-blessed Friend.

Lo, he cometh! Lo, he cometh!
Our redemption draweth nigh,
Soon our eyes shall see the glory
Of his banner in the sky;
Unto earth our King descending,
By his saints shall be adored,
While the wicked flee, astonished,
From the presence of the Lord.

O ye mortals, vain and sinful!
Must we call on you in vain?
When the heavenly Bridegroom cometh,
Shall your lamps unlit remain?
Will ye linger 'mid your pleasures,
Heeding not the warning cry,
Seeking still for worldly treasures
While the world's last hours go by?

Come, Lord Jesus! O come quickly!
End our sighing and complaints;
Come to judge the nations truly,
And to reign o'er all thy saints!
We are weary of our waiting,
And the world is sick with sin;
Open now the gates of glory,— Let thy faithful people in."

"WHY IS IT?"

As men look around and see the uncertainty of terrestial things, the sudden changes that come in the midst of seeming prosperity blasting earthly hopes and ruining earthly prospects; as they behold the downfall of kings and potentates, the sudden and unforeseen breaking up of social compacts, and the rending of societies and ruin of many who were trusted to the utmost by their friends because of their faithfulness; as men see and feel these things in their observation and experience, they are led to exclaim in wonder and perplexity, "Why are these things so?" And while they make the inquiry with an earnest desire to know the truth, they are told that these things are but an indication of the general corruption that exists, and that the uncertainty in the elements, and the rottenness of society is only an indication of the coming judgment; a general demand as it were for the coming of one who alone can save the good from the general ruin that is inevitably impending, and destroy the unrighteous and the corrupt by the purging fires of judgment.

Men are told that society is becoming too corrupt to exist much longer in its present state; that churches are so without God's truth that they cannot prosper, and among all the sectarian bodies in the land there is not saving truth enough, so but that the devil runs almost the entire machinery of church organizations, and that no one should be surprised in the least at the breaking up of church bodies when they have departed so far from the theological truths that are due the present time. And when the sects succeed in outliving and covering over the cases of corruption and fraud among them, it is said they flourish because the devil prospers them, and that their time will surely come at last.

But there is another cry in the land, a wail as it were from the spirits of heavenly ones who trusted in God that they would escape the general plague, and that while other churches were to receive vials of wrath, there remained for them nothing but peace and tranquility from God.

Those who have the truth so much needed in these last days as a means of saving men from infidelity, scepticism, and ruin; those who have a mission from God to proclaim his last message to a judgment-bound and guilty world, and who are moving on in their work trying in the spirit of Jesus to faithfully perform their duty and gather a people out from the world to stand on the glorious platform of the great dispensational truth of these last days, find in their own ranks the spirit of contention and strife, and men who are pledged to build up only seek to destroy. Leaders quarrel, and show more of the spirit of Belial than of Christ; conferences are scenes of strife and contention; those who were trusted as angels prove to be false in their ways and rotten in their hearts; and the class who ought to wield a mighty influence in the world as a people, are left without worldly fame and name.

"Why is it thus?" writes one and another from all parts. We are not surprised. We have been surprised heretofore, for we verily thought the Adventists were the people, and wisdom would die with them. We thought they were the only peculiar people of God, being built upon God's truth, but we have learned that if all those numbered as Adventists should die, God would have some people yet left upon the earth. Being built upon God's truth is not enough. Men must build upon Jesus Christ himself. Truth is the material for procuring the fabric, but the building must be on some other foundation besides abstract truth. The foundation must be in God, and the dwelling in God.

There is too much human policy in our conferences, and too little of God. There has been too much head work, and too little heart work. There has been too much catering to human talent and leadership, and too little use made of the arm that is mighty to save. Men of corrupt minds—unconverted men—men of worldly principle rather than neavenly indwelling have done their work in their own way, and no wonder there is trouble. And now is the time men and women should speak out plainly in this matter; we cannot cover up wrong and think to prosper. God has a work for us to do, and a work for all to do, and amid all the overturnings of our confidence in men, or all the apparent sad results to follow secfarian division, we need not fear to follow Jesus, and with the holy sanctifying influence of an indwelling spirit to stand firm for the right. If Adventists prosper, it may or it may not be because Jesus is with them. If Adventists go down, Jesus does not fall.

Let no one fear, if he is on the rock Christ Jesus. Remember, if men fall it only indicates that man's work cannot stand. The blasts that blow across us now are only ripening us for judgment. If God brings out the hidden things of darkness let no one tremble at the result. Let us not seek to hide wrong or to cover iniquity, for fear our sect will come in disrepute. Far better for us to clean out guilt if it is in our midst, than seek to cover it up among us from the sight of men. God is blessing the labors of his true servants everywhere. And the signs of the times among those who proclaim the coming of Jesus are full of evidence that his coming draws nigh.—A. C. Times.

WISDOM IS PROFITABLE TO DIRECT.

J. W. THOMAS.

"And entering into a ship, we launched."—ACTS 27:2.

Two sea captains are about to sail to some foreign port. One is wise, the other unwise. One says, "The voyage I am about to take across the ocean is a long and perilous one. I will have my vessel overhauled, and repaired, and everything made strong, and sure as possible, so that she may be able to stand any storm, and take my cargo safely to the distant port." He does so. At great expense and pains he makes due preparation for the voyage. He goes to the Custom House officer and gets his clearance papers, and is all ready to hoist sail and away.

The other captain makes no preparation. He says, "My old craft has made many successful voyages. I cannot go to the expense and trouble of having her overhauled. I know she needs repairing, but I will risk it." He loads her. He does not go to the Custom House officer to get his clearance papers. He is presumptuous, and runs the risk of entering a foreign port without anything to show who he is, or where he is from.

All is ready, and they sail. Down the harbor they go. One apparently bids as fair to make as successful voyage as the other. They sail on. By and by they get out into the ocean, where the mighty waves and winds test the power of each vessel. One rides on majestically, cutting her way through the foam, showing no signs of leakage, and giving the captain and crew no uneasiness concerning her safety. The other snaps, and creaks, and tosses about in a fearful manner. The captain and crew are frightened, and work night and day at the pumps to keep her from sinking. The recklessness of this captain has caused them a great deal of trouble, but this is not the worst of it. After a while the distant port heaves in view. They anchor. An officer is sent off to inspect the vessels, and to call for the papers of each captain. The first shows his clearance papers, and gives satisfactory evidence that everything is all right. He is permitted to pull up to the wharf, discharge his cargo, buy and sell, and is protected by the authorities. The papers of the other captain are called for. He has none to show. Who are you? Where are you from? He has nothing to show. He and the crew are taken and bound as prisoners. The vessel and cargo is taken, and perhaps sold, or anchored near to some port, where the enemies guns are levelled at it. This captain came to a miserable end. He had a perilous voyage, and when he reached the other side was captured, lost his vessel, cargo, and perhaps his own life.

These captains may illustrate the conduct and destiny of two classes of men. The wise and foolish. The wise man says, "I am destined for another world. I am going to a distant port. I know that my voyage will be attended with perils. I shall need strength to meet the difficulties. I shall also need something to recommend me at the end of my journey. I will prepare for it. I will overhaul my heart, and get all sin out of it. I will repent and amend my ways. I will go to the throne of grace and get my clearance papers signed by the Lord Jesus Christ."

The foolish man says, "I know I cannot always live here. My judgment tells me I am sailing on to the great future, but then I guess it will be well enough with me. I cannot fuss and bother about repentance and holy living. I think I will come out about as well as the best of them. I will risk it."

A few years pass on. They come to the judgment seat. The officers of heaven are sent out to examine them. Where are your papers? "Here they are," says the wise man, "sealed with the blood of Jesus." "Come ye blessed," says the officer. The face of the foolish man looks pale, and he hears the words "Depart."

MORAL COURAGE.

"They are slaves who fear to be
In the right with two or three."

A zealous reformer was pushing an unpopular but a just measure. His friends urged him to desist, assuring him that all the world was against him. "Then," said he, "I am against all the world!" That man was a moral hero. We are short of this royal and most important quality of christian character—moral courage.

No symbol of christian life is more common than that of a warfare. Christ emphatically declared that he came not to send peace on earth, but a sword. This conflict of ages must continue until sin is completely vanquished. This moral warfare requires moral courage no less now than when the church passed through its ten great floods of persecution. Cross the wicked purposes of the world; attack the strong dominions of selfishness; or even stand on the defensive against the tremendous forces of unbelief, worldliness and wickedness, and you will need more moral courage than a military patriot. True moral courage is not founded upon obstinacy, pride, revenge or mere natural resolutions, but on intense moral convictions and a sense of willing obligation to God and man.

Moral courage is courage in obedience to God and in the service of man, regardless of difficulties and dangers. It is opposed to hesitancy, guile, time-service and cowardice. It is the medium between fear and rashness. It is an eminent christian grace. "Add to your faith, virtue," that is, virtue in the Roman sense, namely, courage. A hundred texts of sacred Scripture, emphatically inculcate this virtue. The "boldness" of Peter and John, when forbidden by the authorities to preach in the name of Jesus, awakened even more amazement among the people than the notable miracle which they had just before performed. Some one says, "A preacher without this is like a smooth file, a dull knife, or a sentinel who fears to let off his gun when the evening approaches."

Bunyan graphically sets forth christian courage in the conduct of his pilgrim at the house of the interpreter. "Armed men obstructed the doorway. A great company of men halted near by, afraid to enter. A man sat at a little distance with a book and his inkhorn to take the names of those who should enter.

At last when every man started back for fear of the armed men, Christian saw a man of a very stout countenance come up to the man that sat there to write, saying, 'Set down my name, sir;' the which, when he had done, he saw the man draw his sword and put a helmet upon his head, and rush towards the door upon the armed men who laid upon him with deadly force; but the man, not at all discouraged, fell to cutting and hacking most fiercely.

So after he had received and given many wounds to those that attempted to keep him out, he cut his way through them all and pressed forward into the palace; at which there was a pleasant voice heard from those that were within, even those that walked upon the top of the palace, saying,

'Come in, come in!
Eternal glory thou shalt win!'"

How deficient is our present Christianity in this sterling element. How often we see a moral poltroon in the pulpit, unwittingly allowing carnal men to sink into the slumbers of perdition, when an apostle would thunder and lighten to rouse them. How much useful activity is lost to the church because men and women are afraid, and bury their one talent. How many churches are coming to ruin by a carnal and cowardly policy.

The early christians were bolder than we are, and yet the Holy Spirit saw fit to endue them with an amazing increase of boldness again and again.

The church stands mainly on the defensive to-day. It ought to assume the offensive. But this we can never do without more moral courage. The church needs reformation from worldliness, but where shall we find the men brave enough for reformers?

We need men like old Noah, who stood up against the world. We need men of backbone, men of spiritual muscle, men made of stern stuff, men who will neither fear nor brag, run nor yield; men with whom self and what the world can give or take away are nothing, and God, humanity and the cause are all—men upon whom the mantle of an apostle, a Latimer, a Luther, or a Knox has fallen? God send us the men!—Sel.

ANYWHERE WITH JESUS.

Anywhere with Jesus,
Clinging close to him,
I shall surely conquer
O'er the world and sin.
CHO.—Anywhere, anywhere,
I will follow Jesus;
From the fear of aught but sin
His perfect love hath freed us.

Though the clouds may gather,
Darkness shut me in,
Anywhere with Jesus,
Any thing but sin.
Love shall be our motto,
Self we will deny;
For our blessed Jesus
We will live or die.

"JESUS WEPT."

GEO. THOMSON.

How full of import are these sweet words; how fraught with intense affection and sympathy: "Jesus wept." Oh, what a volume, yea, what volumes of tenderness, kindness, pity and love are couched in that blessed brief sentence, "Jesus wept." The Son of God made tears forever sacred, while sin and suffering remains. If you would realize the force and beauty of that act, you must be a sufferer. Mary and Martha were sufferers, and they were not the only ones present on that memorable occasion, who appreciated the tears of the Son of God; even the hard-hearted Jews could exclaim, "Behold how he loved him." What a beautiful narrative. I never read it but I feel drawn nearer to my dear Savior, and nestling down in his great heart of love, every feature of that event gives evidence of the Savior's divinity and love. It was designed to strengthen the faith of the disciples on these two points, yet how strange the Savior's proceedings must have seemed to them. After the messengers from Mary and Martha had announced the sickness of Lazarus "He still abode two days in that place." This indeed looked like a want of sympathy, but no doubt the struggle of affection was then going on; and when the Lord told them subsequently that Lazarus was dead, and remarked that he was glad for their sake he was not there, how strangely they must have regarded such an utterance; and yet that utterance reveals to us the great sympathy of Jesus. If he had been present, his love and sympathy for that dear family would have caused him to prevent the death of Lazarus, and they would not have witnessed his resurrection. Mary and Martha said truly, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." But as it was, they had the privilege of witnessing an exhibition of this divine power as well as his great love.

While lying in bed, suffering on one occasion, during my present illness, and trying to meditate on God's goodness, this blessed promise came to me with a force and power I never before realized; he is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities." I was overwhelmed with joy, and shouted aloud the praise of God. Can it be, I thought, that Jesus feel what I feel? that the pangs which stir my system from center to circumference also thrills the humanity of Jesus? Yes, he looks upon me, and then remembers sin, Gethsemane, and Calvary. O Jesus, Jesus, who can love like thee? Thy name is love, thy nature, sympathy, compassion, pity, still extends to me. O suffering ones, lean hard upon Jesus. He will sustain you. Said one to me not long ago, I confess I cannot sympathize with you, for I was never sick a day in my life. Not so with Jesus. He was a sufferer. He can enter with us into our deepest griefs, and share our keenest sorrows, and the fiat hath gone forth, "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him."

Some people look upon tears as a sign of effeminacy; but let us remember that "Jesus wept," and thus made tears not only a token of manhood, but of divinity. Brethren, beloved, restrain not the tears of sympathy. The sufferer knows how to appreciate them when not a word is spoken.

Prairie du Sac, Wisconsin.

FASHION.—"I have seen a woman," said a late preacher, "professing to love Christ more than the world, clad in a silk dress costing $75; making up and trimming of the same, $40; bonnet (or apology for one) $35; velvet mantle, $150; diamond ring, $500; watch, chain, pin, and other trapwings, $450; total, $1,250; all hung upon one frail, dying woman. I have seen her, at a meeting in behalf of homeless wanderers in New York, wipe her eyes upon an expensive embroidered handkerchief at the story of their sufferings, and, when the contribution box came around, take from a well filled portemonie, of costly workmanship, twenty-five cents, to aid the society formed to promote their welfare. Ah! thought I, dollars for ribbons, and pennies for Christ.

SHALL WE YIELD?

The following letter speaks for itself. It is in reply to one asking for counsel in regard to compromising conscientious scruples against pic-nic religion, for the sake of peace in the church. I give it to the readers of "our paper," that others may gain courage and help to faithfulness thereby. A. P. M.

LETTER TO BRO. A. P. MOORE, ON FIGHTING THE FIGHT OF FAITH.

Yield? brother, yield? what for? Rather die the death; suffer crucifixion! "Stand for Jesus," even if the heavens fall, and the sun refuses to shine. Resist unto blood? Have we? Didn't the holy prophets? Didn't Christ? Are we better than the Master? Is the servant above his Lord? "Go forward," beloved! "Stand, and having done all, to STAND." See Ephesians 6th; begin at verse 10. "Go forward," "go forward," "cry aloud, spare not," cease not. Give the devil an inch, he will take an ell. Stand for Jesus, and he will stand by you. All alone in the battle field? No, you are n't, brother. The Lord is on your side. Who else? If we have God, what more? All heaven.

Counsel? give counsel? Certainly. "Go forward"? Yield to the time-serving, the man-fearing, the pleasure-seeking,—those carrying religion in one hand, and the world, the flesh and the devil in the other? When? what for? What! give up the ship? sacrifice a crown of glory? No, you won't, brother. You've too much wisdom for that; too much grace. "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth." "Go forward," brother; put on the whole armor of God; burnish it; let it be bright, shining, glistening. Fight the good fight. It's glorious. Angels look on with complacency, and God himself. Does the battle wax hot, and still hotter? Praise the Lord; "go forward." Hope is yours; salvation, glory, eternal. "Go forward."

Counsel—what better can I give? what better wish? Look at Hebrews, chapter 11. Go over it and over it; then chapter 12th; then the 10th of Matthew. Cast your eye on Daniel in the lion's den, the three men in the fiery furnace, heated seven times. In a word, take Jesus, the Lamb slain. See him in the manger. "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests"; but how with the Son of man? he "hath not where to lay his head." Look and see; then on the cross cast your eye. Hear the blessed Lord crying, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" No stimulus here to "go forward"? Is there not? What! look for a crown that fadeth not, eternal in the heavens, and no fighting for it? "No cross, no crown."

"Take up thy cross, the Savior said,
If thou would'st my disciple be;
Deny thyself, the world forsake,
And humbly follow after me."

Sometimes the cross is great, almost insupportable, like the cutting off a right hand, the plucking out a right eye. But thanks to the Father, the Son, the Holy Spirit, for grace equal to the day. "My grace is sufficient for you." "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man." 1 Cor. 10: 13. "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation."

The cross will be lighter and lighter as we follow on to know the Lord, the path of duty clearer and brighter. Sometimes little crosses are great crosses, and great crosses are little crosses. Satan often magnifies molehills into mountains. But no matter how little or how great the cross may appear, to enjoy peace of mind, hope eternal, it must be taken up forthwith.

"Take up thy cross; let not its weight
Fill thy weak spirit with alarm;
His strength shall bear thy spirit up,
And brace thy heart and nerve thine arm."

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Matt. 16: 22. Our blessed Lord and Master, holy, harmless, undefiled as he was, bore the cross. "O that this cup might pass from me. Nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt." "The disciple is not above his master. It is enough that the disciple be as his master."

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No; there's a cross for every one,
And there's a cross for me.
The consecrated cross I'll bear,
Till Heaven shall set me free,
And then go home, my crown to wear,
For there's a crown for me."
"Jesus, I my cross have taken,
All to leave and follow thee."

Paul says, "I am crucified with Christ." Those who tell us the offence of the cross, or persecution, has ceased,—that the great battle for truth and righteousness is fought, and that henceforth the church is to move on smoothly and prosperously, "on flowery beds of ease," are not the ones to stand at the cannon's mouth, place themselves in the battle's front, beard the lion in his den, wage open warfare with the combined powers of earth and hell. Satan is not very likely to trouble those that shun the cross, are at ease in Zion, oppose agitation, cry "peace, peace, when there is no peace," bow the knee to a time-serving age, loving the the praise of men more than the praise of God. "I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword."

"What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?"

D. F. NEWTON.

SUPPOSITION.

Only suppose the Bible to be false—extinguish all the light it sheds on the human race, make void all its promises, annul all its hopes, eradicate from the human breast all the motives which it imparts, and what remains to explain the universe, to develop the moral character of God, to dissipate the gloom which envelops in eternal night the destiny of man, to solace and cheer him during the incessant struggles of life, to soothe the bed of affliction and death, to countervail that inward dread and horror of falling into nothing, of being forever lost in the promiscuous wreck of nature, of sinking down into the grave, the prey of an eternal death? It would be like annihilating the sun in the heavens. An eternal night would ensue. There would be no beauty, form, nor comeliness in creation.

The world without the Bible is a universe without the sun. The atheist is but an atom of matter in motion, belonging to no system, amenable to none, without a destiny, without an object to live or to die. He boasts there is none to punish him; but then there is none to help him—none to reward him. He has no Father, no proprietor, or ruler—no filial affection, no sense of obligation, no gratitude, no comfort in reflection, no joy in anticipation. What an abortion is the system of nature if man lives not again? It is a creation for the purpose of destruction. It is an infinite series of designs, ending in nothing. It is a universe of blanks without a single prize. It cannot be. The Bible is necessary to the interpretation of nature. It is the only comment on nature—on providence—on man. Man without it, and without the hope of immortality, has nothing to rouse him into action. We are compelled then to admit that the Bible is true, unless we put out the eye of reason, and refuse to hear the voice of nature.—Selected.

THE INWARD CHRIST.

The outward word is good and true,
But inward power alone makes new;
Not even Christ can cleanse from sin,
Unless he comes and works within.

Christ in the heart! If absent there,
Thou canst not find him anywhere;
Christ in the heart! O friends, begin,
And build the throne of Christ within.

And know from this that he is thine,
And that thy life is made divine,
When holy love shall have control,
And rule supremely in thy soul.

A FEW WORDS.

M. COBURN.

After a prayerful investigation in relation to the time in which we are living, and the things that are to take place between this and the coming of the Son of God, I am pretty well satisfied that the sign of the Son of man is the next event to take place. If that is the case, it is a matter of fact that we are in the watching time, as Jesus tells us to watch because we know not the day or hour when he shall come. So we are to watch, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping.

May the Lord help us to draw very near to him. May we all have on the wedding garment. O get ready. Make no delay. It is better to be a little too soon than to be everlastingly too late. It is a blessed thing to be all ready having salvation in the present tense. The way to get it is to do all you know you ought to do, calling upon God with all your heart, and continue to do so until you feel the assurance that you are his, that he owns you for his child. Guess-work don't amount to much. Remember the promise is, if we seek we shall find. Give all for Christ. I am trying to do this myself. "Remember Lot's wife," but not to do as she did.

The time of Christ's first coming was given by angels, and I think the second will be likewise. I think the sign of the Son of man, and the midnight cry, and the coming of Christ will be close together. I think the word of God assures us, that when the midnight cry is given, and the sign of the Son of man, it will be too late to get ready. O then, let us be ready before that time. Pray for me.

A TRUE PICTURE.

About a year ago, one of the Chicago papers drew the following graphic picture of matters and things in the United States. Time advances and its truthfulness is made to appear with greater force as reform is becoming impossible, and things are growing worse and worse:

"There is no necessity for entering upon an argument to show the necessity for a general and most radical purification of public morals. The minds of the thinking men of the country are filled with consternation at the evidence of wide-spread debasement of conscience; the moral sense of the people of the whole land is horified at the oft-recurring disclosures of a general degradation of virtue, and the unhappy ghost of our national pride is robed in the garments of shame and mortification at the terrible disgrace we have encountered upon the scene of a world's gala day.

A general spirit of corruption pervades life in all its forms, commercial, domestic, political, and religious. The operation of business corporations, the delicate conditions of social existence, the management of parties, and the schemes of churches, are all affected with the poison, which is rapidly enervating all that is good in human nature. The country is in imminent peril. Never before in history was a nation's downfall so clearly apparent, or its approaching ruin so manifestly susceptible of scientific demonstration."—Bible Investigator.

SIGNIFICANT NAMES.—Did you ever consider the significance of the names of places connected with the earthly career of Jesus Christ? He was born at Bethlehem, the house of bread. He is the living bread for our souls. He was brought up at Nazareth, the place of shrubs or sprouts. He is a tender shoot out of the stem of Jesse. He agonized at Gethsemane, the oil press. "He trod the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with him.—Dr. John Hall.

Gems.

— It is a grand thing to feel that Christ's fidelity is pledged to his saints. He will keep them: asleep or awake they are his.

— Early safety in Christ is the only way to be prepared for trials. Everything comes right to the obedient believer in Jesus.

— The recognition of God in all our ways, and the expression of gratitude for his promises, are at once our duty and privilege.

— Charity, or love, is the most Godlike grace that can adorn the character of a human being. "God is love."

— He is the wisest and happiest man, who, by constant attention, discovers the greatest opportunity of doing good, and with ardent resolution, breaks through every opposition, that he may improve these opportunities.

— A man is known by the company he keeps. So the thoughts which we harbor within us, and which go out through the doors of our mouths and our hands, determine our real character.

— A profession of faith should be the result of the possession of grace. Let the heart be Christ's, and the lips will show forth his praise.

— No man is so foolish but he may give another good counsel sometimes, and no man so wise but he may easily err, if he takes no other counsel than his own.

— We have need of patience because we are under discipline. We are already saved, if believers, but we only get the earnest of the inheritance here.

— The Lord's power over Satan and all his legions reminds us that, if we are his followers, he will bruise the enemy under our feet shortly.

— One of the clearest proofs of the divinity of the gospel is found in the benevolence which it creates in the heart. The Christ-like man delights in doing good as well as in being holy.

THERE are forty-two catacombs in and around Rome, with galleries 587 miles long, and it is estimated that from four to seven millions of bodies have found sepulture therein.

A WIFE OVERJOYED.

A man at whose house I was a guest, says Gough in his Autobiography, told me he had been a hard drinker and cruel husband; had beaten his poor wife till she had almost become used to it.

"But, said he, "the very moment I signed the pledge, I thought of my wife—what will my wife say to this? Strange that I should think of my wife the first thing; but I did, and as I was going home I said to myself, 'Now, if I go home and tell her all of a sudden that I have signed the pledge, she'll faint away, or she'll up and do something; and I must break it to her by degrees.' Only think of it. Why, the night before I'd have knocked her down, just as like as not, if she hadn't looked to please me; and now I was planning to break good news to her, for fear it would upset her."

As near as I could gather from what he told me, he found his wife sitting over the embers, waiting for him. As he came into the house, he said:

"Nancy, I think that—"

"Well, Ned, what is it?"

Why, I think I shall—that is—I mean to—to—Nancy, I mean—"

"What's the matter' Ned? Anything the matter?"

"Yes," said he; "the matter is just this: I have signed the temperance pledge, and, so help me God, I'll keep it."

"She started to her feet, and she did faint away. I was just in time to catch her; and as she lay in my arms, her eyes shut and her face so pale, thinks I, she's dead, and I've done it now. But she was not dead; she opened her eyes, and then she put her arms around my neck; and I didn't know she was so strong, as she pulled, and pulled, till she got me down where I had not been before for thirty years—on my knees. Then she said:

"'O God help him;' and I said 'Amen!' and she said, 'O God! help my poor Ned, and strengthen him to keep his pledge;' and I hollered 'Amen!' just as loud as I could holler. And she kept praying and I kept hollering. You never heard a Methodist in the biggest revival you ever saw holler as loud as I did. I had like to split my throat, I hollered 'Amen' so loud. That was the first time we ever knelt together; but it was not the last."

THE GREAT WANT.—In view of the corruption that exists in the political world today, the words of Dr. Holland, which we insert here, speak volumes of the great want of the day:

God give us men! a time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue,
And spurn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty, and in private thinking;
For while the rabble with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps.

THE NEIGHBOR'S FIELD.—I was walking with a farmer through a beautiful field, when he chanced to see a tall thistle on the other side of the fence. In an instant he sprung over the fence and cut the thistle off close to the ground.

"Is that your field?"

"Oh, no," said the farmer; "but bad weeds don't care much for fences, and if I should leave that thistle to blossom in my neighbor's field I should soon have plenty in my own."

I wish all fathers and mothers would think of that. The evil weeds in your neighbor's field will scatter seeds in your own.

HOME AND HEALTH.

TRUTHFULNESS.

Two country lads came at an early hour to a market town, and, arranging their little stands, sat down to wait for customers. One was furnished with fruits and vegetables of the boy's own raising, and the other was supplied with clams and fish. The market hours passed along, and each little merchant saw with pleasure his store steadily decreasing, and an equivalent in silver bits shining in his little money cup. The last melon lay on Harry's stand, when a gentleman came by, hand, placing his and upon it, said, "What a fine, large melon! What do you ask for it, my boy?"

"The melon is the last I have, sir; and though it looks very fair, there is an unsound spot in it," said the boy, turning it over.

"So there is," said the man; "I think I will not take it. But," he added, looking into the boy's fine, open countenance, "is it very business-like to point out the defects of your fruit to customers?"

"It is better than being dishonest, sir," said the boy modestly.

"You are right, little fellow; always remember that principle, and you will find favor with God, and man also; I shall remember your little stand in the future. Are those clams fresh?" he continued, turning to Ben Wilson's stand.

"Yes, sir; fresh this morning; I caught them myself," was the reply, and, the purchase being made, the gentleman went away.

"Harry, what a fool you were to show the gentleman that spot in the melon! Now you can take it home for your pains, or throw it away. How much wiser is he about those clams you caught yesterday! Sold them for the same price as I did the fresh ones. He would never have looked at the melon until he had gone away."

"Ben, I would not tell a lie, or act one either, for twice what I have earned this morning. Besides, I shall be better off in the end, for I have gained a customer and you have lost one."

And so it proved, for the next day the gentleman bought nearly all his fruit and vegetables of Harry, but never spent another penny at the stand of his neighbor. Thus the season passed; the gentleman, finding he could always get a good article of Harry, constantly patronized him, and sometimes talked with him a few minutes about his future prospects. To become a merchant was Harry's great ambition; and, when the winter came on, the gentleman, wanting a trusty boy for his warehouse, decided on giving the place to Harry. Steadily and surely he advanced in the confidence of his employer, until, having passed through the various posts of service, he became at length an honored partner in the firm.—Chatterbox.

WHY EVERYBODY IS CROSS.

One day little John came running into the house, where his sister Mary was sewing. He held something in his hand which he had found out of doors.

"O! sister Mary," said he, "I have found a pretty thing. It is a piece of red glass; and when I looked through it everything looked red too. The trees, the houses, your face, and everything is red."

Mary replied, "Yes, it is very beautiful. And let me show you how to learn a useful lesson from it. You remember the other day you thought everybody was cross with you. Now, you were like this piece of glss, which makes everything red, because it is red. You were cross; so you thought everybody around you was cross too. If you are in a good humor and kind to every one, all will seem kind to you. The color of the world around us depends much upon the medium through which we view it; and the same world looks very different when lighted with the bright sunshine, from what it does when seen in the darkness or gloom."—Exchange.

A FLOWER LESSON.

Katy meant to be a good girl, but she had one "besetting sin," impatience. Her father, who often prayed that God would help her to overcome this fault, one day brought home a fine carnation pink in a pot.

"You shall have this beautiful plant, my Katy," said her father. "I have bought it for you because you have been so very pleasant all the week."

Katy was so pleased with her present, and the reason which her father gave for giving it to her, that a great many words and several kisses were needed to express her thanks, and she promised to attend to all the wants of her pink very carefully. True to her word, she watered it every day, and let the sun in at the window to warm the mould around its roots.

One morning, as she stood examining and enjoying her pet, she suddenly discovered a bud. Full of joy, she quickly called her father to look at it, exclaiming, "Now my pink will soon blossom! oh, how glad I shall be! how sweet it will smell! Will it be a scarlet one?"

"You must wait a week yet, my child," said her father. "By that time the bud will unfold itself, so that you can see its color. Don't touch it now. Be patient."

Three days went by, and Katy contented herself with watching over and wondering about the gradually swelling bud. On the fourth day she said to herself, "How very long before it opens." The fifth day she found the bud had grown a great deal during the night, and was so eager to see its color that she got the scissors and cut the light green calyx that was closed so tight, to make it open quicker.

On the morning of the sixth day—oh, sad to see!—the little wounded thing hung down its head. Katy wept bitterly over her disappointment. "Oh, if I had not been impatient," she exclaimed, "my pretty bud would be a flower to-day!" She repented of her fault, and the remembrance of the withered bud helped her greatly to become quite a patient girl by the time another bud appeared. Then how the father and the child enjoyed the patience and the pink.—Christian Weekly.

CARE OF TEETH.—The teeth are covered with a thin, hard enamel like glass, and anything which cracks this enamel, will cause the teeth to decay. Excessively hot or cold drinks will do this. Any housekeeper knows better than to pour hot water into a glass dish. Remember that your teeth are your glass ware, and use them carefully. Powerful acids will also destroy the enamel on the teeth. Most of the patent tooth powders and washes contain acids; and although they give the teeth a pearly appearance, they quickly eat through the enamel and destroy the teeth.

The teeth are designed to last as long as any part of the body, and it is only the neglect and abuse they receive which cause them to decay thus early. After each meal, the teeth should be thoroughly cleansed, and every particle of food removed from between them. Never use pins, needles, or jack-knives for tooth-picks; but some substance which is softer than the enamel of the teeth, like wood, goose-quill, ivory or gold. For cleansing the teeth, nothing is better than a good tooth-brush and warm water. The frequent use of the tooth-brush hardens the gums and keeps them healthy; and usually this is all the care necessary to keep the teeth clean and bright.—Selected.

SUNSTROKES.—The season is now near at hand when divers people will be volunteering information as to how sunstrokes may be avoided. Some of the ideas expressed are quite amusing, if not useful, as witness the following: About a year since I saw in a newspaper an account of a case of sunstroke, written by the party himself. After suffering a long time, and having to a considerable degree recovered, he experienced suffering even from the rays of the moon. This led him to the reflection that it was not altogether the heat of the sun that produced prostration. After much research he discovered that the injury came from the chemical ray, and not from the heat ray. He was guided to this by the fact that a photograph could not be taken through a hollow glass. Accordingly, he lined his hat with two linings,—one of orange yellow to arrest the chemical ray, and one of yellow to arrest the heat ray. Thus prepared, he went where the rays of the sun were most intense, with impunity.

ON SLEEPING.—Every man must sleep according to his temperament. But eight hours is the average. If one requires a little more, or a little less, he will find it out for himself. Whoever diminishes his sleep, is destroying his life. A man may hold out for a time. But nature keeps close accounts, and no man can dodge her settlements. We have seen impoverished railroads that could not keep the track in order, nor spare the engines to be thoroughly repaired. Every year track and equipment deteriorated. By-and-by comes a crash, and the road is in a heap of confusion and destruction. So it is with men. They cannot spare time to sleep enough. They slowly run behind. Symptoms of general waste appear. Premature wrinkles, weak eyes, depression of spirits, failure of digestion, feebleness in the morning, and overwhelming melancholy—these and other signs show a general dilapidation. If, now, sudden calamity causes an extraordinary pressure, they go down under it. They have no resources to draw upon. They have been living up to the verge of their whole vitality every day,—Health Reformer.

THE RESURRECTION BODY.

H. BRITTAIN.

II.—Its Aspect.
(Concluded.)

"The following is one such passage:—'Moreover the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be seven-fold,* as the light of seven days, in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people, and healeth the stroke of their wound.' Isa. 30: 26. Again, the question recurs, On what principle are these words to be interpreted? I confess, I see no other alternative than to take them literally. It is customary, we know, to regard the whole as 'an emblematical prediction of spiritual blessings'; and numbers are satisfied with the use of such an expression, without considering how far it really meets the case, and without attending to the grave and formidable objections which are ready to present themselves against such a mode of treating the passage. What, for instance, are we to understand by the 'moon,' and what by the 'sun'? Of what are they symbols? It is absolutely necessary, if they be regarded as symbols, to give a distinct and separate meaning to each, or the passage is made ridiculous; yet none of our figurative interpreters, that I am acquainted with, attempt this; but content themselves in this, as in other similar cases, with culling one general idea from the verse, leaving its particular expressions unattended to, as if it were quite unnecessary to suppose that they were designed to have any specific meaning. But anything more derogatory to the word of God cannot be conceived than such a course. No more fatal blow could be directed against its divine authority and plenary inspiration. It is, indeed, customary among those who favor the figurative principle of prophetic interpretation to regard the sun as an emblem of the church, or the ecclesiastical power in a State, and the moon of the civil power; but even supposing this to be correct, as a rule (which I altogether doubt), or to hold true in some cases (which I also question), yet it can scarcely be made to apply here, for on this supposition, or theory, what is that 'light' enjoyed at present by the civil power, symbolized by the moon, which is hereafter to be increased until it reaches the amount at present enjoyed by the church?† I feel that nothing approaching to a satisfactory answer can be given to this question; and I confess, I cannot but regard such a mode of treating the subject as highly objectionable. I hold, therefore, that we are compelled to take this passage literally. And why should we not do so? What is there involved in such a conclusion that should make us hesitate in adopting it? It is clear that, as in a multitude of other cases, so in this we are deterred from taking the obviously right course through imaginary difficulties conjured up by our present limited experience, and consequently contracted views. I confess, that it seems to be our obvious duty in the present case to take the prediction in a literal sense. Let this be done, and there is no difficulty in understanding it. It plainly declares that the amount of physical light hereafter will be vastly increased beyond what prevails at present; and this, it will be seen, is in perfect harmony with that expression of St. Paul, before noticed, 'the inheritance of the saints in light.' The two passages, when thus viewed, alike point to one and the same thing,—to one and the same physical condition of the world, in reference to the element of light.

"A fresh source of light.

"We now approach a subject which, to my own mind at least, is one of the most wonderful and extraordinary of any that form the subject of prophecy in the word of God. It is, therefore, all the more necessary to approach it with care and caution, and to see that we do not allow our preconceived views to disturb our judgments, or deter us from embracing a truth which would seem to be clearly taught us in the word of God. It is when dealing with such subjects as are either new to us, or which exceed our present conception, that we need more particularly to keep rigidly to the evidence that should guide us, and be prepared to follow it wherever it would seem to lead us. What at first may seem so extraordinary as to appear incredible, may soon lose that character, or completely change its aspect. It would be folly in us to ask with Nicodemus, 'How can these things be?' It is sufficient for us that God has revealed them, and he will in his own time and way accomplish his word.

It is not my intention, however, to enter at any great length into the discussion of the subject before us, but rather to content myself with briefly introducing it, and arranging, to some slight extent, the scriptural proofs which bear upon it.

We have seen that there is reason to believe that the light emitted by the sun and moon will hereafter be greatly increased; there is, I conceive, also reason to believe that there will be a fresh source of light, and that it will exceed in power that of the sun and moon, even in their altered condition. This is intimated, though only indirectly, in the following words:—'Then the moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.' Isa. 26: 23. Now we learn from other parts of Scripture how and why it is that this will be the case; but here, it will be observed, the reason is not assigned, and the very fact that it should not be so is a circumstance to be carefully noticed. A great result is obscurely or indirectly alluded to, but its exact nature is not disclosed; and had we nothing more than this upon the subject, there would be great room to doubt as to what was precisely meant. But we turn to other passages, which yet would seem to have no direct connection with this, and, as will be immediately seen, we find there the key to the difficulty, the veram causam (true cause) of the predicted result. All this is calculated, I conceive, to show us the importance and magnitude of the subject which is thus slowly and gradually revealed, but which may be seen, from the glimpses afforded us, to be occupying the entire space behind the veil which now conceals its glory.

"The reason why the 'moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion,' is plainly and directly given in the following words by the same prophet—'The sun shall be no more thy light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.' Isa. 16: 19, 20. From this, therefore, we see that so transcendent will be the visible glory that will surround the person and throne of Emmanuel, that the brightness of both the sun and moon, though greatly increased from what they are at present, shall yet be eclipsed by it. Centuries elapsed from the days of Isaiah before the book of Revelation was produced; but we turn to it and to its closing pages, which are occupied in bringing the glories of the New Jerusalem before us, and we find the same great fact revealed to us there also, though with that variety which marks all the disclosures of prophecy, what is now said being simply that the sun and the moon are 'not needed': 'And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." Rev. 21: 23. So again (22: 5)—"And they need no candle, neither the light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign for ever and ever.'*

"Now there are two observations that I will make on this subject before leaving it.

1. "In the first place, it must be remarked that a light, exceeding that of the present sun (or of the sun in its present state) has been already witnessed; and further, that it was caused by that very Presence, that, namely, of the Son of God, the glory of which will, we are told, hereafter obscure by comparison even the brightness of the sun. In St. Paul's account of his conversion before Agrippa, we find him saying—'At mid-day, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me, and them that journeyed with me.' Acts 26: 13. The slightest word of Scripture is important, and is designed by the Holy Spirit to be so. A single word† in the present instance gives us all we need. It supplies us with a fact that bears upon the entire subject, which has been occupying our attention, and the passage in which it occurs decides the question for us. We learn from it, that the presence of the Savior is even now accompanied with a visible glory that transcends in splendor the greatest degree of brightness with which we are acquainted; and we can therefore readily conceive how, when he comes again in the full blaze and power of his glory, and sits in majesty on 'the throne of his glory,' how, then, even the seven-fold light of the renewed sun shall be 'confounded and ashamed.'

2. "In the next place, it must be remarked that, wonderful as this may now appear to us, it is yet not more than may well be expected. For let us remember whose glory it is that will be so transcendent. It will be that of Him who, as a reward for his humiliation and sufferings while upon earth, is now placed at the right hand of glory in heaven. Can any honor which will be bestowed on him hereafter exceed that which he now enjoys, seated as he is on 'the Father's throne,' the throne of the universe, 'far above all principalities, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come.' Eph. 1: 21. On the contrary, we ought assuredly to expect that, when he leaves his present exalted state, he will take to one that in some way will correspond to it in honor and glory. For this purpose, we can understand why, with regard to the earth and all associated with it, it should be said by 'Him who sitteth upon the throne, Behold, I make all things new.' We should not marvel, if not only this earth, but the system of which it forms a part, should be greatly raised, or advanced in their condition, relatively to the other orbs of heaven; if, e. g., the sun, the great centre* of the system, should be made to shine far brighter than before, in order to distinguish it among the myriads of its kind; nor if even the brightness of the great centre of the system should be eclipsed by that globe on which the Son of God will have accomplished the mission on which he was sent forth of his Father. When we remember what will have taken place on, and in connection with this earth; when it is borne in mind that here the everlasting Son of God wrougnt out by his expiatory sufferings and active obedience the great work of man's redemption; that here, consequently, will be the locality of his throne forever, that he may reign where before he was rejected and despised; should we wonder if, among the orbs of heaven, this one, in reference to which all this will be true, should shine transcendent far above all? 'He shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied.'"

* The light then received by the earth from the sun will be very nearly that which is now received by the planet mercury. His light is about seven times greater than that of the earth."—Hesdel's Astronomy, p. 277."

† The same, or a similar question, might be asked as to the meaning, or the same theory, of Isa. 60; 19, 20, and Jer. 31: 35.

* "Without pretending to determine the exact meaning of the following passage, with their contexts, or the time to which they primarily relate, we may yet see in them additional proofs or examples of the truth which has now been advanced; namely, that the divine presence is accompanied by a visible glory, or brightness." Ezek. 43: 1 and 2, and 10: 20. "We cannot, I conceive, but see in the language used in these verses a conclusive proof that the shekinah in the temple of Solomon was an emblem of the glory which will illumine the city of God hereafter."

* Note by H. Brittain. Query, Is it the centre?

[Note by H. Brittain. I bespeak the candid consideration of the readers of the World's Crisis on this glorious subject of the resurrected condition of man in relation to Christ. Let us cast aside any preconceived ideas of our own, and accept the truth in him. 'Every word of God is pure'; therefore let us boldly use his word, and become sanctified by his word of truth. Let us strive against the light becoming darkness within us, and so let our light shine before men, that they, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father in the heavens; for he is light, and in him is no darkness at all. What remains in us, or clings to us of the darkness of this world, let us strive to cast off more and more, and so enter more fully into the enjoyment of his marvelous light. We have entered into the excellency of the glory of the Spirit of God, having received the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts, we, who trust in him; and, when the fulness of the redemption has come, the earnest will be fulness; that which is known now only in part will be done away, because the perfect has come—the perfection of man in Christ, shining in the glory of the Head or Ruler of all.]

GONE!

Words by Mrs. AGNES HASKELL. Music by GEORGE E. LEE.

2 Gone! and the seasons still to come and go,
Wreathing her grave in blossom and snow?
Snow on the bosom that sheltered us so,—
Cruel and pitiless snow!

3 Home is not home, for mother is not there!
Dark is her room,—empty is her chair;
Now will she rest from her labor and care,
Till that morning so fair.

4 Oft the dear eyes grew dim from sad tears,
Guiding our untried feet through the years;
Planning our future with hopes and with fears—
Drying our falling tears.

5 Sleep, mother, sleep, with your hands on your breast!
Poor, weary hands! they needed their rest:
Well have we loved you, but God loved you best!
'Tis thy God giveth rest.

IMMORTALITY.

This is the natural desire of the human heart. Some may imagine themselves immortal, but it is only imagination. I know the preachers and Spiritualistic lecturers say "there is no such thing as death," and sing loudly of "a never dying soul to save, and fit it for the sky." But this is not the way the sweet singer of Israel expressed himself upon this subject. Hear him: 'Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath (Heb., Ruah), goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 3, 4. Job. 4: 17, asks the question, "Shall mortal man be more just than God?"

This shows that all there is of man—soul, body, and spirit,—is mortal. The word immortal means "exempt from death" (Webster), and is found but once in the Bible (1 Tim. 1: 17), and is applied to the "King eternal," "the only wise God."

The word immortality occurs just five times in the Bible, and is used by only one sacred writer—a celebrated resurrection preacher called Paul.

I propose now to quote every passage where the word is found, and see if we can get any information upon this very important subject.

Rom. 2: 6, 7: "Who (God) will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality,—eternal life."

Thus we see that those at Rome who were "called saints," were exhorted by Paul to "seek for" immortality "by patient continuance in well doing." Do men seek for that which they already possess? Certainly not. If the church of God at Rome had at that time been in possession of an endless life, the meaning of the apostle is not so very clear and explicit, notwithstanding his learning and his justly merited reputation of being the best logical writer and reasoner known to sacred literature.

1 Cor. 15: 53: "This mortal must put on immortality." The apostle is here speaking of the resurrection. That is the time when those who "seek for" it will gain immortality. Then they "put on" immortality just as a man puts on his coat when he gets up in the morning. In the morning of the resurrection, "when . . . this mortal shall have put on immortality (says Paul in the next verse), then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written [in Isa. 25: 8], Death is swallowed up in victory."

There is no victory at all if man is naturally immortal. If there is no death, then it can't be swallowed up. We all know that death is the common enemy of mankind, and has gained the victory over the sons and daughters of Adam for nearly six thousand years, and until the very earth has become one vast charnel house. It needs no revelation to teach us this, but it was impossible for writers to speak of the "great salvation" without speaking of the death from which those who seek for immortality shall be saved and be permitted to sing—

"O death, where is thy sting?
O grave (hell), where is thy victory?"

In 1 Tim. 6: 16, the apostle in writing of God declares, that "he only hath immortality," and then again in 2 Tim. 1: 10, he says, "Our Savior, Jesus Christ, hath brought immortality to light through the gospel." Thus we see that the only way for mortal man to obtain immortality, is "through the gospel,"—the only conditions of which are faith and obedience.—Bible Investigator.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Launch out into the deep." Luke 5: 4.

Deeper water. We have been fishing too near the shore. It is no wonder that we have toiled long and caught nothing. There are plenty of fish out a little further. Launch out, and drop the net. The disciples anciently had fished all night, but had been unsuccessful. Their nets had gathered nothing. They had been dragging them about in shallow water. Jesus told them to launch out into the deep, and let down their nets. At his command they did so, and behold, they had more fish than they knew what to do with. They called to their brothers to help them for fear their nets would break.

This lesson is instructive. There are many disciples to-day who have toiled long in the Master's vineyard, and are almost discouraged because they have caught nothing. They have good desires, and do many good things, yet they do not succeed in winning souls to Christ. What is the trouble? They need to launch out into a deeper christian experience. Their religion is too much on the surface. It does not go deep enough. In these days, it does not require much change in a worldly person to become a member of a church. The standard of nominal Christianity is so low, that it is difficult to distinguish between those who profess religion and those who make no profession. If an individual sheds a few tears, rises for prayers, he is hurried into the church, his name enrolled, and he considered all right for another world; when perhaps the fact in the case is, he has not been converted at all.

In ancient times, men were convicted of sin. They were made to feel their lost condition. The deeper and bitter sorrows of repentance pierced their hearts. They were made to feel their lost condition. The deep and bitter sorrows of repentance pierced their hearts. They were made to see that they had sinned against a holy God, and were guilty of death. They were shown the necessity of renouncing their own will, and of submitting unreservedly to the will of God. They saw that there was a wide distinction between those who served the Lord, and those who served him not. They repented, they came out from the world, they put on the whole armor of God, and the change in them was marked and visible. They had a deep, thorough christian experience. They knew the gospel as the power of God to their own salvation.

Now, just what vast multitudes of professors need to-day is a deep, thorough, heart-searching, renovating, sin-cleansing gospel. They need to repent, to turn to God, to cut loose from the world, to consecrate all to Christ, to launch out in faith, love, and obedience; trusting in God, and praying for the Holy Ghost to come down in mighty power. This done, and sinners would come in multitudes with penitent hearts, bowing at the feet of Jesus.

Again, might not this subject suggest the thought, that some ministers would do well to change their fishing ground. They have fished too long in one place. They ought to have launched out into a new field long ago. They have run in the old ruts, and preached to the same congregations for years. No great results have followed their labors. This should not be so. No minister should tarry long in a place where he is not successful, If you cannot catch fish in one locality, flee to another. Launch out into the deep. Go into the "regions beyond." Trust in "the living God," and go where men have not been preached to death. Let down the gospel net in faith and prayer. Be humble, and willing to obey the Master in all things. Go into school-houses, private houses, in groves, in tents, anywhere and everywhere. Drop the net on the right side, and you will be astonished at the result. Up and away. Do something. "Launch out into the deep."

"ENTER INTO THY CLOSET."

R. MORRILL.

Some suppose that the command of our Savior, "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet," allows no other than secret prayer. Hence they tell us that when we pray in public, we violate an express command of Christ. But let us examine this text closely, with its connection. The whole verse reads: "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Matt. 6: 6.

We notice that in this text Jesus speaks in the singular number. "Thou," "when thou prayest," "thy closet," "thy door," "thy Father," "reward thee." Hence it appears that he is giving directions in regard to individual prayer for personal blessings. Now, I will suppose that Jesus is addressing me personally; and he is truly. Then I understand that he is giving me directions in praying for myself, for the supply of my own individual wants; and, in harmony with the promise, "Thy Father . . . shall reward thee." When I pray in secret according to these directions, I look for a personal reward. Let every christian apply this to himself individually, and all will be plain.

Our Savior does not, however, forbid us to pray and weep in secret places for our fellow men; and we believe it is our duty to do so, as the Spirit of God shall lead us; but this is not the kind of prayer he is speaking of. He is speaking of our making individual requests to God in prayer for ourself alone. We learn also from this text that we should not speak of our personal wants in social or public prayer. Let us, then, before going to the prayer-meeting, visit our closets, and there unbosom our feelings to God alone, and there receive a fulness of the Holy Spirit; then we shall be prepared to unite with our dear brethren and sisters in humble prayer to God for each other, for the perishing around us, and for every object for which we meet to pray.

We find nothing, then, in this text against social prayer, but in the next verse, and onward, we find directions in regard to social prayer. We find the language now changed from the singular to the plural form; and the same plural form is continued to the end of the subject, which includes the Lord's prayer. Verse 7 begins thus: "But when ye pray." This means social prayer. Then in ver. 9, we read: "After this manner pray ye: Our Father," not my Father." Then ver. 11: "Give us this day our daily bread," not give me. Verse 12—"And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors," not forgive me. Ver. 13: "And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us," etc. This must mean social prayer; for there is more than one in us.

The Savior also instructs us in regard to social prayer in the following language: "Again I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Matt. 18: 19, 20. Here two or three are mentioned, which is the smallest number that can] meet for prayer; but we understand that the same would be true of twenty or thirty, more or less; for if God will answer the united prayer of two or three, will he not much more that of a large assembly of humble christians?

East Concord, N. H.

Doubting is the most wearying work in which the mind engages. It wears out mental power to get into doubt. Reason, unfixed and restless, jogging along from from one uncertain premise to another, leads into torment interminable. Let the mind once determine on the truth and rest upon a basis such as God has revealed, and thenceforward there is strength and growth in grace, and real joy and peace.

ERRORS OF CONSCIENCE.

C. H. SWEET.

That an error of conscience may mitigate and not yet wholly excuse the wrong act that it results in is, I think, plainly taught in the Scriptures. Jesus prays for those who crucified him—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." This implies that their conscience was misguided. "They knew not what they did." But still they were guilty, for they needed forgiveness,—"Father, forgive them." But their error, or ignorance, was some palliation of their guilt. It was not so great as it would have been if they had crucified Christ with an enlightened conscience. Hence their ignorance is pleaded as a reason why they should be forgiven. Paul says of himself, "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." Acts 26: 8. In carrying out this false conviction, he persecuted, imprisoned, and gave his voice to murder the saints. But though he acted according to an honest conviction of mind, still he was guilty before God. He calls himself a persecuter, a blasphemer, the chief of sinners, &c. His error, however, was a mitigation of his guilt, for he says, "I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly." 1 Tim. 1: 13. The Jews were called "murderers" because they crucified the Lord of life and glory, but the apostles bear them witness, "through ignorance ye did it" (Acts 3: 17); and for this reason he exhorts them to repent. The exhortation being grounded on a concession that they did it ignorantly, seems to imply that their hope of forgiveness was greater than it would have been if they had acted in opposition to knowledge then possessed by them.

The reason of the case is plain. To perform a wrong act, under the influence of an erroneous conviction, does not manifest the obstinacy and perverseness that it does when done against an enlightened and remonstrating conscience; but that this error, or misconstruction, should wholly excuse is unreasonable, because an error of judgment, in an important point of duty, plainly manifests some defect in the will, such as prejudice, neglilence, or failure to search and inquire.

The guilt in following, or rather in having an erroneous conscience, depends upon the cause. If the cause is obstinacy and perverseness in rejecting the means of information, it can scarcely abate the guilt at all, for a wilful rejection of known means of information is about the same thing as a refusal to perform duty after being enlightened. Total incapacity to obtain or apply the means, will doubtless wholly excuse.

They to whom Christ has not spoken cannot be said to have the sin of unbelief. For external disadvantages proportionable allowance will undoubtedly be made in the divine estimation of guilt. It is required of men according to what they have. Much or little will be required, as much or little has been given. The ignorance or error which results from negligence or prejudice, is blameable; but it is not as criminal as it would be if it sprung from direct obstinacy, for the first does not give evidence of as criminal a frame of mind as the last. This seems to be in harmony with the teaching of our Lord: "And that servant which knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; but he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required; and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more." Luke 12: 47, 48.

SANCTIFICATION—WHAT IS IT?

There is no doctrine more plainly taught in the Scriptures of truth than entire sanctification. It may be found on almost every page of the Bible; it is taught by the inspired writers, by promise, command, exhortation, and prayer, and consequently worthy of the attention and serious consideration of all. This state in grace does not imply absolute, angelic, or Adamic perfection. It is not an exemption from errors, mistakes, infirmities, or temptations. But it does imply an extermination of inbred sin from the soul, a destruction of the carnal mind; it is being dead to sin, and alive to God. In other words, it is a state of moral purity that makes us at all times acceptable with God. It is loving God with the whole heart, with an undivided heart. It is when the heart is emptied, and cleansed from all sin and defilement, and filled with the constellation of the graces of the Spirit, that entire sanctification is experienced. The condition thereof is consecration, obedience, and faith. Consecration is submission to the will and government of God. Saving faith is a hearty, bold, and confiding trust in the merits of Christ. It is implied trust, reliance, or confidence in the word of God and the merits of Christ for present salvation. Rest assured God always saves the moment true faith is exercised. It is not to be sought as a gradual, but as an instantaneous work. God can cleanse the soul from sin, and fill it with love in a moment, and he is always able and willing to impart this full and free salvation to all who ardently and sincerely deserve to have it, and will accept it on his terms. Such a state is more desirable than the wealth, honors, or pleasures of the world, —and should be the experience of all christians without delay.

The fifth stage of christian experience is to cultivate and mature the christian graces. It is after the heart is emptied, and cleansed from all sin and defilement, that we are called on and required to perfect holiness in the fear of God, by serving him with a single eye and an undivided heart. To grow in grace, and in the knowledge and love of God, is to cultivate, improve, and strengthen the christian graces. This may be done much more successfully in a sanctified, than in a justified relation to God. We are exhorted to add to our faith virtue, and to virtue all the graces of the Spirit; to be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might; that we may become mature christians, ripe in the knowledge of God, and in the great and glorious mysteries of salvation. Full and ample provision is made in the atonement for this experience, and the terms are so easy, plain, and simple, that all, through grace, may comply with the conditions, and obtain the pearl of great price.

The motives to holiness are almost innumerable, but a principal and leading motive is, God commands and requires it, and when God speaks, man should obey,—as none of his commands are imposed to restrain us in the pursuit of happiness, but are intended for our present good and future felicity. By obeying all good is secured; by disobeying all good is forfeited in time and in eternity. The glory of God, the salvation of souls, our personal happiness, usefulness, and safety are so many motives to urge us on to the possession of this heavenly treasure.

Sublime privilege! exalted state! The life of God in the soul of man, and the glory of God, as the object and end of that life, a principle implanted in the heart by the Spirit of God, that brings our tempers, words, thoughts, and actions in subjection to the will and government of God. St. Paul prays that such may be the experience of all christians in every age: "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." Eph. 3: 17, 18, 19.

To be filled with God is to be filled with light, for God is light. To be filled with him is to be filled with love, for God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. To be filled with God is to be filled with consolation, peace and joy.—Guide to Holiness.

OUR MISSION.

D. K. BARRETT, JR.

No man, woman, or child is in the world without a mission. They have something to do which God has given the means of doing, and for the performance of which, he will hold them strictly accountable. However much we may shrink from the responsibility, or however little we may be awake to the fact, it is nevertheless the truth. Don't be frightened at this, for it need not be a great burden of care; for we are told to cast all our care upon God, for he careth for us. He will so fit and help us to make our mission a glad one. Yet there is accountability on our part, and we must be watchful and earnest.

What is that mission? In a general sense, our mission is the same as was Christ's. He said to his disciples just before leaving them, "Peace be unto you; as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." John 17: 18, 20, 21. When Jesus commenced his public ministry, he read in the book of Isaiah the prophet: "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." Luke 4: 17–20.

Christ said to his disciples, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Luke 16: 15, 16. Jesus "went about doing good;" and we are told to "do go good unto all men as ye have opportunity." The command to us is, "Go work in my vineyard." The human family seems to be the vineyard in which Jesus worked, and sends us to work. Our mission is not merely to do men present good, but also to work for their eternal salvation; yea, this is the main part. Jesus did a work for the salvation of men no other could; for "no man can by any means redeem his brother." The work of others is to get men to accept an already purchased salvation. And it may be said to each one, "You have a work no other can do."

Let us remember each act of our life, however small, has an influence—good, or bad. For all there is some good to do. Do you want a field of labor? you can find it anywhere.

"Helping the weak with a temper meek,
Is a duty laid before us;
Avoid the wrong as we pass along,
For Jesus watches o'er us."

Let us try to fulfill our mission faithfully, be it in the family, or elsewhere, in a wide or limited sphere. Now is the time for work. "There remaineth a rest to the people of God." When we have finished our course, there is a crown laid up to be received at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Then also it shall be said, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom." Who will hear it?

Evaporation.—The great ocean is in a constant state of evaporation. It gives back what it receives, and sends its waters into mists to gather into clouds, and so there is rain on the fields, and storm on the mountains, and beauty everywhere. But there are men who do not believe in evaporation. They get all they can and keep all they get, and so are not fertilizers, but only miasmatic pools.

BRIGHT OMENS.

As the proclamation, thirty years ago, went everywhere, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," so now, we believe the final and full preparation for the "marriage of the Lamb" is rapidly progressing in the wonderful movement for the promotion of holiness. In conversation and correspondence with prominent men in different churches, who are leaders in the great meetings held for this object, we find they are being convinced that the church of Christ is truly getting ready to meet the coming Savior. Soon, we expect they will see the bright evidence of his speedy return, and rejoice with us in the "blessed hope."

The walls of prejudice against this subject are being rapidly removed from the minds of those who have consecrated all to Christ, and as they are being filled with the Holy Spirit, they are led to love the coming of Jesus; next, to see the signs of the times, and other prophetic evidence, and feel an anxious desire to hear, and read works on the subject. The omens are truly most heart-cheering, and never so bright and certain as now in favor of the speedy consummation of the christian's hope.

We look upon this general interest on the subject of holiness as a special preparation to meet our dear Lord, and it should receive the hearty support of all who wish to be ready. It is not something that can be treated even with indifference, without peril, and he who opposes it is but closing the only door that will ever open to let him enter the city of golden streets, in which are none but the pure and holy. As a people, looking for the speedy coming of Christ, we should stand in the front ranks of those who preach and practice holiness. Let us take our proper position at once, and let "HOLINESS TO THE LORD," with "THY KINGDOM COME," wave on every banner.

This holiness movement produces a wonderful union of hearts in christian love, like what we witnessed thirty years ago. Members of all evangelical denominations bebecome one in Christ Jesus. The union is not one of creeds, but of hearts full of love for God. We have no record that the like has been seen since the days of the apostles. It is the Lord's doings, and is marvelous in our eyes. It is no sham, policy union, but one of real lovers in Jesus. Their hearts are knit together, and the bonds are continually becoming stronger. It means something. It is the work of the Spirit of the Most High. The results are most gracious. This, we believe, is the final gathering of the hosts of the Lord, preparatory for the closing conflict.

ALTON BAY CAMPMEETING.

We arrived on the Alton Bay camp-ground Saturday, August 22nd, and found quite a large number already present. Several families had been there for weeks. It is becoming quite a favorite place to spend the warm summer days. There are now some two hundred and seventy houses on the ground, most of which are rude, and indicate that the builders do not expect to need them but a short time. They are quite like the shanties of California miners in early days; and plainly say that the occupants are pilgrims and strangers, stopping but for a short time in their homeward journey. For want of room these houses are most densely packed together. When the campmeeting was first located there, they had no expectation that it would grow to be the largest in the United States; but such is the result. Besides the houses, there are about one hundred cloth tents, beside three large ones. There are several good-sized houses, in which meetings are conveniently held.

The ground is on the Winnipesaukee lake shore, and also at the end of the Dover and Winnipesaukee R. R. It is convenient of access, which is one reason why the meeting has enlarged so rapidly. Camp-grounds should be located near R. R. depots.

The gathering is larger than ever this year. We learn the meetings already held have been excellent, and indicate that the religious exercises will be characterized by a deep-toned piety and devotion. Holiness of heart is the key-note of the meeting, as a suitable preparation for the coming of our Lord. This is being felt more by all the faithful followers of Christ. While great men are falling, and leading many astray, it is time for those who wish to be ready when Jesus comes to put on the whole christian armor, that they may be able to stand in these trying hours. It will not do to live on the borders of salvation, but we must be in Christ if we expect to overcome the powerful temptations of these last days. Formalism is but flood-wood on the rising tide of iniquity, and is easily disposed of by Satan and his emissaries. It helps instead of hindering him in his diabolical work. He counts on his side all formalists and fashionable professors.

At the time of writing (Friday, August 28th), it is the general sentiment that the meeting is the best ever held on the ground. More anon.

"WHO CAN TELL?"

The impression continues to increase in the minds of the thoughtful and candid, that some overwhelming event is not far in the future. They cannot avoid the conclusion. The signs of the times compel them to make this decision. They would not have it thus, but the logic of events are so clear, their better judgment bows to the evidence. The following is from the Sept. No. of the "Science of Health."

"HARD TIMES."

Since the panic everybody, and all interests, have suffered. Many merchants failed; many more failed to pay expenses; and still more failed to clear anything. Most men have been content if enabled "to make both ends meet." What with a deranged currency, imbecile legislation, and general distrust, with a period of private, public, and political corruption before unknown, it would seem that the very "gates of hell" had been opened on a sinful world, and that we were being punished, as a nation, for many transgressions.

Are we over the worst of it? Who can tell? Our halls of legislation are still crowded with dissipated and ungodly men. Our lawmakers are, for the most part, low and bad. They smell of whisky and tobacco, and their moral sensibilities are as blunt and obtuse as their natures are perverted and corrupt. "Rum rules the roost." We cannot hope for general prosperity until we deserve it. When our churches preach and practice temperance; when physicians stop poisoning their patients; when judges in our courts hold the scales of justice in an even balance; when legislators cease from swindling; when labor and capital come together, without foreign interference, and each seeks the general good,—we shall have taken steps toward the restoration of "good times."

THE TRUE CHURCH.

D'aubigne, author of the Reformation, says:

"The true church may attain its highest state of excellence in the midst of the general defection of the external body. This will probably be realized in a remarkable manner when Christ comes to judgment. Believers, who shall then be looking for the Lord, may be standing on an elevation which the church has never yet reached. It is a natural consequence that the church, which is the body of the Lord, out of which there is no salvation, is not any society whatever governed by men, and of which their human decisions and written constitutions rule the admission, the constitution, the extent. The church is solely the communion of all those who have Jesus Christ for their head, his word for their rule, his Spirit for the principle of life."—The True Church, p. 13.

We believe the noted author of the history of the Reformation has expressed an important truth in the foregoing statement. It seems the very thing is now being accomplished. In the midst of the alarming conformity to the world, now manifested throughout Christendom, the true church of Christ is rising to higher ground than has been accomplished since the days of the apostles. Jesus is coming.

CONFEDERATIONS.

This is an age of confederations. From small beginnings, they have arisen to gigantic magnitude, and now stand forth a mighty power in the world. Among these are "the Catholic Militant Union of the Cross," the "National Eight-hour League," the "National Builder's Union," the "Grangers," the "International Workingmen's Association," and many more that might be named, including millions of people on both continents. As the hour of conflict approaches, the union will strengthen, and we may expect to see increased activity and interest in all these various companies, whose leaders are among the strong men of the world, who do not bow to Christ as their Savior; hence, it is certain that Satan is pulling the wires, ringing the bells, laying the plans, and mustering these fiery hosts in his own interest, as a professed angel of light, promising remarkable success, and effective reforms, that will introduce "the good time coming." To some, it is the millennium; to others, the overthrow of all oppression; to others, the elevation of the poor, and the humiliation of the rich; to others, the general sway of Spiritualism, and the suppression of all religion, expressed by their favorite motto: "LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY." When the whole thing is fully exposed, it means French Revolution made world wide. For this object, the powers of darkness are working night and day, unceasingly as the ocean's roar, to crush for ever the religion of Jesus. As hostile Indians trading peacefully and deceitfully one day with those whom they had planned to butcher on the next; so Satan, by all available means, is forming alliances with as many good people as possible, in secret associations, whose exhibitions consist in fairs, festivals, bazaars, picnics, excursions, and processions, where the name of Jesus receives no reverence nor songs of praise; whose real position is on the brink of the world's Niagara, about to plunge into the vortex of perdition. With all this before us in fact, still there comes the syren song from the enemy, singing "a good time coming," "peace and safety," "the world is growing better," "down with the kings," "smash the rings," crush christianity, and we'll soon have "LIBERTY," "EQUALITY," and "FRATERNITY."

Well did the inspired apostle say, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." We are in them. The embattled hosts of Satan are boldly advancing for the conflict. The spirit of their leading fiend is filling their hearts; they are becoming blind to all objects but one, which is to overturn in some way, the present political, social, financial, and religious order of things. Satan has persuaded them the world can be reformed by human agency, independent of the Lord. They say christianity has failed to convert the world; and now it is time to try some other measures. He would make them believe that his favorite religion, Spiritualism, is just the thing needed. This is the leading artery that supplies vitality to the great antichristian movement now agitating the world, and which must soon culminate in the final, terrible conflict between the powers of light and darkness, truth and error, Christ and Belial.

INQUIRY.

Please inform me (and others) through the Crisis if there is any proof extant that the prophecies purporting to be "Mother Shipton's" are genuine, and were made by her some three hundred and twenty-five years ago; also, whether or not she prophesied that the world would come to an end in 1881? Yours awaiting the coming King,

H. H. Klock.

Ottumwa, Coffey Co., Kansas.

There is evidence that "Mother Shipton's Prophecy" was first published in 1448, four hundred and twenty-six years ago; and republished in 1641. The prophecy does read as follows:—

"Carriages without horses shall go,
And accidents fill the world with woe.
Around the earth thoughts shall fly
In the twinkling of an eye.
The world upside down shall be,
And gold be found at the foot of a tree.
Through hills men shall ride,
And no horse be at his side.
Under water men shall walk,
Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk.
In the air men shall be seen
In white, in black, and green.
Iron in the water shall float
As easily as a wooden boat.
Gold shall be found and shown
In a land that's now not known.
Fire and water shall wonders do,
England shall at last admit a foe.
The world to an end shall come
In eighteen hundred and eighty-one."

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

The following is a portion of the address of the Right Hon. the Earl of Cavan, as reported in the "Signs of Our Times:"

M. G.

The subject of the second coming of Christ is one which I feel the strongest conviction ought to be more deeply impressed upon the minds of christians than is generally the case. Since our last Prophetical Conference in St. George's Hall, twelve months ago, there has been an an advance in the views of many dear people of the Lord in Scotland upon the subject of the Second Advent. There had not previously been so much consideration given to it in Scotland, or in England, but we have found that during this past winter as one result of the great religious awakening in Scotland—an awakening which has been so much promoted by the visit of the two American evangelists, very many have turned their attention to this subject who had not much thought of it before. The expectation of the speedy personal return of our Lord ought to be close to our hearts, and to be enshrined in our inmost affections. His words to us are, "Occupy till I come"—thus directing our eye not to death, but to his personal coming as the grand object of hope; and, again, "The Son of man is like a man taking a far journey who gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye therefore, lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping." Don't let us work without maintaining our hearts in an attitude of constant longing and readiness for his personal appearing, for he says, "In such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Oh! if our whole hearts go out in grateful adoration to him for his wondrous redeeming love to our souls, we cannot rest content or enjoy true satisfaction until our eyes visibly behold the King in his beauty—even him who is the chief among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely.

And how quickening and enrapturing is the thought that "when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is," and let us keep prominently in view the assurance that at his appearing "he will change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body, according to the mighty working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself." . . . I am certain that the very thought of this, that the Master is about to return in person, and to reckon with and reward his servants, should stimulate us to be more active and diligent in carrying out his precepts and injunctions, and in laboring to bear fruit to his glory, so that when he shall appear we shall not be ashamed before him at his coming.

We may rest assured that we shall be found of him in peace, if we are bearing the fruit that the Lord looks for. In the fifteenth chapter of John, where he is spoken of as the true vine, and we are described as the branches, we read, "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit."

We need to be purged and delivered from this world's thralldom, and to have our heart stayed on him, and drawing from him the sap of spiritual nourishment, that we may bear not fruit only, but much fruit; for he says—"He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit." Are we abiding in union with the Lord, momentary union, and realizing our union with him? That is the grand secret of success in laboring for the advancement of the Lord's kingdom, and to win souls to him.

It should be our aim to be living branches steadfastly abiding in Christ, in these last days when the world at large is steeped in iniquity and luxury, in pursuit after material prosperity, and the making haste to be rich. Meanwhile many cry Peace, peace, and look for the continuance of all things, as they were from the beginning of the creation. . . .

I fervently hope and pray that God will open the eyes of many who are blind to the perils and judgments of the last days that are rapidly coming upon us. The great effort of Satan is by every means to keep people in the dark regarding these things, lest being forewarned they should be forearmed, and also lest they should be stirred up to increased activity in the Master's service, and to fresh efforts to wrest from the destroyer's grasp some of those who are now led captive by him at his will. For this would be the result of a firm belief in the speedy premillennial advent of Christ.

I would especially beseech every one to take heed and not suffer their eyes to be blinded by the wicked one, so as to imagine that the Lord's second advent is yet at some distance. It is in truth an event that is close at hand, and which many of us may live to witness. Yet, alas, there are some people who, through ignorance of the prophetic Scriptures, suppose that it may not take place yet for a thousand years. But let us not be influenced by the unbelief, or indifference, or even the opposition of some christians in relation to this Scriptural hope of the Lord's speedy coming. Let us stand as vigilant sentinels upon our watch-tower, in a posture of longing expectancy, like the Thessalonians "waiting for the Son of God from heaven," and in the position of the bride looking for the coming of the Bridegroom. And I trust that we shall all listen to the addresses that are now about to be delivered, with attentive ear and Scriptural desire to learn more in reference to those unspeakably blessed truths; and may the result be, that we shall all walk more closely, more faithfully, and more humbly, with our God, to the praise and glory of his grace.

"LITERAL AND UNVARNISHED."

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, in preaching his fifth anniversary sermon in the Brooklyn Tabernacle remarked:—The impression is abroad that you must fix up the gospel to suit the age, instead of fixing up the age to suit the gospel; and the young men coming out of our theological seminaries have the impression that they must palliate the prejudices of society, and must cover over the natural rottenness of the human heart, and that they must tell men what very clever people they are, and that they only need to be pressed in a little one way, and pulled out a little the other way, and then they will be all right. And they say: "All you want is development." Is it? Development! You might as well go to a man bent double with the cramps of Asiatic cholera, and tell him that all he wants is development. It is a lie. He needs to have his disease killed so that he may get well. Until our heart is changed by the grace of God, it is scabbed and ulcerous with a great leprosy; and it is not development we want, but it is the cure of an eating, loathsome, blasting, damning leprosy. Our whole nature throughout, and throughout, needs to be made over and over again. I wish that every word of that passage could come down with five tons' weight of emphasis: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God;" though he had given one hundred thousand dollars to religious institutions, though he never used a bad word in his life, though he paid all his debts, though he lived on the tip-top round of respectability—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." But so little do we hear about this doctrine of regeneration in this day, that it is considered almost indelicate for a man to read in a public assemblage the words of Christ to Nicodemus about the new birth. And as to there being any hell, if we make any allusion to that, it must be with exquisite circumlocution, as "the place of high temperature," or "the world insalubrious," or, as a minister recently called it, "the great elsewhere!" I say to the young men who are studying for the ministry, and there are thirty connected with this congregation, if you have any idea that it is necessary to preach an emasculated gospel in order to get people to come and hear it, you make a vast mistake.

An eminent minister of New York said to me some time ago: "I have a very large audience, but they are all christians. I can't get the worldly people to come in and listen to me. I hear that a good many worldly people come to hear you. You must preach some very strange things. What did you preach about yesterday?" "Well," I replied, "I preached yesterday morning on 'Seek ye the Lord while he may be found;' and in the evening I preached about 'Strive to enter in at the strait gate.'" Said he, "Is that all?" "Yes," I replied, "that is all."

Oh! my friends, there is a judgment seat in every man's heart, which tells him that the Bible is true, and that if it be true, the wicked and the righteous cannot go to the same place. So I say: Young men who are entering the ministry, if you really want a fresh theme, if you really want a novel theme to preach about, preach the old gospel. Do not preach about "development"—that is hackneyed. Do not preach about the Darwinian theory of the origin of our race—that is worn out. But if you want something new, really new, so new that tens of thousands of people in this day do not know anything about it, then give them "repentance" in the morning, and "faith" at night; and in order to variety, next Sabbath give them "faith" in the morning, and "repentance" at night.

I believe that within the next twenty years, there will be an earthquake amid the American and English pulpits, and that those which have adhered to the old gospel will stand, and that those which have preached anything else, will go down. Paul cries out with great emphasis: "If any one, though he be an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel let him be accursed."

Bro. Frank Krusen, of Dacotah Ter., wishes to know the propriety of the different church names in the land. We believe in calling all things by their right names. If a church is a Baptist church, and belongs to a Baptist body, then call it Baptist. If an Advent church, and belonging to an Advent body, then call it an Advent Church. If the church is of Christ, or of God, and the body is of Christ, then call it the "Church of Christ." Call it just what it is. Don't be afraid. If a church is not a church of Christ, then it would be wrong to say it is.

Tell the truth. Call Baptists, Baptists, and Methodist, Methodists, and Christians, Christians, and you won't hurt anybody.

If one is an Adventist, then Adventists will probably fellowship him, and may be somebody else will abuse him. He can call it suffering for Christ's sake, or for Adventists' sake, just as he chooses, but the latter cause is more apt to be the true one. But if one is abused because he is a Bible christian, he need not guess twice to know who prompted the abuse. The nearer one lives to God, the less trouble we think he will have about names. He will find enough to occupy his heart and hands for Jesus; and Satan can't get him to quarrel over other men's matters or names.—Advent Christian Times.

Paul, for preaching Christ, was stoned, beaten, cast into prison, and abused in various ways; yet, in the midst of it all, he shouted praise to God. And when let out of prison, instead of telling over his troubles, and seeking the sympathy of others, it is said of him that he comforted his brethren. What a noble spirit!

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 13th, 1874, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

"LOVERS OF PLEASURE."

We clip the following from the Vermont Chronicle, an organ of the Congregational Society, published at Windsor, Vt. We are glad the devotees of the syren-song-temporal-millennium-doctrine are waking up from their theological lethargy to give action to their better judgment, produced by evidences unmistakable, which their eyes are daily beholding in the progress of sin and wickedness in the day and age of the world in which we live; even in our very home and neighborhood associations. We are glad to be informed, as we constantly are, that in every sect and association, in the civilized world, the eyes of intelligent men and women are being uncovered; the theological wool of world evangelization is being torn away, and the people are beginning to look at facts as they really exist.

"Are we come to the 'perilous times' foretold by the apostle, when he wrote to Timothy, concerning 'the last days,' saying men shall be 'lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having the form of godliness but denying the power thereof?.' If we may judge from the crowds that throng the temples of pleasure in our land, in these days, in preference to the temples of the Lord, we must certainly reply in the affirmative. Saying nothing of the multitudes in the great cities that hasten to the remorseless shrine of voluptuousness, there is evident even in country villages, a certain insatiable itching for pleasure, even within the fold of churches, which argues ill for spirituality and true godliness.

In some places a scorching thirst for amusements of doubtful propriety, if not of positively hurtful nature, appears to have seized the reins, and driven with furious speed through the course of passing months, inflaming youth, beguiling maturity, and deluding age. The great theme has been, 'wherewithal shall we be amused,'—not edified with the knowledge and love of God,—not made wiser and better, and stronger for life's conflicts and burdens? Restraints have been over-leaped. Admonitions have been disregarded. In some cases, even the children of light appear to have been deceived with the shining form of the tempter. A pitiful effeminacy usurps the place of masculine vigor, and they that, in a time of revival, would stand up boldly for Jesus, and stoutly resist 'lusts which war against the soul,' do smite their knees and hide their faces. Alas! is it so?"—Ex.

STRAIT GATE.

C. S. BRANCH.

"Enter ye in at the strait gate, for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat."
"Because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."—Matt. 13: 14.

It seems to me that the most skeptical must admit the truth of the above statement of Jesus Christ, although uttered more than eighteen hundred years ago. "Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" If we find thorns where we look for grapes, and thistles where we expected figs, we may know of a surety that the root and stalk is thistle also, notwithstanding it may be long and loud in its profession of being a fig tree; or "do men gather grapes of thorns?" Christ says, "I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit." The fruit will be of the same kind and quality of the vine. It will be grapes, and not thorns; therefore it is not a hard matter to come to a correct conclusion which road my professed brother may be in, the broad or narrow one. He may be in the church, and at the same time be in the broad road; but not so if he is in Christ. If he is in him, he is in the narrow way that leadeth unto life; for Christ said, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." The fruit will be in harmony with the vine, and the vine with the fruit. Will the vine be found in the narrow way, and the fruit in the broad? We think not. Both will be found inside the strait gate and the narrow way.

O watchman, sound the alarm; for the time that Paul spoke of is at hand—"lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." "If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained." The church in all parts of the country is fast drifting away into the broad road, and soon will be swallowed up in the great whirlpool of destruction.

Dear sinner, you are in the broad road that leadeth to destruction. What will you do in the great day of God Almighty? What awaits you but fiery indignation and wrath? O turn ye, turn ye into the strait gate and narrow way that leadeth unto life. Be sure and read and ponder the following passages of Scripture: Ezekiel 18: 4, Rom. 6: 23, James 1: 15, Rom. 6: 16, Rev. 21: 8. O, why will ye die? Turn ye into the narrow way, and if you die before the Life-giver comes, he will raise you up at the last day. John 6: 39. May God help for his Son's sake.

REPORT OF WAYNE CO. MISSION TENT.

Dear Brethren:—We have just closed our tent-meeting at Ontario, and will give a brief report of our labors there, and also at Honeoye, N. Y. We commenced a meeting at Honeoye June 3d, continuing it only ten days. At first we had considerable opposition from professed believers, which did not wear away until the last two or three days, when the spirit of unity seemed to prevail, and conviction settled on many minds that we were living in the last moments of time. Quite a number made a start for the kingdom, whom we hope to meet there when Jesus comes. The last Sabbath we buried seven happy souls in the likeness of Jesus' death. After we had taken down the tent, many friends declared we ought not to have done it, and earnestly besought us to pitch it again; but under the circumstances, we thought it best not to do so. Bro. W. E. Brown tarried with them, and preached the word the following Sunday, when five more determined that they would be followers of Christ. We were requested to return, as ten or more desired to put on Christ by baptism, but we could not. We have heard, however, that Bro. Hobbs, of Springwater, has attended to this matter, and we trust that others will follow.

From Honeoye we removed to Ontario, Wayne, Co. This we found to be a new field. We were invited to this place by Sr. Near, who felt that something could be done in this town by way of publishing the gospel of the kingdom, and to-day she has great reason to praise God that the tent was ever pitched in Ontario. We commenced meetings July 2nd, with much opposition from the ministers of the place, with the exception of the Baptist, who said to one of the members of his church (who had attended our meeting), "When the Adventists pitched their tent here, I intended to fight them; but I thank God I never did. The M. E. minister was one Mr. Post, who had published a work in Rochester exposing the errors of Adventism. Many statements in this pamphlet are base fabrications. I give you a sample: "These shall go away into everlasting punishment."—Bible. "These shall not go away into everlasting punishment."—Adventists. He took particular pains while we were there to circulate them, especially the night we unveiled Spiritism, when he engaged a son of one spirit medium to scatter them through the tent; but I will say, to the credit of this medium, that she would not permit him to impose on us or the audience, if Post would give him a dollar for every pamphlet he gave away or sold.

The Presbyterian minister advised his people not to go near us. The other preacher I wish to specially notice. He is a member of the Wesleyan Methodist connection. His name is G. M. Hardy; a good scholar, having a college education. From the beginning of our meeting, he did not seem to be satisfied only when he was reporting publicly and privately that "he had discussed with two Adventists and had cleaned them out" (his own words); and was good for two more, but, says he, they never will dare to meet us. Then he engaged the Ontario Sun, edited by his nephew, to challenge us to a discussion. When this challenge appeared in the paper, I thought it best to say to the congregation that as I had received no challenge from Mr. Hardy personally, I presumed that the discussion would not take place until we knew about it ourselves. Mr. Hardy, it appears, was in the tent when I made this statement, and he afterwards arose and challenged me to a discussion on the immortality of the soul. I did not desire to discuss this question, because I had but little faith that discussions were profitable; yet I could not avoid this, so I accepted it, hoping that it would be for the best.

The discussion commenced Monday evening, Aug. 3d, and continued five nights. Seven men were chosen as judges, who were to give in their decision in writing at the close of the debate. Before their decision was declared, the audience were to vote on the merits of the case. Let it be understood that before our tent went there, the people, with a very few exceptions, never heard a discourse on the nature of man, as we hold it. I shall not weary you with the Scripture citations brought out on either side. I will show you some of his arguments, that you may see the weakness of his position. His first argument was, that man has an immortal soul, because the Bible speaks of God as having soul, in such terms as "my soul," "his soul." Then he found scriptures where these terms "my soul," "his soul," etc., were applied to man; hence, as God's soul was immortal, man's soul is also. I asked if he wished us to understand that God was an organization, having a soul? Of course, this drove him from his position, because he does not believe that God has body or parts. He then admitted that "my soul" means "my self."

His famous argument throughout the discussion was Samuel appearing to Saul at Endor. He said God Almighty sent Samuel to consult with Saul, and to confound him and the witch; but I read to him that Saul died for his transgression, . . . and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit to inquire of it. 1 Chron. 10: 13. The entire audience, and among them were some noted Spiritists, saw at a glance that Eld. Hardy and the Bible did not agree, and that one or the other must fall. I submitted for his consideration nineteen propositions, among them this one: If he could produce two passages (for "by the mouth of two witnesses every word shall be established") of Scripture, that positively declared the soul to be immortal, or that man was conscious between death and the resurrection, I would give up the contest. He paid no attention to the propositions, because he knew he could not prove one of them. The last evening of the discussion was Friday night. The day previous, Mr. Hardy visited many of the public places, such as shops and stores, and some of the judges; and said to them that he would that night drive Wells through the tent. He would let the intelligent people of Ontario know that a machinist could not defeat learned men. The learning of Socrates, Plato, Homer, Josephus, Zoroaster, Clark, and others, were the principal authors he used as proof of the immortality of the soul, while we relied upon the word of God and common sense.

On the last night of our discussion, it was estimated that fifteen hundred persons were on the ground. Three hundred and four teams drove in the gate, while every available hitching place in the village was used besides. At the close of the discussion, the vote of the judges stood four for the negative (myself), and three for the affirmative. The vote of the congregation (only those voted who were inside the tent, the largest part of the congregation could not get into the tent) stood forty for the affirmative, while over three hundred voted for the negative. We felt quite satisfied with the result of the discussion, when we consider the fact that all in this town but about eight or ten believed in the immortality of the soul prior to our coming among them.

They also believe the evidences of the Lord's soon coming, for we made this theme prominent, as we feel this is and should be our great message to this generation. A number embraced Christ as their Savior for the first time; and we had the pleasure of baptizing them in the name of the Lord. Fifteen put on the Lord in this manner. A number threw up their creeds, declaring that they would take the Bible for their only rule. We expect to baptize a larger number still very soon. We formed a company under our little covenant of about twenty-eight members. On the whole, we have every reason to rejoice, especially that we all will soon meet in the kingdom.

Dear brethren, pray for us, that our labor may not be in vain at Williamson, Wayne Co., N. Y., the place of our next meeting. We will continue our meeting there until the first of September, or later. Bro. R. C. Brown has labored with me in the tent, preaching the word to acceptance. Your Bro. in Christ,

Jas. E. Wells.

DEDICATION.

According to appointment, the new chapel at North Rutland was dedicated Sunday, Aug. 2nd. In the morning they began to gather until the chapel was full, which will seat about three hundred. Quite a delegation came from Worcester, Holden, and other places. The day was as fine as could be desired. They have a neat and pretty chapel, at a cost of a little less than $1,200. Preachers present, T. M. Preble, G. A. Streeter, and H. H. Tucker. Bro. Preble gave us a discourse in the morning from Mark 16: 15, 16. Christ, the author of the text, once lived here, died here, and is now at the right hand of God. The last commission to his disciples was to GO. Amid the trials of this life, amid the scoffs of an ungodly world, and amid perils and persecutions, it is still "GO." Go into all the world. That was Christ's last commission to his disciples. To the sinner, it is come. "Come unto me." But at the judgment it will be reversed. The first words to his disciples will be COME; "come ye blessed of my Father." But to the sinner it will be go—"depart." The gospel is good news of salvation, and deliverance, not only from sin, but from death. Christ will accomplish that.

Bro. Streeter came here three years ago, by the invitation of one person, and held meetings; then to the new one after that was built, then into this new chapel to-day. Thank the Lord. At the close of the morning services, a subscription was started to lift the remaining debt on the house; $220 of which was pledged upon the spot, and a guarantee was given for the remaining $382.58, in case it was not otherwise paid. At noon, two were baptized by Bro. Tucker, near the chapel. At the commencement of the afternoon services, a large Bible and harp were presented to the North Rutland church, from the Worcester S. S., by Bro. W. M. Hall, which was responded to by Bro. Streeter in an appropriate manner.

Bro Preble then dedicated the house, taking for a text Ps. 118: 25, 26. This psalm, prophetical of Christ, the head of the corner, refers to God's house everywhere. God's house at Jerusalem became a den of thieves because they had perverted it from its proper use, by desecrating it. He made application of it to the present time. It is not the material that constitutes the house of God, but it is the place where God can meet his people, if but two or three. It must be where God is known. This Bible, God its author, salvation its end, truth unmixed as its matter. To be God's house, his book must be here, his people must be here, and God's minister must be here, and study the word, and not write novels or keep fast horses. Said the author of "Norwood," "The man that can believe that God made the world in six days, is about as intelligent as the Egyptian mummy, and of the two should prefer the mummy." When men forsake His word, he will forsake them. In order to make it the house of God, we must preach his truth. God has blessed the effort in building. We must have the Spirit of God in the heart.

At five P. M., prayer and conference. Five received the right hand of fellowship by Bro. Streeter; others are to be baptized by the same the last Sunday but one in this month. At the close, Bro. Preble said we must not forget Bro. W. M. Hall of Worcester, who had not only labored with his hands to erect this house, but had labored spiritually, and had also given liberally of his substance as the Lord had prospered, to whom they owed in a great measure the success of the enterprise. God bless him. At the same time we partook of the Lord's supper, and thus passed away a day very pleasantly, and we trust profitably. Lord bless them all. Amen.

IF I HAD THE TIME.

More than once have fanciful visions been drawn of what life should be, were it not for the multiplied duties that press one down to the continual drudgery of manual service. Fretful lips cry out again and again, "Oh, I would love to be good; but then this everlasting round of cooking, and scrubbing, and washing, and ironing, and mending, week in and week out, year after year, consuming energy, and destroying all the finer feelings, and higher aspirations of my nature!"

Poor creature! she would love to be situated as Mrs. A., or Mrs. B., nothing she would enjoy more than being good, and doing good; but then there is no use thinking about it, for she has neither time, nor ease, nor talent, nor wealth,—to her, the seemingly needed requisites to usefulness,—so she must be content to be nothing, and do nothing that is sublime and elevating; but dependency clipping the wings of her soul, she dooms herself to hobble and grovel down amid the cares and fretting anxieties of life; never learning the precious lesson of casting all her care on Jesus, and while she toils with her hands let her soul and mind rise into a higher atmosphere, where heaven's air is breathed, and tranquility and peace is her rich possession.

These seemingly unfavorable circumstances amid which the Father hath placed many of his children, may, indeed, be the very best for developing a high christian character. It is the very soil needed to produce in them the fruits of the Spirit,—patience, gentleness, meekness, forbearance, love.

These many cares which we would almost reckon curses, are among our greatest blessings, our strongest helps to a holy life; teaching some persons, as nothing else could, to pray without ceasing, and to keep a steady trust. Where there is greater leisure, there is oftimes a proneness to set apart and depend too much on long intervals of prayer, during which the soul draws very near to God, and then away to duty, relaxing trust. But in the absence of much time for closet communings, the soul learns to do most of its praying as it goes; holding itself in a continually trusting attitude toward God. Thus it looks and trusts, and is saved, moment by moment, all the while the hands are busy.

There is a tendency sometimes to grow a little chafed, and rebellious against the Lord for having put us just where we are; taking away from us all time for self-improvement and devotional exercises, and working in the church. Ah, he knoweth best, and the leisure we so much covet might have been our destruction. We are poor judges of the best means for accomplishing in us the great work of perfecting and living holy lives. We might have thrown off the irksome yoke of household duties, withdrawn ourselves from contact with the temptations of an outside world, shut ourselves up in some monastic cell, and then said, "Now I shall be strong, and pure, and Christ-like." But not so; there is no growth; we behold only a weak, sickly babe. God sees where we need to be planted; and be sure if he puts us where the winds blow, where there are winter storms and summer suns, he designs that out of these influences we are to come as the giant oak of the forest. He does not intend that we are to be controlled by these circumstances surrounding us, but that we shall so handle and control them, as to make them minister to the very fullest development of our higher nature. This is what makes men and women of bone and sinew, nerve and muscle. It is not leisure to do as one wills, but it is trusting and serving God, right in the midst of every-day duties. It is not seclusion, but taking the seeming adverse circumstances, and assimilating them to our own nature; making them to supply the needed food for the spiritual man.—Advocate of Holiness.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. Robinson.

To the saints scattered abroad, greeting: Thinking many of the brothers and sisters would like to know what had become of Bro. and Sr. Morgan, Bro. and Sr. Robinson, Srs. Pamelia Giddings and Ruth G. Moore, we have concluded to write a letter for the Crisis. As we have been looking for the coming of Jesus since 1842, and have attended almost all the campmeetings in Wilbraham and Springfield until last year, I will say both families moved from Chicopee Falls, Mass., to Warbashaw, Minn., one year ago last May. Death has taken one of our number since we came here. Sr. Morgan died March 9th, but she died in the Lord. We have kept the faith, and are waiting for the great Restorer to come and give us eternal life. Sister Morgan was a mother in Israel, and a great expounder of the Scriptures. We miss her very much. Bro. Morgan, and the rest of us, request the prayers of the saints.

Wabashaw, Minn., Aug. 3d.

From Bro. N. Bezack.

One of Egypt's plagues has visited us in the shape of grasshoppers. They have destroyed all that was green,—gardens, corn, and trees. The summer was very hot and dry, so that the grass dried up in June, and we have had no rain since to do the least good. Cattle languish for grass; hogs have to die. I have eight of them, the best kind in the State. I offer to give them away, but cannot do it. Cows give but very little milk; so there will be no butter nor meat.

UNFERMENTED WINE.

More than fifty churches in New York and vicinity, and over one hundred and fifty in and around Philadelphia, have banished the alcoholic cup from the Lord's table, and substituted the unfermented wine, which is now so easy to obtain. Thousands of churches all over the country are using it with great satisfaction.

It is dangerous and highly improper to place fermented wine upon the communion table. We are as fully satisfied that the Bible no more sanctions the use of intoxicants at the Lord's table than it does American slavery. Christ nor any of the Lord's followers used it fermented. Besides it matters nothing where the viper lurks, whether on the communion table or the saloon keeper's bar. It is a viper still. If he has such a stultified conscience as to deal it out to his victims, let him bear his sin alone. We shall never, God helping us, be guilty of administering fermented wine at the communion table.

Our prayer is from Jesus, "Lead us not into temptation." And this petition is one of the most useful taught by the Savior, because it at once recognizes man's weakness and God's power. No temptations are stronger than those appealing to the appetite, and instances are by no means rare where promising men have been started on the road to destruction by the simplest means. To some appetites the taste of ardent spirits is more than they can withstand, and therefore it is both cruelty and crime to offer this taste. To provide, as far as we can, against the temptation being presented at the Lord's table, in the shape of an intoxicating drink, we have procured the following simple recipe for the manufacture of palatable communion wine, which we commend to our christian brethren, and ask the press generally to circulate:

Vinum Sacrum.—Take of raisins, one pound; boiling water, one quart; and the white of one egg. Having reduced the raisins to a pulp by pressure of the hand, pour the boiling water on it, let it stand for about an hour and strain through muslin—then, having previously beaten up the white of an egg, add to it the aforesaid infusion and heat until ebullition takes place, lastly filter through paper. "Filtering paper" may be procured at any drug store, and folded into proper shape if desired. Prepare the day before it is to be used.—American Wesleyan.

Obituaries.

HANCOCK. Poor, blind Samuel Hancock is dead. He was taken from the camp-ground by a friend, by the name of Burr, on Monday, the day of breaking up, and cared for in his family, until it was thought best to remove him to the hospital, a few rods distant. Here he had careful nursing, and good medical attendance, but his work was done. I visited him every day while he lived, after learning that he was in the city. He had strong confidence in the Lord, and great assurance of his abiding love. He vomited up all medicine until Thursday night, from which time he rapidly declined. Friday he breathed out his ardent love for Jesus; and though he seemed little inclined to converse, he still continued his adoration,—"Precious Jesus! precious Jesus!" Saturday I left him in the care of Bro. Payne, while I went to my appointment, and returned on Monday, to learn that he had been conveyed to his wife in a coffin, to sing no more his sweet hymn—

"We shall sleep, but not forever," but to be remembered and sung by the church until that day when death shall be swallowed up of life, and "the inhabitants will no more say, I am sick." H. PRATT.

BOBJOHN. In New York City, July 22d, Thomas Robjohn, aged sixty-four years.

This affliction falls heavily, not only on a devoted wife and children, but on a large circle of friends and acquaintances, including all the Advent people in New York and vicinity, to whom he had endeared himself by a life-long devotion to the cause. In many a dark hour, Bro. Robjohn's contributions and words of good cheer have lifted the cloud, and shown the sunshine of our heavenly Father's approving countenance. He was a great inventor, and once constructed a small steam engine that actually moved in graceful circles through the air, over the heads of an entranced throng in a large room on Broadway. The writer was called upon to preach the funeral sermon, but Bro. P. G. Bowman arriving just in time from the South, we secured his valuable services, greatly to the honor of the truth he so nobly represents.

H. A. KING.

HERVEY. In Norton, Mass., July 24th, 1874, Caleb C. Hervey, aged forty-one years and twenty-eight days.

Bro. Hervey was for many years a lover of the Lord. In the latter part of his christian experience he embraced the doctrine of the soon speedy coming of our blessed Savior. Though suffering greatly with disease for several weeks, he did not murmur nor complain, but was enabled by grace to rejoice in the blessed hope, and the promise of God. He rests in hope of the soon coming of the Lord to give him immortality and a home in the better land. He leaves a lonely widow, nine children, and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. May great grace be with them all. By special request of the deceased, the religious services were conducted on the Sabbath in the Baptist church, by the writer, assisted by the pastor. Text, "If a man die shall he live again?"

C. W. RATHBUN.

BRACKET. In Hermon, Me., June 21st, Sr. Phebe Bracket, wife of Bro. George Bracket.

The subject of this notice was one of loveliness, patience, and piety, amidst her extreme suffering, for the space of seven months. She had eight cancers cut from her breast, one burned out; had four more coming at her death, three inside, one outside. With christian submission and confidence, she was often heard to say, Let me die and rest in the grave till Jesus comes to raise to life the sleeping ones. She left a kind husband to deeply mourn her loss. ISRAEL DAMMAN.

SMITH. In Biddeford, Me., June 12th, 1874, of scarlet fever, Ida Smith, daughter of Isaac P. and Malisia Smith, aged one year.

Also July 21st, 1874, of scarlet fever, Laura Ella, daughter of Isaac P. and Malisia Smith, aged seven years, seven months, and seven days.

Two more lovely forms have been borne to the enemy's land, to sleep until Jesus comes to wake the dead, and give life and immortality to his chosen ones. May the grace of God sustain our Bro. and Sister in their great bereavement. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer.

G. F. HAINES.

CROSS. In Biddeford, July 15th, 1874, William Cross, aged forty-eight years.

Our Bro. rests in hope, so that the weeping widow and fatherless children expect to meet him again "where no farewell tear is shed or heart is sad." Services by the writer.

W. H. MITCHELL.

STONE. In Biddeford, July 24th, 1874, William Stone, aged forty-eight years.

Our Bro. was of a doubtful turn of mind, nevertheless, he clung to his Savior, and calmly fell asleep, expecting to wake up at the trumpet's call. The funeral was attended by the writer, at the M. E. church, assisted by Bro. Ladd, Methodist, and Bro. Stevens, F. Baptist. May God bless the widow, children, and all the mourning friends. W. H. MITCHELL.

WAKEFIELD. In Kennebunkport, July 16th, 1874, Reuben, son of Joseph and Olive Wakefield, aged twenty-six years.

This young man had been in feeble health for a number of years previous to his last sickness, but was patient and uncomplaining through it all, and without a murmur, fell asleep in Jesus.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep;
From which none ever wake to weep."

The writer improved the occasion of the funeral in pointing the mourners to the gospel plan of saving man. W. H. MITHELL.

EMERY. In Kennebunk, July 29th, 1874, Harriet A., wife of Bro. Jacob Emery, aged forty-three years.

Our sister hoped to meet the gathering saints the present season at the Alton Bay camp, but died without the privilege. She will meet a larger gathering ere long. The writer endeavored to comfort the numerous relatives who gathered at our chapel on the 31st, to pay their last tribute of respect, before consigning to the grave, a christian woman, with the gospel hope.

W. H. MITCHELL.

SMITH. In Kennebunkport, Aug. 12th, 1874, Clara Smith, aged sixty-two years.

For many years our sister has been looking for the return of Him who will destroy death, but she has had to lie down at last in the grave to rest awhile till he should return, when at the sound of his voice she will wake to sleep no more. Funeral attended bp the writer, assisted by Bro. E. S. Emery. W. H. MITCHELL.

COOLBROTH. In Cape Elizabeth, June 16th, 1874, of consumption, Bro. Asbury Coolbroth, aged thirty-two years.

During his sickness, our Bro. felt the love of Christ in his heart, and seemed reconciled to the will of God. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer. G. F. HAINES.

GATES. In No. Adams, Mass., Aug. 3d, 1874, Charlie, son of Charles S. and Arlett Gates, aged eleven months.

"Though nature weeps when lovely ties
So strongly bound art riven,
Yet faith the Savior's words applies,
'Of such the realms of heaven.'"

F. R. BLANCHARD.

BENTHAM. At South Boston, Aug. 8th, 1874, Mabel, daughter of Edwin and Bessie Bentham, aged five years and ten months.

☞ A telegram from Rome says that on Friday night an armed band of forty persons quitted the town of Imola and proceeded to Bologna, destroying the telegraph lines and disarming the railway watchmen as they went. The band was pursued by a military force and nearly all of its members were arrested, and their arms and ammunition seized. There has been some excitement in Bologna, caused by the organization of revolutionary societies, but these have been dissolved, and the town is now tranquil. Another telegram received yesterday states that eight leaders of the Internationale have been arrested at Rome, and other arrests have been made in Florence and other Italian cities. Papers were seized showing that the Internationale has been making great progress in Italy.

ROME, Aug. 31. Mount Etna has been in a state of eruption since Saturday and streams of lava are pouring through three craters.

Notices.

Bethel, Vt., Campmeeting.

The Bethel (Vt.) Campmeeting will commence (D.V.) SATURDAY, SEPT. 5TH. The camp-ground never looked prettier than now. It smiles in beauty and neatness. It awaits in loveliness to greet all who can come. Friends are arranging to put up several new tents. We are expecting a better meeting than ever. We expect the same R. R. arrangements as last year.

Pay full fare from any station upon the Vermont Central R. R. to the meeting, and receive from the committee a free return pass. This includes also all the roads operated by the Vermont Central, for the names of which see late copies of the Crisis. We also expect a reduction of fare on the Montpelier and Wells River R. R.

Bro. Clapman is preparing to furnish good board at seventy-five cents per day. As we expect quite a number of preachers, those churches that can, would do well to adopt one, and furnish a home for him in their tent. Private lodgings and horse keeping can be very readily obtained near by at reasonable rates.

TENT BUILDING. The committee will be on the ground Aug. 31st, and through the week, and all who intend to build tents of wood are especially requested to have them completed before the meeting commences, as it seems a pity to sacrifice so much of the spirit and power of devotion to the sound and toil of the hammer. We need the entire meeting from SEPT. 5TH to SEPT. 14TH for worship. Come, brethren and sisters, come up to this feast. Lay aside toil and care, and come. We have engaged efficient help from abroad. We shall expect you, coming with holy hearts and happy faces.

We have completed arrangements with the Montpelier and Wells River R. R. You will pay full fare over the road, and receive a free pass from the committee on the camp-ground, the same as you do on the Vermont Central R. R.

EXTRA QUILTS. Those who can, bring some for the preachers, and for those who cannot bring any. Let all come fully furnished with bedding that can. H. F. C., for Com.

TENT MEETING.—The new Mass. Mission tent will be pitched in East Pepperell, Mass., Thursday, Sept. 3d. Meetings will be held each afternoon and evening during the week, and over the Sabbath. The evidences of the coming of Christ at hand will be given, and an effort made to have men come to Christ. The brethren living in the region where the meeting is held are invited to come and help in this work for the Lord.

L. BOUTELL, for the Committee.

DEARLY BELOVED, the Mass. Mission Tent is in the field. We have no funds in the treasury. Shall it stop, while the calls are being made upon us, for lack of means? L. BOUTELL.

Pittsfield Me. Campmeeting.

The Annual Campmeeting for the eastern part of Maine will be held, if the Lord will, on the ground occupied last year, in Hathorn's grove at Pittsfield, commencing Sunday, August 30th, and hold over Sunday, Sept. 6th. The grove has been much improved by clearing, grading, and deepening wells. It is expected that all who can will put up tents for themselves, and furnish plenty of bedding and food. The Maine Mission Tent will be on hand, and will afford lodging for those who cannot put up tents for themselves; but all must provide bedding for themselves. Be prepared for cold storms. Good board will be furnished at the boarding tent. Breakfast and supper, 25 cents each; dinner, 40 cents, except the last Sunday, when dinner will be fifty cents. Also horse keeping, hay, straw and board, will be provided on the ground for all who wish, at reasonable rates.

☞ No reduction of Rail Road fare can possibly be obtained.

COMMITTEE: Jer. Carr, F. A. Baker, S. K. Partridge, Oren S. French, J. M. Tozier, Oscar Farnum, M. W. Corliss, G. L. McKenney, William Clark, Abner Millet.

THE ADV. CHRIS. CONFERENCE of the Province of Quebec will (D. V.) hold its next annual session at the "old meeting-house" in Hatley, P. Q., on Wednesday, October 7th, and continue over the Sabbath. All of like precious faith, who are in sympathy with its objects and work, as set forth in its Constitution, will, we trust, make a special effort to attend, and unite in its business deliberations, and religious exercises of preaching, prayer, and song; which, we trust, will be so scriptural, so wisely and kindly performed, as to result in permanent good to the cause of our coming Savior. Especially we would say, let all the ministerial and lay members in the several districts, as far as is possible, arrange to attend. Come early, and come prepared to stay through the meeting. Let due reports, either written or verbal, be forthcoming from the entire field. Let isolated brethren and sisters who feel an interest, and cannot attend, write epistles to be read in conference, and direct to the President, or Secretary, at Ayres Flat. Please attend to this in good season. Christian union is strength; let us have it in action, feeling, and fact. Christian hospitality and kindness will be shown to all who come, by the resident brethren and friends, as on former occasions. Come praying for and expecting good.

CHAS. P. DOW, President.
E. C. ORCUTT, Secretary.

CAMPMEETING NOTICE.—The annual campmeeting of the A. C. Conference, in Northern Illinois, will be holden at Wyanet, Bureau Co., Illinois. The meeting will commence Saturday evening, Aug. 29th, and close Sunday evening, Sept. 6th. We anticipate a large and interesting meeting. It is hoped that every church will be represented by a tent, and that all will come to work for God and the salvation of the perishing. Eld. S. W. Thurber, of Minneapolis, Minn., will be at the meeting to labor in the gospel. Other prominent ministers will also be present. And above all, the Lord by his Spirit will be there. Come, then, to the meeting, one and all, and come early. Provisions will be made at an ample boarding tent for victualling all who may desire. The tents will be pitched on the old camp-ground, one half mile east of the depot.

The annual conference will also convene at the same time, but will be so arranged as not to interfere with social meetings. Each church should shnd a delegate or letter, and each minister should report either by person or by letter.

For the Committee, C. W. SMITH, President. C. C. MARSTON, Sec.

THE first quarterly meeting for the Eastern District of Wisconsin A. C. Conference will be held with the church at Big Creek, commencing Friday, Sept. 4th, to hold over the Lord's day. We expect a number of the preaching brethren to be present to assist in preaching the word.

E. P. GRAVES.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Northern Pa. and Southern N. Y. Conference will be held at Little Marsh, Tioga Co., Pa., commencing Sept. 24th, to hold over the following Sabbath. Those coming by R. R. will leave the cars at Middlebury, on the Corning and Wellsboro road. Trains leave Corning at 7.50 A. M. and 7.30 P. M. Teams will meet the trains at Middlebury on Thursday and Friday.

E. C. COWLES, President.
J. W. TAYLOR, Secretary.

NOTICE.—As I expect my labors in this section will soon close, I would say I shall be ready to go and preach "the gospel of the kingdom" anywhere, as the Lord may open the way, the coming fall and winter. Any wishing to correspond with me can direct for the present to A. P. MOORE, Linden, Genesee Co., N. Y.

ARTICLES found on the Springfield camp-ground: One pair men's leather shoes; one pair men's rubbers; one Jubilee Harp; one Testament; one pair of gloves; one veil; a small rag carpet. The owners can have the articles by describing them, and paying charges.

HIRAM MUNGER, Chicopee Falls, Mass.

HAVING closed my labors with the church at Clinton, Clinton Co., Iowa, I am now at liberty to go into other fields as the Lord may direct, and brethren and friends may desire. I expect to return to Illinois as soon as convenient. My address for a short time, until further notice, is Albany, N. Y., No. 14 Bleecker Place.

SILAS B. MABEY.

Mechanic Falls Campmeeting.

Providence permitting, a campmeeting will be held at Mechanic Falls, Me., commencing SATURDAY, SEPT. 5TH, to continue over Sunday, Sept. 13th. Provision will be made for board and horse keeping. The boarding tent is under the management of Bro. J. Moulton, who will furnish single meals,—breakfast or supper at 35 cts. each; dinner 50 cts.; or 85 cts. per day. The stable is managed by the committee the same as last year. Teams will be provided to convey all from the depot to the ground who wish to ride. The fare on the Grand Trunk Road will be about one half the usual rate. The Maine Central utterly refuse to make any reduction of fare.

It is expected that Brn. Couch, Stockman, Phelps, and others will be at this meeting.

Committee: M. H. Mitchell, C. Dennen, I. N. Thompson, Geo. Humphrey, Joshua Howard.

PORTLAND AND OGDENSBURG R. R.—Persons intending to pass over this railroad to the Mechanic Falls Campmeeting, can secure a return pass free of charge by dropping me a line, stating from what station they are to start.

C. H. SWEET, Steep Falls, Me.

West Hawley Advent Campmeeting.

Two and a half miles from the old time honored camp-ground in Savoy, Mass.

An Advent campmeeting at Fullerville, West Hawley, Mass., will commence Saturday evening, August 29th, and continue through one week, including two Sabbaths, and closing Monday morning, Sept. 7th. Good and able preachers from abroad are engaged to preach the word during the meeting. Board will be provided for those who wish, by the day, or through the meeting. Those wishing to board themselves, bring your provisions with you; or, if you prefer, you can have at common prices the provisions you want at a large grocery store near by. The large Hoosick Valley preaching tent will be on the ground for meetings, and also for lodging to all those who come to camp out during the meetings. Those who intend to camp out nights, should bring an empty bed-tick, blankets, etc.

It is evident from an extraordinary increase of the last-day tokens, that this will be the last great gathering of those who love Christ's appearing and kingdom, who are dwelling in this Hoosick mountain region. Brethren and sisters, do lay aside all your cares and labor, for one week's rest at this feast of tabernacles. Those coming with teams will find ample provision for their horses.

H. K. FLAGG, A. W. SIBLEY, E. MCCULLOCK, } Committee.

VERMONT CONFERENCE.—The next annual Advent Conference will be held on the camp-ground, at Bethel, commencing Wednesday, Sept. 9th, at four o'clock P. M. Each church is entitled to one delegate, and one additional delegate to every ten above the number of ten. Let this conference be fully represented, and thus show your interest in the cause we so much love.

R. N. STETSON, Sec'y.

TENT MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a tent meeting at Groveland, Mass., on the Newburyport Branch R. R., three miles from Haverhill, commencing Tuesday evening, Sept. 8th, and continue afternoons and evenings through the week, and over Sunday, Sept. 13th.

ENOCH MORRILL.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The first quarterly meeting of the A. C. Quarterly Conference of N. W. Kansas, for the second conference year, will be held, the Lord willing, with the A. C. Church of West Creek, Republic county, commencing Friday evening, Sept. 25th, and continuing over Sunday, and as long as the interest demands. Bro. J. C. Smith, State Evangelist, is expected to be present with the State Mission Tent, to assist in preaching; also Sr. M. J. Clark is expected to be present to preach the word. All of like precious faith are cordially invited to attend.

E. N. BLISS, Pres.
J. S. THORP, Sec.

DISTRICT MEETING.—The Bolton District Meeting, the fourth and last of the Conference year, will be held in the Page school-house, East Bolton, P. Q., to commence Thursday, Sept. 3d, at two P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. A full attendance is earnestly desired and expected. Let the true friends of the cause of the coming Savior come together from Magog, Orford, East and West Bolton, and parts adjacent, to confer upon its wants, and unite in earnest labor for its promotion. Ministers, official and leading members, are especially expected to be present. Let all the friends circulate the appointment. Elders Marsh and Chadsey, and others from the Farnham District, are expected to attend. Come, all who can, and unite in the good work. CHAS. P. DOW.

KANSAS CAMPMEETINGS.—The Northern Campmeeting of Advent Christians of Kansas will convene at Clyde, Cloud Co., Kansas, on Thursday, Sept. 10th, the Lord willing, and continue over two Sundays. The State tent will be on the ground, which will contain five hundred people. The following preachers will be there to preach the word: Eld. J. C. Smith, State Evangelist; Eld. Virgil Hunt, Asst. State Evangelist; Elder R. F. Clark, and Mrs. Clark. Others are expected. We have written to Bro. Sheldon to be present, and shall do all we can to have him there. The following have been appointed as committee of arrangements, and are prepared to be on the ground the day appointed, to make full arrangements. I will be there to meet you, if the Lord will: Frank Wilson, Chairman, Clyde, Cloud Co.; W. H. Rich, Clifton, Washington Co.; T. J. Hay, Peach Creek, Wash. Co.; C. D. Potter, Peach Creek, Wash. Co.; J. Roberts, Lake Sibley, Cloud Co.; C. M. Collins, Bransford, Washington Co.; B. S. Conley, Glen Elder, Mitchell Co.

Now, my dear brethren and sisters, and all who love Jesus, we want a general rally from all quarters at this meeting. Shall we have it? Let us give up our worldly business and pleasures for a little time, and come and work for the Lord, that our souls may be blest, and sinners converted and come to Jesus. Preaching brethren who preach the word are invited to attend. Let your baskets be well filled. Come equipped for camping. All bring tents who can. R. F. CLARK, Sec., Peach Creek, Washington Co., Kansas.

THE IOWA GENERAL UNION CONFERENCE AND CAMPMEETING will be held in Brooklyn, Poweskeik Co., Iowa, beginning Sept. 11th, and holding over two Sundays. A boarding tent will be on the ground, where board can be obtained at reasonables rates. We desire to see a large attendance at this meeting. Bring your tents and bedding. J. RIDLEY, Secretary.

P. S. The conference will convene during the first part of the meeting. J. R.

MRS. E. S. JENNINGS will commence a series of meetings at Barnes' Corners, Lewis Co., N. Y., on Sunday, Sept. 13th, to continue over the 20th. The friends in that vicinity will please address me at that place. E. S. J.

CORRECTION.—The postage on the "History of the Advent Message," will be 20 cts., the postage on books having been reduced one half.

I. C. WELLCOME.

☞ LOST at Alton Bay campmeeting, my pocket gold pen, with gutta percha case and pencil.

A NEW BOOK.
"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL
An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"
BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.
Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc. The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

THE DIVINE LIGHT.

Lead us, O effulgent Light,
O'er life's dark, uncertain way;
Lead us through the realm of night,
To the splendors of thy day.

Weak we are without thy strength;
Faithless, but for faith from thee;
Blind, yet may our eyes at length,
Through thine own, be made to see.

Not a single step alone
Can we with assurance take,
Yet with thee, no trembling one
But its sure ascent will make.

Step by step the height shall yield,
Till the uttermost is won,
And the restful, heavenly field
Crowns the weary labor done.

There, no hindering stone can fall
To obstruct the level way;
There, no faithlessness can thrall
Eyes that greet the certain day!

Light sufficing! be our guide,
Hide no more thy radiant grace;
Lead us, till the throne beside,
We behold thee face to face.

LAST-DAY PERILS.

T. S. SCOVILLE.

Noticing in your issue of the 5th, "Signs of the Times," I am reminded of some other signs. At my residence, on one of the principal streets and thoroughfares of the city of Elmira, N. Y., I see from my window hundreds of gay carriages going and coming on the Sabbath, towards a beautiful lake and park in the suburbs, called Lake Eldridge, after its owner, through whose private generosity this lake and park have been called into notice, by an immense outlay of his own money. The whole is thrown open to the people free to the poorest as well as to the richest; and what is better than all, there is no place to spend money for anything on the whole grounds, which virtually renders all who visit it free and equal. But my design was not to speak of parks, or other pleasurable matters, except as connected with the phases of human life. I see the clergy leave off preaching in the heated term, close their churches, and leave the sheep to mix up with the world for two or three months in a year. Stray sheep are always in danger; so stray christians learn to live loosely.

The tendency of the church of Christ on earth is downward into the world. In the first place, they have elected worldly men trustees, who govern the financial; and the spiritual is too closely connected with the financial to allow this safely. No church ought ever to permit it. These worldly trustees want a finer church, finer organ, more exquisite music, and withal a pastor "who will draw,"—which means, be fashionable, collect more people, and get more money to run the machine on a grand scale; therefore the poor, humble christian comes into the church so finely fitted up, sees his fellow-christian with finer cloth and silks than usual, and withal there is so much more to pay than there used to be, that, in the first place, he cannot stand the show of architecture, and feels himself out of his element. He says, This is for the rich, and not for me; and seeing all the well-to-do dressed so much finer than they used to, he feels they must look down upon him, and so feels afraid to approach them. When the contribution box comes about, often laden with dollars, he has but a dime to contribute, and again he says, No place for me. The result is, he gravitates outward, takes his love of Christ with him, and leaves the great church to those who can afford it; therefore, the poor have not the gospel.

Our friend, the lake owner, in his generosity, having an eye only to the enjoyment of the people, hires a splendid cornet band, at a cost of forty dollars per a Sabbath day, and says to everybody, Come and enjoy my park and the music, and a ride on the waters, and be happy. This is very pleasant to the poor, who have but the one day of rest, and they go there. So these poor too, who love Jesus, feel more at home in the park than in the church, they go and enjoy with the world, while the weather is hot and the priests have gone for the same purpose away from home. Then, withal, our clever townsman, who owns the park, has invited the Young Men's Christian Association to have preaching at five o'clock each Sabbath, when the band march from one stand to another with martial airs, and assist in the musical features of the worship. This is mixing the world, the flesh and the devil all in one mass, like Barnum, who overcomes the scruples of christians to a circus by having a few animals, musty wax figures, and poppet shows mixed in, to call the unwary, or overcome religious scruples by the immense size of his great show. So now we see christians going to all shows without scruple, though sometimes they take a dram. They go with the world to lakes and parks, and sometimes on excursions, on the Sabbath day. We see the churches run with cook-stoves and feeding arrangements, and for a change theatrical performances, musical entertainments, fairs, grab-bags, and oyster suppers, while the people fold their hands in pious silence, and take their religion as manufactured to order.

I wonder what the early disciples would think of this way of serving up religion. Paul would repeat again, "I am of all men most miserable." I hear him say: I spent my life in servitude and toil, working for Jesus, and the good of a lost world. O, if I had only known this modern, easy way, how much trouble it would have saved me. If these are not signs of the last days, please tell us where to find them. "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God"; so says the prophet of "the last days." The church is sinking, sinking into the slime of the world, instead of lifting the world up to a higher standard. "How long, O Lord?" how long? When will the Master come?

AN EARNEST WORD.

Ministers of Christ! Men of God! to your knees for oil, to your Bible for light. Away with your trapping of worldly policy. Strip your party-colored robes of Satan's weaving. Take to your locusts and wild honey. Have done with the poisonous dishes of man's providing. Strengthen your loins as with a girdle, with the promise of his coming, with the blessed hope of the glorious appearing of the great God and your Savior, and let your voice be a united voice—the voice of one crying in the midst of this wilderness of apostasy, blasphemy, ignorance, pollution, and sin—"Prepare the way of the Lord." Thus will you be "like unto men that wait for their Lord;" and take the promise for your comfort, "When he cometh and shall find you thus watching; verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make you sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve you."—Rev. Robert Atkins.

THE LAW OF GOD'S HOUSE—HOLINESS.

"Thou son of man, show the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities; and let them measure the pattern. And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, show them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof; and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them. This is the law of the house: upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house." Ezek. 43: 10-12.

Yes, the law of God's house is a law of holiness. His house is the church. "In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." We must preach holiness to the church; holiness as a specialty; that members of the church may see themselves as they are, and see what they should be. Then, if they are "ashamed of their iniquities," show them how they may walk in all the "ordinances of the Lord blameless." Holiness in heart, and holiness in life, word and thought, in going out and coming in, is not only to be preached from the pulpit, but it is to be the theme of the pen. "Write it in their sight." It is to be proclaimed for the hearing of the ear, and written for the seeing of the eye. "The whole limit" of the house is to be "most holy." Every believer is required to be wholly sanctified. There is no exception made, no distinction. "The whole limit" is to be "most holy"; not almost, but eminently, completely, thoroughly holy. "This is the law of the house." It is required; and if required, it is the privilege of every one. Are we all striving to keep this law? We may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them. This we may do by plunging first into the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness. Plunge in, plunge in NOW.—Sel. by G. E. Merrill, Worcester, Mass.

HOME.

S. S. CHRISTMAN.

"Home is not merely four square walls,
Though with pictures hung and gilded;
Home is where affection calls,
Filled with shrines the hearth hath builded.
Home! go watch the faithful dove,
Sailing 'neath the heavens above us;
Home is where there is some to love,
Home is where there is some to love us."

I was forcibly struck with the above lines, with the perfect truthfulness and simplicity of style with which the writer gives expression to her ideal of an earthly home. Alas! how many an earthly home is destitute of that holiest and strongest of all ties that binds the hearts of human beings together—love. But there remaineth therefore a rest for the people of God, and that rest will be enjoyed when we get home; not here, where everything is constantly shifting, and change is written on everything of an earthly nature; not here, where fragrant flowers bloom for a day, then wither and fade forever; where sickness and sorrow, pain and death carry their despotic sway in every household; not here, where the confined forms of those we love are being daily carried from our sight, and our hearts are left crushed and bleeding, with only the hope of meeting them again at the last day; not here, where every sunbeam has its shadow, and every joy its grief, and every day its night; not here, where the short and fitful summers with their transient foliage come like a bird on the wing to fan us with their balmy breath, as it passes; and the faded leaf, and frosty air, hushing the songs of birds, tell us that winter is nearer with its icy touch, which reminds us of withered hopes and joys forever fled. Oh! no. That rest of which the apostle speaks is to be enjoyed only when the whole family, the redeemed of the Lord, shall return, and come to Zion with singing, and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away forever.

Oh! what greetings there will be, when we all get home; the whole family, the church of the first born, the spirits of just ones made perfect. There will be our home, yes, our eternal home, forever and ever with God our Father, and Jesus our elder Brother. And the former home and events of this life shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. Praise the Lord for that promise. The fulness of joy in that home will be complete—all love and glory.

Dear friends in Christ, take heed to yourselves, that no man take your crown. I am fully satisfied that Satan is trying every one of God's children. Beware of his devices. He that shall endure unto the end shall be saved. But there must be unity here among the disciples of the Lord, or how can there be when we get home? We must be one in Christ before the gathering time shall come. How can there be division in the kingdom of God? There cannot be. As love will be the controlling element in our heavenly home, so must it be among the family while journeying there. As I have loved you, said Christ, so love ye one another. Oh, blessed love! Oh, precious Jesus! who has gone to prepare a place for us—that glorious city for which Abraham looked—our eternal home.

Everything tells us in this world, in tones that cannot be mistaken, that we are nearing with mighty swiftness that final crisis which will forever decide our weal or woe. The earth is filled with violence. Famines, floods, fearful tornadoes, fires, earthquakes, plagues of Egypt, crimes of all descriptions, are rapidly on the increase. Trouble everywhere seems to be all the cry. God help us to watch and pray, that we may escape the things that are coming on the earth, and stand before Jesus; for some will say, "The great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" They will call for rocks and mountains to hide them from that face we so much long to behold. That matchless voice, in tones of sweetest music, shall welcome us to the marriage feast, within those mansions not made with hands, in our Father's house.

"Oh home, sweet, sweet home!
Receive me, dear Savior, in glory my home," where changes never may come, nor the taint of sin to mar our perfect bliss in that heavenly country, towards which, as pilgrims and strangers, we are now journeying, and every day brings us nearer. We can now enjoy our anticipations here, but no imagination of ours can ever bring to our mind's eye a picture of the reality of what God has in store for all them that love him. So says the apostle.

What a glorious prospect for the church of Christ! As for me, the assurance of again clasping to my heart the forms of those whom I have laid in the lonely tomb to rest in silence and darkness, till the trump of God shall rouse them to lfie everlasting, is enough to cause me to forget the things which are behind, and to press forward to the things which lie before, where summer never ends, where flowers never fade, nor lose their sweetness; where our sky is never dimmed by a cloud, and our hearts never saddened by one pang of sorrow; where we never shall cease to eat of the tree of life, that shall grow by the banks of that river of waters, beside which we shall wander with our loved ones by our side; where birds of beauty, with their songs of melody, mingle their harmonies with those of saints and angels to Him who dwelleth among them, Jesus the Lamb, where loved ones never part, and all is peace and joy forever. Such will be our home.

Herkimer, N. Y.

STOPPED IN THE WAY.

Rev. W. E. Boardman describes the difficulties in the way of many who would seek heart purity. They are words fitly spoken:—

1. Fear of the brand, is one great difficulty. Not merely the brand of "perfectionism," this aside, we shrink from being marked as peculiar amongst christians. We should not certainly greatly fear to wear the star of an earthly nobility or knighthood in the army of Jesus is another thing.

Havelock fought three battles against terrible odds, to gain his first honors from the queen. But they were not his severest struggles nor his greatest victories. Many more he fought afterwards before he forced his way, at last, into Lucknow; but these were not his hardest contests either. The two battles with his threefold foe, the world, his own heart, and Satan, the first on the "General Kyd," and the last at Fort William, were the most trying of his life. Especially the last, when he put on the whole armor of salvation, and determined to "stand up for Jesus," even though it should cost him the loss of all favor and friendship and promotion from the crown. To be branded a saint, was another and a very different honor to look to, than to have the star of knighthood upon his breast, and the title, "Sir Henry, K. C. B.," prefixed and suffixed to his name.

But so it is. This battle must be fought, and he who conquers in it, comes to be willing to wear whatever title of reproach the world may see fit to confer. There is no victory without out.

2. Fear of becoming ultra. The danger of being led into fanaticism and error is another difficulty at the outset. And there is danger of this. Satan delights in nothing so much, if we will go forward, as to mislead us or to urge us on over the bounds of truth and wisdom out into the fields of extravagance and folly. Then, too, though old to the Bible, and to the experience of those who have gone before us, every step of real progress is new to us. We are blind to all before us, however clearly we see the ground already passed over, and our subtle enemy is always ready to decoy us into the specious network of some trap set for the unwary.

We cannot, therefore, be too careful. The fear is a wholesome one, for the danger is real. We are not without melancholy warnings in the many cases of those who have been duped in this way, and destroyed to all usefulness in this world.

Let us beware first of all of taking impulse, or suggestions, or the inner light, for our guide. Let us bring our own impulses and suggestions to the test of God's holy word. The inner light, if it be not according to the revealed truth of God, is only darkness. And if the light within us be darkness, how great is that darkness!—The mariner will hardly be so foolish as to supersede the chart by following his own fancies upon the sea. If he should, however, some rock, or shoal, or reef, or whirlpool, would bring him up while he was sailing in fancied security, and scatter his hopes and his cargo, and the fragments of his ship, with his crew and himself, upon the raging waves of the deep. Satan has that man fairly in his snares, whom he can get to put his own suggestions or impulses, under any name whatever, whether of the inner light, or a guardian spirit, or the Spirit of God, in place of the Bible as the chart of faith and of life.

Let us make sure, also, that we have the Bible truth, and not merely Bible words. It is a favorite and frequent thing with the arch deceiver, to couch his own lies in words of the Scripture. He takes out and leaves behind the kernels of truth, and catches the unwary with the empty chaff of mere Scripture phraseology. Beware of him.

But then, if common sense and common prudence do demand of us care lest we be deceived and ensnared, are we, therefore, to be stopped at the threshold of all that is good and great? No.

Rather let us be sure we are right, and then, with our face as a flint, yet with the docility of the child, and with the firm tread of a mind made up, and a faith leaning upon God, let us push resolutely forward to the conquest. There is just one thing that Satan likes better than to lure us into fanaticism, and that is to frighten us back from any great step of real advancement into the wilderness of doubt, and the tortuous paths of unbelief and sin.—Adv. of Chris. Holiness.

A BROKEN STRAND.

S. WOODRUFF.

A Bro. came to our house the other day to borrow my boy's fishing net. When we came to examine the net, we found several broken strands, which caused several holes. This forbade all effort with the net until repaired, and every broken strand fastened again. In years gone by, I have helped drag many nets. Ofttimes, old sunken logs and crags of various kinds have caught and broken a few strands, and when we drew the net to shore, nearly all of the fish had escaped through those broken strands.

Walking in a village one Monday morning in company with a Bro., said he, "I went to hear a young preacher at the big church last evening." While giving me a few ideas of the discourse, he turned and said, "There comes the preacher now." Never was I more disgusted with the sight from one who filled the desk of a large church. He was walking to the depot with head twisted on one side, the whole face disfigured by his endeavoring to keep a cigar in running order at one side of his mouth, much disfiguring his whole manly frame to get rid of the volume of smoke rolling at every puff. I could but remark, A broken strand, a hole in the net. Had I a nice fishing brook or pond, I would not fear that the fish would be diminished by the best of fishers who would drag their net with broken strands; so I would say to men who would be successful in saving perishing men, Beware of broken strands which make a hole in the net.

HOW MUCH DO WE LOVE HIM?

I. I. LESLIE.

How much do we love Christ? Words can never express the amount of love we have for him. By our acts alone can we make known to others the love we bear the Savior. We cannot substitute words for acts in showing the attachment we have to Christ. The extent to which we follow him, walking in his footsteps, alone indicates our love.

How much do I love Jesus? This is known by those who know me, better than by those who only hear me. My life tells if I love Christ. How much I love him all judge who see my daily walk. This judgment is righteous, and there is no appeal from it. We are known and read of all men by our lives, whether we live to Christ or to the world.

How much do we love him? Enough to have forsaken all for him? Has the sacrifice we have made shown that we have loved him with all the heart? Does it now indicate that our affections are all upon him? How much, then, do we love him?

He has shown how much he loved us. No sacrifice was too great for him to make in our behalf. His life of acts tells us how great his love was toward us. Must not our sacrifice for him, and our acts of life show how much we love him? Away, then, with the idea that by our words we can show our love for Christ. Once it did cost much to confess Christ; now it costs nothing. But it still costs everything to show that we love him with all the heart.

WEDDED TO CHRIST.

Jesus my Bridegroom is,
He's made me all his own;
And oh, how very sweet it is
To live for him alone.

The pathway to my home
Lies through a world of foes,
And Satan seeks in every way
My progress to oppose.

He says he'll have me yet,
Escape him I shall not;
But who can say, and bring to pass,
When God commandeth not.

He has no claim on me,
To Christ my spirit flies;
If faithful now, I know I'll meet
My Bridegroom in the skies.

While here, I'll honor him,
Obey, and ever love;
And by and by will celebrate
Our marriage feast above.

TO YOUNG MEN.

It is easier to be a good business man than a poor one. Half the energy displayed in keeping ahead that is required to catch up when behind will save credit, give more time to business, and add to the profit and reputation of your word. Honor your engagements. If you promise to meet a man, or do a certain thing at a certain moment, be ready at the appointed time. If you have a work to do, do it cheerfully, and therefore more speedily and correctly. If you go out on business, attend promptly to the matter on hand, and then as promptly go about your own business. Do not stop to tell stories in business hours.

If you have a place of business, be found there when wanted. No man can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons. If you have to labor for a living, remember that one hour in the morning is better than two at night. If you employ others, be on hand to see that they attend to their duties, and direct with regularity, promptness, and liberality. Do not meddle with any business you know nothing of. Never buy an article simply because the man who sells it will take it out in trade. Trade is money. Time is money. A good business habit and reputation is always money. Make your place of business pleasant and attractive; then stay there to wait on customers.

Never use quick words, or allow yourself to make hasty or ungentlemanly remarks to those in your employ; to do so lessens their respect for you and your influence over them. Help yourself, and others will help you. Be faithful over the interests confided to your keeping, and all in good time your responsibilities will be increased. Do not build until you have arranged and laid a good foundation. Do not—as you hope to work for success—spend time in idleness. If your time is your own, business will suffer if you do. If it is given to another for pay, it belongs to him, and you have no more right to steal it than to steal money. Be obliging. Strive to avoid harsh words and personalities. Do not kick every stone in the path; more miles can be made in a day by going steadily on than by stopping to kick.

Pay as you go. A man of honor respects his word as he does his bond. Ask, but never beg. Help others when you can, but never give when you cannot afford it, simply because it is fashionable. Learn to say No. No necessity of snapping it out dog fashion, but say it firmly and respectfully. Have but few confidants, and the fewer the better. Use your own brains rather than those of others. Learn to think and act for yourself. Be valiant. Keep ahead, rather than behind time.—Church Advocate.

Gems.

— The present only is a man's possession; the past is gone out of his hand, wholly, irrevocably.

THE LISBON EARTHQUAKE.

The following graphic account of the great earthquake at Lisbon, in 1775, is from Lippincott for July. We think that earthquake marked the opening of the sixth seal, mentioned in Rev. 6: 12. M. G.

The morning of Nov. 1st, 1755, dawned serene, but the heavens were hazy. Since midnight the thermometer had risen one degree, and stood at nine o'clock at fourteen above freezing. Reaumer. As it was the feast of All-saints, the churches were thronged from an early hour, and all their altars brilliantly illuminated with thousands of tapers, and decorated with garlands of various tinted muslin and thin silk. At a quarter of ten o'clock, the first shock was felt. It was so slight that many persons attributed it to the passage of heavy wagons in the street, and even to mere fancy. Three minutes afterward, a second shock occurred, so violent that it seemed as if the heavens and earth were passing away. This agitation lasted fully ten minutes, and ere it diminished, the greater portion of the city was in ruins. The dust raised obscured the sun; an Egyptian darkness prevailed, and to add to the universal horror, the fearful screams of the living and the groans of the dying rose through the air.

In twenty minutes all became calm again, and people began to look around them, and consider the best means of escape. Some were for going to the hills, but were soon discouraged from so doing by the rumors that those who had already gone thither were suffocating from the effects of the dense fog of dust which still rose from the falling buildings. Then they rushed toward the quays which line a part of the Tagus, but only to learn the horrible news that these had sunk into the earth, with all the people and edifices upon them.

Those who thought to put to sea were told to look at the river, and lo! in its centre they beheld a whirlpool which was sucking in all the vessels and boats in its vicinity, not a fragment of any of them being ever being seen again. The royal palace had been entirely swallowed up, and over its site is now the vast square of the Baco, or Black Horse, one of the largest public places in Europe. The great library of the Holy Ghost was in flames, and its priceless Moorish and Hebrew manuscripts were fast becoming ashes. The opera-house had fallen in, the Inquisition was no more, and the great church of San Domingo was a heap of stones, beneath which lay crushed to atoms the entire congregation. The Irish church of St. Paul was the death place of a thousand persons, and the palace of Bomposta, where Catherine of Braganza, widow of Charles II., lived and died, had fallen over from the heights on which it was built, and utterly destroyed the poor but populous part of the town which lay beneath it. In a word, where but an hour since was Lisbon was now nothing but desolation.

As to the people, who can describe their condition? At least seventy thousand persons had perished, and the majority of the survivors were cruelly wounded and in an agony of mind and body. Some went mad with fright, some lost forever the power of speech, sinners went about confessing their secret crimes, and fanatics, believing the last day had come, cried out to the horror-stricken multitude "to repent, for that Christ was coming to judge the quick and the dead."

As the day waxed on, the wretched Libbonese grew calmer, and it was universally declared that the safest places, now that the dust was diminishing, were the heights overlooking the city, and thither the majority fled. Here they found the Court assembled, for the Royal family was fortunately at Belem, where, strange to say, the earthquake was scarcely felt at all, and had hastened at once to the hills. The Cardinal Patriarch was here also, and so was Pombal; and these two men, with surprising presence of mind, by their admirable courage, were enabled before night to inspire some feeling of order in the excited throng. The King and Queen behaved nobly, and the young Duke of Lafoens deserves to be immortalized for his splendid conduct. He organized a band of noblemen who went about aiding the wounded, rescuing the children, and even burying the dead.

It was a strange and awful sight to see this multitude gather together on the summit of the hills which once overlooked their magnificent capital, and which now looked down upon a mere mass of smoldering ruins. As day declined and night came on, the Cardinal issued a proclamation, ordering all to kneel in prayer and entreat the mercy of God upon them, and then rose on the air the wailing tone of that saddest of psalms, the Miserere. When the shades of night had fully fallen, a frightful discovery was made; the city was in flames in a hundred places. The conflagration was greatly increased by a strong wind blowing in from the sea. There was now no hope of saving anything, and it was but too well known that thousands of human beings who had taken refuge in the cellars and crypts were being roasted alive.

But if the anxiety of the escaped was dreadful to witness, the scenes within the city itself were even more terrible. Robbers, escaped jail-birds, low sailors, and degraded negroes, formed bands, and went about amidst the ruins, pillaging the wounded of their trinkets, and even murdering those who ventured to oppose their ghastly deeds. The lewd inhabitants of the brothels broke from the rigid restraint in which they were confined by the law and joined the bandits. They plundered such of the wine-stores as were left intact, and maddened with drink and probably with terror, cast off their garments, and went dancing and whooping blasphemous songs through the desolate streets, if such they could now be called, while the lurid light from the innumerable fires cast a blood-colored glow on their naked and contorted forms. They got into the churches, robbed the sacred images, threw the holy vestments over their shoulders, and made the ruined walls re-echo the shouts of their beastly revelry. "It seemed," says Tray Bernando de Carmo, "as if hell had vomited forth its demons, and that the powers of darkness had indeed prevailed."

From the cellars of the houses rose the piercing cries of those who were perishing of their neglected wounds, or suffering from the effect of foul atmosphere. Here a mother wept over the bodies of her children; there a group of timid nuns stood around their Abbess and knew not which way to turn; now a fanatic rushed along howling dismal prophecies; now a long file of white-clad Cistercians passed by reciting mournful prayers; and then again fell upon the ear the horrid maniacal laughter of the gang of lewd women and brutal men at their dreadful revelry. An aged noble woman in full court garments was seen searching among the ruins of her palace for her jewels; and a famous Phryne of the day, Theresa Brandoo, suddenly converted, did such noble deeds of charity that her name deserves to be written in letters of gold.

For fifteen days was the city infested with robbers, until Carvalho, afterward the celebrated Minister Pombal, set an example of courage and energy. He descended into Lisbon, and remained days and nights together in his carriage or on horseback, directing affairs and assisting in clearing away the ruins; he planted soldiers all over the city, and whoever could not give a clear account of the property found in his possession was hung then and there, and three hundred and fifty-seven persons thus perished. Many months elapsed ere tranquility was in a measure restored, and before the people began to think of rebuilding their homes. Indeed, it was at one time almost decided to remove the capital to Rio de Janeiro.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE THREE BIDDERS.

AN INCIDENT IN THE LIFE OF ROWLAND HILL.

Will you listen, young friends, for a moment,
While a story I unfold;
A marvellous tale of a wonderful sale
Of a noble lady of old,—
How hand and heart, at an auction mart,
And soul and body, she sold!

'Twas in the broad king's highway,
Near a century ago,
That a preacher stood—though of noble blood—
Telling the fallen and low
Of a Savior's love, and a home from above,
And a peace that they all might know.

All crowded around to listen;
And they wept at the wondrous love,
That could wash their sin, and receive them in
The mansions preparing above:
While slow through the crowd a lady proud
Her gilded chariot drove.

"Make room!" cried the haughty outrider,
"You are closing the king's highway;
My lady is late, and their Majesties wait:
Give way there, good people, I pray!"
The preacher heard, and his heart was stirred,
And he cried to the rider—"Nay!"

His eye like the lightning flashes;
His voice like a trumpet rings,—
"Your grand fete days, and your fashions and ways,
Are all but perishing things.
'Tis the king's highway, but I hold it to-day,
In the name of the King of kings!"

Then, bending his gaze on the lady,
And marking her soft eye fall,—
"And now in His name, a sale I proclaim,
And bids for this fair lady call.
Who will purchase the whole—her body and soul,
Coronet, jewels, and all?"

"I see already three bidders,—
The World steps up as the first.
'I will give her my treasures, and all the pleasures
For which my votaries thirst;
She shall dance through each day, more joyous and gay,
With a quiet grave at the worst.'

"But out spake the Devil, boldly:
'The kingdoms of earth are mine;
Fair lady, thy name, with an envied fame,
On their brightest tablets shall shine;
Only give me thy soul, and I give thee the whole,
Their glory and wealth to be thine.'

"And pray what hast thou to offer,
Thou Man of Sorrows, unknown?
And he gently said, 'My blood have I shed,
To purchase her for mine own.
To conquer the grave, and her soul to save,
I trod the wine press alone.

"'I will give her my cross of suffering,
My cup of sorrow to share;
But with endless love, in the home from above,
All shall be righted there:
She shall walk in white, in a robe of light,
And a radiant crown shall wear.'

"Thou hast heard the terms, fair lady,
That each hath offered for thee;
Which wilt thou choose, and which wilt thou lose,
This life, or the life to be?
The fable was mine, but the choice is yet thine;
Sweet lady! which of the three?"

Nearer the stand of the preacher
The gilded chariot stole;
And each head was bowed, as over the crowd
The thundering accents roll;
And every word, as the lady heard,
Burned in her very soul.

"Pardon, good people," she whispered,
As she rose from her cushioned seat;
Full well, they say, as the crowd made way,
You could hear her pulses beat;
And each head was bare, as the lady fair
Knelt at the preacher's feet.

She took from her hand the jewels,
The coronet from her brow;
"Lord Jesus," she said, as she bowed her head,
The highest bidder art thou;
Thou gav'st for my sake thy life, and I take Thy offer—and take it now.

"I know the world and her pleasures,
At best they but weary and cloy;
And the tempter is bold, but his honors and gold
Prove ever a fatal decoy:
I long for thy rest—thy bid is the best;
Lord, I accept it with joy!

"Give me thy cup of suffering,
Welcome, earth's sorrow and loss;
Let my portion be to win souls to thee,
Perish her glittering dross.
I gladly lay down her coveted crown,
Savior, to take thy cross."

"Amen!" said the holy preacher,
And the people wept aloud.
Years have rolled on—and they all have gone,
Around that altar who bowed.
Lady and throng have been swept along
On the wind, like a morning cloud.

But the Savior shall yet claim his purchase,
And around his radiant seat,
A mightier throng, in an endless song
The wondrous story repeat;
And a form more fair, while bending there,
Shall cast her crown at his feet.

So then in eternal glory
She'll rest from her cross and care;
Then do as she did, accept the same bid,
That you the same glory may share.
With an endless reward in the joy of your Lord,
O! will you not meet with her there?

PICKING BERRIES.

When I was a boy my father was a poor minister. We lived very plain, but that never troubled us. We always had enough wholesome food to eat, and my mother was one who always contrived to have a neat suit of clothes for each of her children. One day, when I was a little fellow, several little boys and girls came along on their way to pick huckleberries; they invited me to go with them, and when I saw their bright faces and little baskets I wanted to go. So I went into the house and asked my mother. I saw she favored me, but said I must ask my father.

"And where is father?"

"Up in the study, of course."

So up I bounded, hat in hand, and gently knocked at his door. He bade me come in.

"Well, Johnny, what is your wish?"

"I want, sir, to go with the children and pick berries!"

"Where are they going?"

"Only to Johnson's hill, sir."

"How many children are there?"

"Seven besides myself. Please let me go."

"Well, you may go. Be a good boy, and use no bad words."

Away I scampered, and just got to the bottom of the stairs when my father called me back. "Oh, dear, it's all over now. He is going to take it all back," I thought to myself. Trembling, I again stood in the doorway.

"Johnny," said my father, "I have a word of advice to give you. You will find the berries growing on the bushes, standing in clumps, all over the lot. The children will pick a few minutes at one place, and then go off to another, in hopes of finding better picking, and thus they will spend half the afternoon in roaming from one place to another. Now my advice to you is, that when you find pretty fair picking, stick to that spot and keep picking there. Your basket at night will show whether my advice is good or not."

Well, I followed my father's advice, and though the children would wander about and cry out, "Oh, Johnny, here is a world of them, and here you can fill your basket in less than no time," yet I stuck to my fair picking place. When we got through at night, to the astonishment of every one, and my own no less, it was found that I had nearly twice as many berries as any other one. They all wondered how it was, but I knew; and that was the lesson that made me a rich man. Whenever I have found "pretty fair picking," I have stuck to it.—Wayside.

A GOOD CAUSE makes a stout heart and a strong arm.

BE KIND IN LITTLE THINGS.—The sunshine of life is made up of very little beams, that are bright all the time. In the nursery, on the play-ground, and in the school-room, there is room all the time for little acts of kindness, that cost nothing, but are worth more than gold or silver. To give up something, where giving up will prevent unhappiness—to yield, when persisting will chafe and fret others—to go a little round rather than come against another—to take an ill word or a cross look, rather than return it; these are the ways in which clouds and storms are kept off, and pleasant, smiling sunshine secured even in the humble home, among very poor people, as in families in higher stations. Much that we term the miseries of life would be avoided by adopting this rule of conduct.—The Household.

WASTE OF LIFE.

It is plain that God designed to sustain man by food, air, water, light, heat, exercise, the protection of clothes and of houses, and by refreshing sleep. Now, as these are all necessities of his nature, he should so use them as to secure the end designed by the Creator in their use. It is the strange perversity of man's evil nature that enables him to turn all God's blessings into curses, or to use the good things which God has given him in such a manner as to make them productive of serious evil. Men should govern their appetites as to the kinds of food, the quantity eaten, the times of eating, etc. If these things alone were regarded, there would be no dyspepsia and very little headache in the world. From the first sin in Eden till the present time, men have been constantly engaged in destroying themselves by what they put into their mouths. They cannot, or rather they will not, be persuaded that there is any importance attached to the government of their appetites. And so they act with reference to all the things which God has made necessary to human life.

If people could realize the value of pure air, and of plentiful sunlight, and of sufficient and suitable exercise, or of keeping within the bounds of moderation where one's employment is severe manual labor, and of wearing such clothing as shall furnish necessary protection to the person, especially to the feet and limbs, and that shall not hinder the free circulation of the blood, and of securing sufficient and refreshing sleep, and would be careful in all these things, they might avoid a very large part of the physical troubles they now suffer, and might save a large measure of vital force which they now prodigally waste.

Perhaps no one item is worthier of attention than that concerning the value of good sleep. We should never lie down to sleep in an irritated, fretful, peevish, or impatient state of mind. Sleep, under such conditions, is not worth half what it was designed of God to be worth to us. It is our duty when we give ourselves up to sleep to do it with serenity, and peacefulness, and trust. This is the way to have sleep that will renew our strength, as God designed that it should be renewed each night for the labor and toil of the day to come.

But how shall we secure this condition for our sleep? Evidently there is but one way for this. We must live each day in this frame of mind from morning till night. This is what Paul means by having the peace of God rule in our hearts. In truth, it is worth as much to our health through the day as it is during the night. It does not follow that we are never to feel pain because of things that go wrong, nor never to take burdens caused by the wrong courses of others, which it may be our work to correct and put away; but all this may be done without fretfulness and peevishness on our part. If we fall into this, we wound our own souls, and we do not thereby benefit others, or in any way contribute toward the removal of the evil.

It is folly to fret over things that we cannot help. No one will deny this. It is also folly to fret over things we can help; for a wiser course would be to attend to the correction of them. And these two classes of things are all that there is for us to fret over. The burdens of life are heavy enough without our adding to them by fretting. No small share of the friction which deranges the vital machine comes directly from fretfulness.

It is our duty, as it is our privilege, to preserve our vital forces. We can do this by regarding the laws of our being. We need not waste our life forces. If we will carefully preserve what we now possess, there are few of us who may not even now secure to ourselves a good measure of health. Let us be true to ourselves, and we shall find that God will co-operate with us by the restorative power he has put within us.—Health Reformer.

IGNORANCE A CAUSE OF DISEASE.—The more thoroughly the causes of disease are understood, the more and more are they found traceable to a violation of hygienic laws. If the ravages of cholera, of yellow fever and typhoid may be controlled in a great measure by the observance of such laws, why may not scarlet fever, measles and whooping cough—those scourges of infant life—be prevented, or very much limited? The prevailing sentiment that all children must necessarily have these diseases once, finds no support whatever in the nature of physiology or in the principles of hygiene. The fact is already well established that the spread and violence of scarlet fever, by isolation, cleanliness and ventilation, are very much modified, and, in some instances, entirely prevented.

When the community realizes fully that the means of preserving health, especially in early life, are placed, in a great measure, in its own hands, a far higher estimate will be placed upon the value of human life, and the responsibility for its preservation will be found to depend in a great measure upon human efforts.—Dr. Nathan Allen.

The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

"YE ARE THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD."

Christian, tell me, is thy light
Burning with a steady ray?
Shining 'mid this world's dark night,
Guiding travelers on their way?
Is it beaming out afar,
Like the brilliant evening star?

On life's dangerous, stormy deep,
Many souls imperilled glide;
Lo! their eyes on thee they keep,
Trusting in thy light to guide.
May they safely trust in thee,
On this fearful, rock-bound sea?

Dost thou trim thy lamp each day?
Is it always bright and clear?
Can the loved ones round thee say,
By thy light we'll safely steer
To the blest port from above,
To the heaven of peace and love?

Christian, keep a steady light,
Fed by the pure oil of grace;
Shedding beams so clear and bright,
All may see its glorious rays,
Then the world our Christ shall own,
And to him the nations turn.

Oh! if all our lamps would burn
With a brighter, steadier light,
Soon would the millennial morn
Burst in glory on our sight;
Girdled with its golden rays,
Earth would all be filled with praise.

THE SPEEDY PERSONAL RETURN OF CHRIST.

I think the angels are glad to hear what we are talking about, especially those two who, eighteen hundred years ago, stood by the group, gazing steadfastly up into heaven, and said, "Ye men of Galilee, . . . this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." They know that the church is not always to stand wistfully gazing after Christ. Oh no! our separation is not to last forever. We must go on calmly, patiently waiting awhile, and soon, very soon, will come the glad reunion. They saw him go up, and did they sorrow? No! they worshiped him; that was the first thing; and then they returned to Jerusalem with great joy, and were continually praising and blessing God. They were not weeping and lamenting their disconsolate condition, but they set about working zealously for their Lord, waiting, watching, hoping for his promised return.

Oh, brethren! great joy must fill our hearts as it filled theirs, at the thought that we shall yet see him as he is. We shall be happy to the fullest extent of our capacity for happiness; we shall see not him alone, but all that we have loved in him and for his sake, and after all the restraints and hindrances we have known here to the enjoyment of our adoption, we shall enter into the full enjoyment of the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

But there is gravity as well as joy in the thought of the second coming of Christ. The second Psalm presents the serious side. Christ will come as a Master to take account of his servants. He will determine as to the merits of the service of each, not they themselves, nor their fellow servants. From his determination there will be no appeal: "Well done, good and faithful," or, "thou wicked and slothful servant," will express the unalterable and final decision.

Wicked and slothful! Why? What had that servant done? Nothing. Nothing? Yes! that is wickedness on the part of a servant of Christ, which would not be wickedness in another. To please self when we have such a Master is wickedness.

The blessed hope of his second coming must not be kept out of sight. It must not be shelved. Every day we must stand ready, and though I cannot tell you when the Master will come, I can inquire, Are you prepared for the coming? How are you getting on in your service? How are you spending the time of his absence? Are you smiting any of your fellow servants, or speaking evil of them? Criticising any of them, judging and finding fault, because they are busy in another room, and doing a different work to yours? Oh, brethren! you have no time for that! Judge not; judge yourselves only. To his own Master you brother stands or falls. Let us look well to our own service, that we be not exposed to the judgment of those who, though they knew their Lord's will, yet did it not.

The church stands like Israel of old, a witness alike of the past and of the future. Israel had a double testimony. They bore witness to the deliverance from Egypt, and the triumph of the Red Sea. They bore witness also to Messiah the Prince, the Shiloh that was to come, the expected Son of David. Their past history and their future prospects alike constituted them a separate people. They had memories which none beside could share—hopes to which others were strangers. The church of Christ has the same. She witnesses to his first coming, and the redemption that it wrought; she witnesses also to his second coming to judge the world and reign in righteousness.

The church ought to return to a more vigorous and earnest testimony to this latter truth—to the second coming of her Lord. It formed an integral part of her witness, as of her hope, in the beginning; but it has been too much dropped from her witness in after ages; and yet no truth so checks the pride and haughtiness of men. When Christ comes to judge, he will, as we have heard, overturn! overturn! overturn! He will bring down everything that is high and lifted up; he will humble the lofty, and exalt them of low degree. The world talks of progress, and fancies it is by degrees approaching perfection. The church too often falls into a similar strain; but no! Christ will come and judge the oppressor, and deliver the poor and needy, and bring in everlasting righteousness.

I am not sure, but I question if we give the world a full gospel, if we leave out this last great feature of our testimony. The first coming of Christ will do for salvation; but salvation after all imperfect until the second coming. We must tell the nations of the world that we are saved by hope; he will come again and save us, that is our testimony—save us from persecution, save us from an evil world, save us from ourselves, deliver us from death; he will come the second time without sin unto salvation.

Our gospel is not that we shall go to heaven when we die; it is not come death, or come judgment, or come millennium, or come the heavenly Jerusalem. It is come Jesus! Jesus is coming—Jesus, who is worth a thousand millenniums! "This same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go."

Now, I question if this is sufficiently impressed on the church in our own land, and I gravely question if it is presented as it ought to be in missionary spheres, where the very doctrine is new. And yet when the Thessalonian idolaters turned to God from idols, it was not only to serve him, but to wait for his Son from heaven. How were those early christians so invigorated and encouraged? How were they nerved to suffer and to do? How? By the hope of the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ! What was the Roman Emperor to men who were looking out for the return of King Jesus? Why should we not put the same hope before converts from heathenism now? Oh, that we may be faithful witnesses, not to the sufferings of Christ alone, but to the glories that are to follow. Much has been accomplished by the testimony "Christ died for our sins," but to limit our preaching to this is not to follow the apostolic example; we must add, "he rose," and we must not omit, he "cometh with ten thousand of his saints," to be glorified and admired in them; he cometh to sit on the throne of his father David, and as the greater than Solomon to reign before his ancients gloriously.—Signs of Our Times.

"ABIDE IN THE SHIP."

J. W. THOMAS.

"Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved." ACTS 27: 31.

Paul was an old sailor. Not from occupation, but from frequency of travel. He knew what it was to be in "perils on the deep," and no doubt he could have taken a vessel across the Mediterranean quite as safely as any experienced sea-captain. He was now making a trip to Rome; and this voyage, though one of the most perilous, was yet the most successful voyage he ever made. The ship was lost, but he had a blessed revival, and saved all on board, two hundred and seventy-five souls. Paul was shipped as a prisoner, but he was promoted to captain, for he had the whole crew looking to him for salvation.

It takes God to work. He can send out a storm on the sea, and bring wicked sailors and soldiers to bow at his feet in answer to the prayers of a righteous prisoner. Paul gave the centurion and managers of the ship good advice, saying, "Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage; not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives. Nevertheless, the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul. And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter . . . And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete. But not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon. And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive. And running under a certain island, which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat; which, when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, strake sail, and so were driven. And we, being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship . . . And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away." Man's extremity is God's opportunity. Paul was calm in the midst of it all. After long abstinence, he stood forth in the midst of them and said, "Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss. And now I exhort you to be of good cheer; for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship. For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve, saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar; and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee. Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer; for I believe God that it shall be even as it was told me."

Blessed faith! What a strong refuge they have who trust in "the living God." Paul was now master of the whole company. God had exalted him in their midst, and they were now to obey his orders. "When the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight, the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country. And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms; and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms. Then fearing lest we should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out upon the stern, and wished for the day. And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved."

Reader, are you in the gospel Ship? Have you fled to Christ for salvation? Are you sailing toward the heavenly port? Abide in the ship. Do not backslide. Stay on board. The land heaves in view. The morning dawns. Wait. The Captain will bring you safe to land.

"Christ is my pilot wise,
My compass is his word;
My soul each storm defies,
Whilst I have such a Lord."

BAPTISM AND RANTISM.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

The two words thus associated together are alike in the source from whence they are derived, and in their construction, but very unlike in their meaning. We propose to consider them, both as to construction and meaning, for the purpose of eliciting truth, and to learn thereby their use and importance to the church of our Lord Jesus Christ. They are words of the class known as derivatives, being Anglicized Greek words, or words constructed into the English language, which are, after all, only Greek words slightly changed from their original orthography. One of them, "baptism," is quite a familiar word, and is known as the name of a religious rite. It is found in the dictionaries as a genuine English word. Theological works contain it, and every one acquainted with its history knows that it has been the subject of much dispute and discussion as to its meaning. It frequently occurs in the New Testament, and is therefore a word of great importance. The other word is not so well known. It has the sad misfortune not to be known at all. It is not in the Bible, nor the dictionaries, nor is its meaning generally discussed or disputed about. We may even be charged with having "coined" it, which, however, is not the case. Still we have imposed upon us the duty of introducing it to our friends, and endeavoring to make them acquainted with it, and of establishing its meaning, and proving its right to a place as a genuine English word, and worthy of its place as the name of an interesting and significant thing. It is certainly a necessity to the language, as events will prove; but it has been tabooed and ignored, and so neglected, that it has never pushed its way out of its Greek hiding-place, nor been brought out; and yet it should be known and recognized, as it has claims and rights which it is culpable to disregard and reject. It should have been in full and familiar use long ago, and not have been so unjustly treated. It has been so treated by calling "Baptism" to the task of doing double duty, and carrying its own meaning and the different meaning of "rantism" beside.

We propose, first of all, to consider the formation of the two words, and their equal claim to a place in the English language, and their meaning, and so divest "baptism" of all its forced meanings, and let it stand by itself in its own true character, so bringing "rantism" to the front out of its obscurity.

We notice first, that both words are derivatives, made from the original Greek, each in the same. They are really but Anglicized Greek words. There are two classes of words in the English language; those which are original to it, and those which are only naturalized foreigners. The pure English words are the Anglo-Saxon; the derivatives are made from other languages, sometimes by slight changes, and sometimes by no change at all. The changes usually consist in dropping the final letter, or letters, which characterize them as words of their native language, and giving them an additional letter, or letters; or leaving them as they are; any way answering the purpose if the word conforms to the English rules of spelling. These derivative words have no English birthright, and derive their meaning, as they do their construction, from the language from which they come. We notice a few of these words for the purpose of coming intelligently to the consideration of the method by which these two words become members of the English family, and their place and meaning there.

Of the words which are merely transferred words, we have such words as "sack," a Hebrew word; and "Adam," also Hebrew; "sack" meaning a bag, and Adam red earth, and used as the name of a man, for which, in the Old Testament translation, "man" is often substituted. From the Greek we have words and parts of words, and some from the Latin; while most of the words which, in the constant inflow, have more recently come into the language, are of French and German origin. The two words we are considering are a specimen of the Greek words, and there are many others. For example, we have the words "misanthrope" and "misanthropic," which are made from the Greek in this way: first, the Greek word is anthropos—"man"; dropping the Greek termination, we have anthrop; but that terminates too abruptly; so, for smoothness, we add an "e," and have anthrope, which, did we require it, might be used instead of the word "man"; but we yet have the good sense to prefer words native to the language, when we have them; and, as "man" is a strong Anglo-Saxon word, we choose it in preference to the Greek word. But we have a use for the Greek word, after all; so we take the Anglo-Saxon prefix Mis, which means "error," or "misapprehension," and have the word misanthrope, an amalgamated word, meaning a wrong apprehension or feeling toward man. Webster defines it strongly as meaning "a man-hater." Then we suffix the syllable "ic," meaning "to pertain to," and we have "misanthropic," which, as Webster defines it, means "a hatred of mankind."

From the Latin we have many, but slightly changed ones. Some of our nouns are borrowed from the Latin supine, or substantival nominative of the noun in the nominative, denoting existence, which is the modification of the Latin infinitive form of the verb; and some of our verbs are made from that infinitive; so that the English nouns and verbs of this class correspond with the Latin nouns and verbs. The rule for the change of the nouns is simply this: change those Latin nouns whose termination is tum, so the termination will be "tion"; and those that terminate with sum, to "sion." In this way we have "conver*tion*," from convertum, and "immersion," from immersum,—convertum being from the verb convertere, from which we have the verb "convert," which is made, as will be seen, by simply dropping the Latin verbial termination ere. Immersum is from emergere, by changing the "e" of the verb into "i." Without that change, we have the English verb "emerge," by dropping the final letters of the Latin verb—re. With it we have immerge, and immerse, "to dip into, or go into by plunging"; and emerge, "to come out of"; both words coming alike from the Latin emergere,—a striking fact, which we shall do well to remember when we come to notice the words we are considering more particularly.

We have thus brought illustrations of the formation of words before our readers, that they may more readily see the principle on which words of other languages become English words; and to make it more clear, as we proceed, that the words in question are as legitimately English words as any other; that baptism is as really an English word as "immersion"; and we shall find "rantism," whatever it may mean, has the same rights and privileges.

It is interesting in this connection, also, to notice that the English language is not strictly an original one; a large part of its words not being original or indigenous to it; so that those who speak it are as often speaking words of a foreign language, as they are those of the Anglo-Saxon. It is not, therefore, a pure language, but is mixed and mingled like the waters of a river, which flow into it from its many confluent streams; and it has one especial excellence,—it has the grand, glorious, strong, old Saxon original, which gives it strength and stability. The multitude of words from the other languages, which are constantly flowing into it, are like the brooks which augment the river, adding to the strength and force of the language, making it brilliant, graceful and flowing, so that it combines majesty and strength, with gentleness, grace and pathos. It is, therefore, a kaleidoscopic language, whose methods of expression may be varied in a thousand beautiful ways, each one peculiarly attractive, and surprisingly grand; or sweet, tender and winning, as the love of a child; thus allowing every writer and speaker a realm of lingual expression all his own, in which he may revel with delight, as in a garden fresh and fragrant; walking as among stately trees and beautiful flowers, and beside flowing, sparkling, and limpid streams, to regale himself at pleasure.

ATONEMENT.

There are three things bearing directly on this great truth, which I know with the most satisfactory assurance. The first is that I am a sinner and need pardon. The second is that my nature is polluted and needs cleansing. The third is the precious fact, that through faith in Christ, I have, and do obtain pardon and purity.

The first and second I know by direct consciousness—or conscious experience. Of the third, I have no less satisfactory and certain assurance, being promised in the revealed truth of God, witnessed to by the Holy Spirit, and revealed by conscious experience.

Very likely I know little about the nature of the atonement, or the manner in which the death of Christ lays an adequate foundation for justification and sanctification.

As a foundation of faith, however, I ask no other consideration, in connection with a consciousness of my necessities, than the plainly revealed fact that God can be just, and justify the believer in Jesus, and, "that the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth from all sin."

Those who came to Christ for healing, did not need, as a condition of believing in him, to understand the manner in which he would effect their cure. That, they probably never knew. They only needed to know that he was able and willing to do this thing for them. This they believed, and the work was wrought.

I have found this Scriptural and old Wesleyan doctrine both safe and successful, and have no inclination to run after modern speculation on this subject. If adhered to, we will be saved from much unnecessary hair-splitting and division among ourselves.—Rev. J. A. Wood.

— Practice flows from principle; for as a man thinks, so will he act.

SEEKING.

Mortal life is given to man, not that he may rest satisfied with what it brings to him, but that he may by its means seek for those things that are connected with eternal life. The great good of man's existence is not here, but hereafter. Temporal blessings produce but a surface tranquility which is easily marred by a reverse of temporal fortune.

In consequence of this we are urged in the Bible to seek for things that belong to heavenly surroundings rather than temporal; to lay up our treasure above that our hearts may also be there; to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and the promise is that all needed temporal blessings shall be bestowed upon us. We are not taught to ignore the possession of temporal things entirely, but to regard them as of such minor importance as to allow them to have no influence over our conduct to cause us to swerve from the right course.

This lesson of seeking has been taught in various ways to the people of God at all times. Abel was taught to seek a redeemer, and illustrated the lesson by the lamb sacrifice on the altar.

Abraham was taught to seek a city whose builder and maker is God, and he illustrated his lesson by going out into a land he had never seen, and sojourning there as a stranger.

Moses was taught to seek one who was to be a leader to Israel, and he illustrated his lesson by leading Israel's host through the wilderness forty years entirely dependent on Jehovah for food and protection, "esteeming the reproach of Christ greater treasures than the riches of Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of reward."

Jesus taught his disciples to seek the kingdom of God, and told them of the "glory of the Father" that should be revealed when the "Son of man" should "sit on the throne of his glory." He taught them of the new earth inheritance; of the reward at the resurrection; of the eternal life to be given when he would "raise them up at the last day." He told them of the temporal estrangements from home and friends that they should endure in this mortal life; of the temporal vicissitudes, losses, and crosses that should be their lot here, with the eternal life in the world to come. And he illustrated his lesson by his course of suffering; "for the joy that was set before him he endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

The apostles were taught to seek those things which are above; to look for a new heavens and a new earth, and they illustrated their lesson by coming out from the world, and separating themselves from worldly pride and ambition, and becoming the off-scouring of all things in the estimation of men.

The things to be sought for are not here, but are laid up in store for those who are faithful to the word of the Lord, and that faithfulness is caused in the present age by an indwelling of the Spirit of God, that gives strength to the soul as it stretches forward to grasp the heavenly promises. But the experience of seeking is in the present life, and that experience is always a legitimate result of the power of the affections, and the extent to which they reach.

It is frequently the case that the christian's affections are perverted from the true source of blessing, and rest upon things that are only given as passing encouragements to press on to the end. For instance: men are frequently taught the great thing to be sought for should be a condition of spiritual feeling, such as shall give them great ecstacy, and strong emotion, and shall lift them up above every feeling of depression, and keep them at all times in a shouting mood. They seek a certain sort of present experience for themselves; will not be satisfied with anything else; and when they can possess the feeling they want, will rest down fully satisfied to proceed no further. You talk to such in their ecstatic condition about the glories of the future; they don't care to hear it, they have all the glory they want now. You speak to them of the resurrection and the kingdom, and they care not for them; they have a kingdom in them, and they are above the thought of a spiritual flesh and bones life. Instead of the Holy Spirit in them being a foretaste of good things to come, it is the substance of all they expect, and as long as they can float in the sea of ecstacy their utmost wish is satisfied. Their only fear is that they shall lose this ecstacy, and then they count their Christianity as all gone, and they mourn the loss of their experience.

Such are like a mariner who sails out upon a sea, not that he may reach any particular port, but that he may float his vessel in deep water, and keep off from sand bars, and out of shallow places, and enjoy himself. Instead of watching the course of the ship by chart and compass, he is ever looking down to see how deep the water is in which his vessel rather floats than sails. He is always heaving the lead, and sounding the depth, and fearing lest he shall run aground. As long as he is afloat he is all right, no matter where port is.

Such a mariner is as likely to drift back to his original moorings as anywhere else. He is very liable to sail into narrow channels and to become cramped and stranded, and to go to wreck amid the tempests and gales that arise in his course.

And so is the christian who is taught to seek the Lord, but only seeks a feeling of joy; who is taught to seek the kingdom of God, but who confines his efforts to a present experience, and thinks more of ecstacy than he does of immortality, and who regards the good feelings of the present life as his highest ambition. The way to enjoy continued peace of soul, and rest in spiritual things, is to seek the Lord, and by perfect confidence to abide in him, and then, whatever experience we may have, we know for ourselves that "he doeth all things well."—*A. GLORY vs. GLORY.

L. C. KERR.

Man is made subject, by submission, to two kinds of glory—natural, and spiritual. While he is in the flesh, or in a sensual state, he is subject to the glory of the natural and carnal mind; but when the man is spiritual, his glory is likewise spiritual. And these two are in direct opposition one to the other. "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be"; and "they that are in the flesh [that live after the flesh] cannot please God" (Rom. 8: 7, 8); so that to glory in the flesh is to glory against the spirit, and vice versa; from which we may infer that whatever we glory in, whether it be our talent, our learning, our ability to perform our task, our strength, either physical or intellectual, our position in life, our health or wealth, our honor or esteem, or anything that we possess, or that of any one else, is all a glory and pride in and of itself, and is against the glory of God. For "thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord." Jer. 9: 23, 24.

Thus we see what we may, and what we may not glory in, in order to have the right glory; and Paul, being possessed of this same kind of glory, said, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Gal. 6: 14. And again, "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are, that no flesh should glory in his presence; but of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption; that, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." I Cor. 1: 26-31.

We understand from this, that is is utterly impossible for a man to glory in any thing that he may possess, and be justified in the eyes of the Lord, which would give veracity to the saying, "For I the Lord thy God am a jealous God." And as Christ pleased not himself in any thing, as pertaining to the flesh, but did everything to the glory and honor of God his Father, shall frail humanity be any the more justified in gratifying self, to glory in the flesh? As the flesh warreth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, so is the glory of man when he glories in temporal things supremely. He is boasting against God, and all such rejoicing is evil. Some glory in their wisdom and eloquence, and endeavor to make it prominent, even teachers of the word, that they may have glory of men; but in doing so they not only glory against Christ, but make the word unfruitful; for says the apostle, "If I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me. . . . In the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue." And, "except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak into the air." 1 Cor. 14: 9, 11, 19.

So that, where such glorying is man's wisdom is prominent. Magniloquence does not edify or instruct the ignorant in the congregation. It is poor feed for the flock of Christ. Men retire home many times very little benefited by such sermons. It matters not how much truth was contained in it; if the needy could not understand it, it is fruitless with them, and savors of vain glory. For "whatsoever is not of faith is sin"; and what is not done to and for the glory of God is done against it. And we, brethren, should take heed that we glory in nothing save the cross of Christ. I can glory in nothing else. I feel myself as but filthy rags, poor and naked, and am willing to be such if I can only be counted worthy to glory in the matchless wisdom and goodness of God. What is man that he should glory in himself? is he not but flesh that perisheth and comes to nought, and all that he may boast of? "Therefore let no man glory in men." I Cor. 3: 21. Martin Luther said if he gloried in the sun, it would set; if he gloried in the earth, it would pass away; if he gloried in himself, he would die; but if he gloried in the Lord, his glory would abide forever; and this is the kind of glory that all men should covet, if they love eternal enjoyments. When we can feel that we are not our own, but are the Lord's, and bought with a price, we shall have little to boast of in ourselves.

The whole sum of the matter, then, is this: that we must not have our own will in any thing, but deny ourselves, break loose from everything that will have a tendency to promote self, and substitute Christ for all. We must deny ourselves, take up our cross, and go after Jesus. To deny myself, then, is not to deny my existence, or name, but to deny myself of every thing that is in any way detrimental to the cause of Christ, and cherish the workings of the Spirit; and then, whether I preach, or write, or work, or eat, or drink, or whatsoever I do, do all to the glory of God (1 Cor. 10: 31), and none other. Amen.

LIFE.

Our life is a test. If you bring a man into some important position, and there is a crisis where his behavior will either make or break you, you say: "Now I will have a chance to find out what he is." Well, every man is on his trial trip. Men, angels and devils are finding out what is in you, what you are worth, and what your weaknesses are. No man liveth to himself. Every word you speak, every action you perform, has a thousand echoes. Earth and heaven are gazing upon your behavior, and you are undergoing the trial. . . .

Our life is a conflict. If you have never tried to control your passions, tried to rouse yourselves up to a better manhood or womanhood, you cannot know what I mean. But if you have attempted to live a holy life, and to be better and to do better, then you sympathize with the apostle Paul when he represented our life on earth as a war with the devil. In addition to the struggle you have had a thousand outside battles. Sometimes it has been against poverty, against physical distress, against bad social position, against an unhappy family name. In one case it has been one thing, and in another case it has been another thing; and with many of you up to this point, it has been a hand to hand fight; and so it will be even unto the grave. Life is a conflict; so your own spirit affirms it. . . .

Our life is a preparation. If we are going on a long journey, we want some time to get ready. We must have extra apparel. We want our guide-book. Our comfort on the journey will depend very much upon what we start with. God has started us on a journey, and once started we can never come back. Are we getting ready? Are we armed? That question you hear to-day; but if I should utter it in an hour from now, perhaps you might not hear it. Life is a preparation. If you have any weapons to sharpen, you had better sharpen them now. If you have any lamps to light, you had better light them now. When death once shuts the door of the sepulchre, the angel of repentance never opens it. "As the tree falleth, so it must lie." As far as I can tell your case, your great need is to get rid of your sins. I know only one way to do it. The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sins; and though you may this morning count yourself the worst sinner, you may, by the grace of God, become the best saint. Where sin abounded, grace shall much more exceedingly abound."

Our life is a great uncertainty. We can make no calculation about the future. The world is full of temptation and of peril. We resolve on one thing, we do another. Our associations change. Our plans alter. Our friends change. We change. And life is such a complete uncertainty that I would not want to live one hour without the grace of God, and I very certainly would not want to die without it.—Extract from a discourse by Rev. Dr. Talmage.

PERFECTION.

This is relative. One may be perfect and imperfect at the same moment. A perfect bud is an imperfect flower; a perfect flower is not perfect fruit. A perfect primary pupil to-day must press on to the standard of juniors, and then to seniors, or meet censure. Thus it is in christian experience. The convert is perfect and imperfect, and as he grows in grace he cannot be otherwise. The perfection of yesterday is imperfection to-day; the standard rises with our years, and if we fail to rise we sin. We may all be perfect, and yet press on to perfection and never reach it.

The more perfect we are the more rapidly we grow. Perfect buds grow quickly to perfect flowers; perfect babes grow to perfect youth, and then to men; perfect christians grow like calves in the stall, like trees by living waters. This perfection becomes more perfect; from grade to grade we rise, more and more like Christ we become; richer and still richer our graces grow; step by step we mount Jacob's ladder, which reaches the skies; perfect all the way, and climbing always to a higher point. Through grace this may be the experience of all.—Baptist Union.

PURIFYING OUR HEARTS.

"Let us suppose that here is a spring of water which is poisoned in its very source, and which can of course therefore send forth none but poisoned waters. But a remedy is found which counteracts the poison, and makes the waters pure and sweet. That remedy is applied in the very source of the spring itself, and the waters flow out, therefore, pure and sweet. But they do so only so long as it is applied. The moment the remedy is stayed, that very moment the poisonous waters flow out as foul as ever.

"Now this is what the blood of Christ does for us,—it reaches the very spring itself, 'purifying our hearts by faith,' cleansing us 'from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit,' and enabling us by faith to realize that wondrous statement that 'every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.' We purify ourselves, not by effort, but by faith; not by works, but by the precious blood of Christ. This clean and humble condition, however, is ours only while the blood is applied by faith; for the very moment faith ceases to apply it, corruption ensues, and the same old bitter waters flow out."—Guide to Holiness.

— The wise man changes his mind; the ignorant man will not. The former will acknowledge his error and correct it, but the pertinacity with which the latter adheres to his opinions, always bears a just proportion to his ignorance.

The World's Crisis

NOTICE.

To those who have sent us money to renew their subscription on the paper, and do not see the figures changed, we would say, Have patience with us, and we will do as fast as we can. On account of the campmeetings, a large amount of work has accumulated in the Office, but we hope in the course of two weeks to have all straight.

THE PROMISED LAND.

Putting the glass of historic remembrance to the eye and sweeping it over the long line of earth-scenes, in the groaning, changing past—viewing the strange variety of light and dark shades of human experiences, the gaining and losing, the rising and falling, the building and destroying, the triumphs and defeats, the liberty and oppression, the glory and infamy, the enjoyment of heaven's favor and suffering of its judgments, the joys of living and the woes of dying—the tender sympathies of humanity plaintively ask for rest for our race, and peace for our world.

In the distant past, upon the summit of a far-off mountain, may be seen a man of noble form and devout appearance, performing strange acts of sacred devotion. With an unyielding purpose, he places the stones of an altar, arranging the fuel for a burnt offering. Then laying his hands upon his son, whose form was so beautiful to his eye, and whose voice was so sweet to his ear, he bound him as a victim upon the altar, and in obedience to God's command, grasped the knife and raised his hand to deal the fatal blow: God, seeing his faith and obedience were perfect, bade him stay his hand; and he, in the same quiet submission. let it fall, returning the knife to its place.

Abraham, by his fidelity to God and his uncompromising submission to the divine will, became his special friend, and received the promise that he should be the father of a great nation, which should enjoy the protecting care of heaven. He was instructed that four generations of his posterity should sojourn in Egypt, and they should suffer cruel bondage, but that this should end in perfect deliverance. God also gave him assurance that his people should possess, as a resting place from their bondage and wanderings, the land of Canaan, one of the most delightful and fertile countries in the world.

All this might seem unmeaning to the philosopher's eye, and the communications unimportant to the statesman's ear, but in heaven they were regarded as wonderfully important, involving the future interests of that people, and of Egypt and Canaan, whose histories shadow forth the eternal triumphs of the redeemed, and the everlasting overthrow of the wicked, when the "holy nation" shall take the heavenly Canaan, and enjoy its riches, fruits, and glory forever.

Looking far back in the misty past, we see Abraham's children, exactly in harmony with these foreshadowings, multiplying and becoming, by divine interposition, renowned in the earth, and, by the strange guidance of an unseen hand, cultivating the verdant plains of the overflowing Nile. God first exalted them to the dizzy height of worldly riches and political power; but, seeing their danger of becoming satisfied with their home in the land of strangers, he, in mercy to them, cast them down into the pit of poverty and grievous bondage.

When the numbered days of their servitude had nearly passed, God raised upon the stage a deliverer, whom the Egyptians were taxed to educate and rear to refined manhood, that he might be prepared to take from them their slaves and vast treasures, and, according to the divine purpose, lead the family of Abraham to enjoy the coveted inheritance.

The time came for their emancipation; though all the circumstances bade defiance to their exode. They were penniless and without organization or leaders. They had neither military skill nor arms. A threatening sea was before them, and a hostile country through which they must pass, to conquer a land occupied by numerous nations, strongly fortified in walled cities, and defended by giants armed with the most destructive implements of warfare.

But the appointed time had come for their deliverance. Jehovah made bare his arm. Notable miracles were wrought to encourage his people, and sore judgments sent to dishearten the Egyptians, until they were driven to consent to their departure.

God gave them a heavenly lantern to direct and illumine their night marches, and a guiding cloud to lead them by day. He excavated a pathway through the disturbed sea, and led the fleeing fugitives safely through the piled-up waters. But when they first pressed the soil of the Eastern shore, and the piercing war-whoop of the pursuing Egyptians was hushed in the silence of death by the returning waters which eugulfed them in an inglorious grave, the typical song of triumph sounded its joyful melody over the surging main, rolling its sweet notes far back into the solitary wilderness.

Then the marshaled tribes, under the leadership of their divinely appointed captain, commenced their march to the goodly land the Lord had promised them. But the commissary department was entirely deficient. No heavily-laden wagons, transporting meat and bread, were in the train. Want and starvation began to defy their advancement. But the purpose of Omnipotence could not be defeated. Myriads of quails were directed to the tented fields of the wearied host, thus supplying them with meat. Bread was prepared in the heavens, and transported to the hungry thousands, while never-failing water was furnished them through an aqueduct laid in the rock.

These were convincing arguments that the God of their fathers was faithful to them, performing all his promises.

But the human heart, always demanding constantly repeated evidences of unseen things, caused them still to doubt and complain, while God was continually manifesting wonders in the heavens, and miracles upon the earth—protection in faithfulness, and destruction in rebellion—the effulgence of heaven paling the sun at noonday, and the darkness of midnight shutting out its clearest rays—the awful presence of Deity on Sinai, darkly veiled in the mantle of night, shaking the earth like a quivering leaf, uttering his voice like the roar of a thousand thunders, and flashing his light as if burning worlds were coming in collision! Notwithstanding all these demonstrative proofs of the truthfulness of God's revelation relating to the goodly land promised, and the wonderful realities in the far-off future which these things prefigured, unbelief still darkened their minds. They doubted that there was such a land, and that they were able to go up and possess it.

God, willing to give them the utmost proof of all he had said, instructed them to select a man from each tribe, and send them out to search for the land; and when it was found, to ascertain its condition, productions, and advantages, and the prospect of their being able to go up and possess it. The men were selected and sent, and God defended them in their march to the promised land.

When their feet tracked the mountain's summit, and their eager eyes fell upon the looked-for land stretching far off into the hazy distance, with its majestic hills and verdant vales, its waving palms, sturdy oaks, and stately cedars, its creeping vines laden with tempting, delicious clusters, the tempting branches of the fig and pomegranate, bending with luxurious fruit, its winding streams and sparkling cascades, its broad green carpet and its blue overhanging curtain, ornamented with fleecy silvery clouds tinged with streaming light, wonderful emotions filled their hearts. The sight was grand and convincing. It spoke for God, and the truthfulness of his revelations.

They now gazed upon the land where the tent of their fathers fluttered in the breezes ages before. They hastened to print the God-given soil with their shoeless feet. They marched by Hebron, and quietly passed the mighty sons of Anak, winding their way to the delightful and fruitful valley of Eschol.

Here they rest under the guardian care of the protecting angels, and commence to carefully examine all the surrounding country, and gather the rich fruits of the land as seen in the picture. They ascend the lofty pomegranate and gather the delicious fruit for transportation. They haste to the low spreading branches of the richly laden fig tree, and triumphantly bear away the representative treasure of their looked-for Canaan. They gaze upon the unequaled clusters of first-ripe grapes with joyous wonder, breaking one cluster from its vine, suspending it upon a pole to be borne by two men to the camp of the anxiously waiting brethren. Their eyes with transports of delight survey the lovely landscape of their future home—the crystal waters of winding streams—the lofty mountains covered with rich verdure of waving forest trees—the productive fields laden with golden harvests—the numerous flocks and lowing herds grazing upon the green fields—the perfumed breezes fanning the energies of life—the solar rays reflecting among the lofty summits, while the curtain of the blue arch draws its folds above and around it all.

There was the center of nature's loveliness; the land of angels' boast and men's delight. God had selected it as the future home and resting place of his outcast and persecuted people; and, notwithstanding the massive walls and defiant gates of fortified towns, no giant arms could defend them. The God of all the earth had sworn to his servant, and repeated it to his children, that they should possess the land; and when the appointed time came, no power could prevent its accomplishment. The echo of rams' horns was made more effective in demolishing their walls, than siege, engines, or shot and shell.

The unbelieving and doubting multitudes of the tribes had been sifted out from among the faithful, and found their graves in the wilderness; but the remnant who believed God meant what he said, and would faithfully fulfill his sacred promises, triumphantly passed all barriers, uprooted the nations, and took the goodly land in peaceful possession.

Paul makes these things prophetical when he says, "all these things happened unto them for ensamples [types]; and they are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world have come." 1 Cor. 10: 11.) An ensample must have its likeness in a second part, therefore it is certain that all those providential circumstances connected with that people, and recorded by inspiration, must be duplicated in more important events. Part of them were fulfilled at the close of the Jewish age, and part of them will be at the close of the gospel age.

The great antitypical Moses did come in the person of Jesus, who was the typified prophet, and promulgated the second code of divine law for the government of God's people. He also took Aaron's place as High Priest, and received the sacred unction, making him the Christ, and offered an atoning sacrifice, and "entered in once into the Holy Place . . . . heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us . . . and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time." When he appears the second time he will take Joshua's place as the Deliverer of God's people, leading them into the antitypical Canaan, a "better country, that is, an heavenly." He will then appear in the royal vestments of David, and ascend the long vacated throne of the holy family, and sway the sceptre of earth as the "second man, the Lord from heaven."

Then will the smoke and dust of sin's terrible battle cease to darken our once glorious world, and the last echo of death's awful groan be exchanged for the heavenly melody of life's note of eternal victory. Then the mighty Exterminator of evil shall arise and fold up the sable curtain of the curse, and unfold to the enraptured gaze of countless millions the indescribable beauties and eternal blessedness of a renewed earth.

Then shall the eye, immortal, feast upon the untold glories of a perfect world, as with the swiftness of angelic vision it sweeps over the broad landscape, and marks the infinite perfection of the wisdom, skill, and almighty power of its glorious Creator. With gushes of eternal joy it shall view the rolling glories of its heavenly effulgence. It shall view with infinite delight the unmeasured fields filled with beauty and life; fruit that angels might covet; flowers in eternal bloom, a thousand times more beautiful than mortal eyes ever beheld; fragrance floating in every breeze, sweeter than ever perfumed the valleys of Sharon; every creature and being enjoying the sweetness of living, unalloyed with the fear of dying. Peace shall wave its palm through all the vast dominions, unchallenged by war. The lion and lamb shall join in the universal harmonies, and the peasant and king rejoice in heavenly equality. The blighting curse shall not be known in that "heavenly country." No storm cloud or bellowing thunder—no earthquake or battle scenes—no withering forest tree or groaning beast—no dying friend or sad parting scenes.

O, when shall the holy eyes dimmed by death, and those now anxiously waiting, look upon a redeemed world stamped with God-like perfection, where no foe invades or sound disturbs, where beauty never withers and happiness is eternal? When shall our Joshua come, and lead us out of this howling wilderness to Paradise restored, wherethe toil-worn and weary will rest under Immanuel's protection—rest in the bowers of Eden forever?

ALTON BAY CAMPMEETING.

The great campmeeting at Alton Bay, N. H., closed last evening (Aug. 30th.) The location is quite picturesque on the bank of the lake Winnipesaukee, which is one of the most romantic lakes in the country. Several steamboats ply between Alton Bay and other landings, affording a very pleasant conveyance to the campmeeting. One boat brought in about fifteen hundred at one time, and in one day some six thousand arrived on the cars, besides some four thousand by private conveyance. This has been the largest and best meeting ever held on the ground. The last day of the meeting there were probably eighteen thousand people on the ground. Good order prevailed during the entire meeting. The preaching was excellent. Sermons were delivered by Brn. E. A. Stockman, J. Couch, A. Ross, D. W. Leavitt, N. Wheeler, H. L. Hastings, P. G. Bowman, S. G. Mathewson, H. F. Carpenter, I. A. Potter, I. C. Wellcome, M. Batchelor, A. A. Phelps, C. P. Dow. A. Simpson, C. Goodrich, G. W. Brown, Srs. Clark and McKinstry, and the writer.

The spirit of the prayer-meetings was earnest, and they accomplished much good. There was a deeper hungering after righteousness than usual, and many made a full surrender to Christ, and received the gift of the Spirit. Several were converted, and the ordinance of baptism was administered from one to three times a day. We have not learned the whole number who were baptized.

There appeared to be an increased conviction that our Savior will soon make his second advent to this world. The feeling on this subject was deep-toned and abiding; leading the people to feel the necessity of being "pure in heart" in order to be ready to meet the coming Bridegroom King. It is very apparent that the bride of Christ is making special preparation to meet him. She is putting on her bridal robes—Christ's righteousness—that she may be ready any moment to greet him with enraptured joy and gladness. There seems to be an increased certainty existing in the minds of the saints that Jesus will come very soon. Truly we are living in a glorious and solemn hour.

There were many incidents of special interest during the progress of the meeting, which we have not time or space to mention; but we will notice one connected with Bro. P. G. Bowman of S. C. Friday forenoon, Aug. 28th, we had a very interesting missionary meeting, when over two thousand dollars in cash and pledges were raised to spread in new places the truths we love so ardently. Near the close of the meeting, word was sent to the stand by some ladies, that they would make a liberal addition to their pledges if Bro. Bowman would quit the use of tobacco. We would say here, that he has used it from boyhood; and in S. C. it is considered all right. The old negroes used to delight in putting into his hands some of the best of the poisonous weed. This proposition from the ladies bore with heavy weight upon the mind of Bro. Bowman. Many were making sacrifices to raise money to assist him and others to preach the gospel of the kingdom; and he saw at once that it was reasonable that he should make a sacrifice, especially of a bad habit. After a little sober thought, he stood up in his tall manliness, and said it was the heaviest cross he ever took up; but if his tobacco was offensive to his brethren, he would use no more, if he died for his abstinence. A shout of joy rose from the camp, and some two hundred dollars more were pledged towards the southern mission work, because Bro. B. had sacrificed his idol. Let others go and do likewise. It is high time that those who are waiting for the coming of Jesus were cleansed "from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." Save the tobacco money and give it to the missionary cause.

Sabbath, Aug. 30th, was the closing day of this great feast of tabernacles. The morning love-feast at 9 o'clock was excellent. Some four hundred and twenty-one spoke in one hour and fifteen minutes, besides nineteen songs of praise. During the day there was preaching at the stand and in three large tents; also from one of the balconies in the "square." In the evening, we had the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, when some fifteen hundred were present. It was a precious season in Christ. Thus ended the largest and best meeting at Alton Bay.

CONSECRATION.

Those who wish to be filled with the Holy Spirit should make an unconditional surrender of their all to Christ, to be his forever without reserve. As Paul says, this is our "reasonable service." Our wonderful constitutions were made for a holy use, and for no other purpose. Man was made to be a companion of his Creator; but sin has produced a separation. The union can be restored only when man will consent to stop sinning, and lead a holy life. The Lord cannot force any person's will, so long as he is on probation. He entreats, and uses all possible persuasive means to get man out of the broad way into the narrow path that leads to life eternal. We do not see how our Savior could have done more than he has to save rebellious man.

On the subject of consecration, the following from Bro. Hall, a noted minister in Europe, is excellent:—

"I disclaim all right to myself from henceforth,—to my soul, my body, my time, my health, my reputation, my talents, or anything that belongs to me. I confess myself to be the property of the glorious Redeemer. I dedicate myself to him, to serve, love and trust him, as my life and my salvation, to my life's end. I call thee to witness, O God, the truth and reality of this surrender of all I have, and all I am, to thee; and earnestly implore the influence of thy Spirit to enable me to stand steadfast in this covenant, as well as an interest in the blood of thy Son, that I may be forgiven in those instances (alas! that such an idea may be possible) in which I may in any degree swerve from it." When nearing death he said: "I have no anxious thought either for life or death. What I dread most are dark days. But I have had none."

M. G.

COURAGE.

David, in his boyhood days, was sent by his father Jesse to the camp of Israel with some food for his brethren. At that time the Philistines were led by the giant Goliath, and with taunting boldness were defying "the armies of the living God." It is said, "the men of Israel . . . were sore afraid," when they beheld the daring champion of the Philistines, who said, "Choose you a man for you, and let him come down to me. If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants; but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and serve us. And the Philistine said, I defy the armies of Israel this day; give me a man that we may fight together." It is said, "when Saul and all Israel heard these words of the Philistine, they were dismayed and greatly afraid."

When this defiant giant had "presented himself forty days," David appeared in the camp. After learning the alarming facts in the case, he said: "Who is this uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living God?" Eliab, David's eldest brother, was quite displeased with him because he had come to the camp, and rebuked him sharply. Said David, "What have I now done? Is there not a cause? Soon David stood face to face before the mighty giant and said: "I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied." "The battle is the Lord's, and he will give you into our hands,"' and then, with a holy boldness, he ran with sling in hand to the mighty Philistine, and was soon seen returning with his reeking head to the camp of Israel.

At the present time there is need of courage like that of David, to meet those who "defy the armies of the living God." "Is there not a cause?" Let none be fainthearted in these last hours of peril. It is too late to make "provision for the flesh." Let us lay all on the altar of sacrifice, and trust the Lord without a doubt. We have nothing to fear, when fully consecrated to him. He that is for us is more than all that can be against us. This is the time to "stand fast . . . in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." When in him all is well, and we have nothing to fear. Let every christian soldier be clothed with "the whole armor of God." None others are prepared for the closing conflict, that is to decide for ever the destiny of every combatant. Truly we are living in a solemn hour, yet glorious.

DISCUSSION.—We have arranged to discuss the following at Plainfield, Vt.:—

"RESOLVED, That the Scriptures teach a conscious, intelligent existence of the soul of man separate from the body, between death and the resurrection of the body."

STEPHEN SKINNER affirms.
MILES GRANT denies.

The discussion is to commence Tuesday evening, Sept. 15th, to continue four evenings.

ANOTHER DISCUSSION.—We have also consented to debate the subject of Trine Baptism with Bro. W. C. Thurman, in Charlestown, Mass., Mystic Hall, No 70 Main St., commencing Tuesday evening, Sept. 22nd.

M. G.

THE BETHEL CAMPMEETING has opened with excellent promise. The first day (Sabbath, Sept. 6th) an attentive audience was present, and in the evening some four or five decided to become christians, and many consecrated their all to Christ, and were much blest. It is expected that this will be the best meeting ever held on the ground.

M. G.

ALTON BAY CAMPMEETING.

The great campmeeting is past, and its incidents and varied experiences are registered in a book to be opened, and their moral character to be decided by the Judge of quick and dead at his appearing. It was anticipated that, as the times were hard, the meeting would be smaller than usual; but in that we were mistaken, for it was larger than ever before. The multitude who came on to the ground seemed disposed to be orderly, with hardly an exception, and treated the worshipers respectfully. Men of the world, who are in the habit of witnessing the deportment at large mass meetings, testified that it was singularly orderly and quiet. We believe this can be partly accounted for from the fact that there is a fearfulness resting upon the hearts of men that the things we preach may be true. All can see that there are great changes taking place in the world, and their hearts are "failing them for fear" that the judgments of God are impending over this generation.

We had no night watch until the last Saturday evening, and there was no one on the ground from first to last who seemed disposed to harm or disturb us. We are inclined to think that there is not in New England, everything considered, a more desirable location for a large religious meeting than Alton Bay. It is not subject to rowdyism or sectarian bigotry, so as to prevent thepeople from generally attending the meeting in all the region of country. It is situated on as beautiful a lake of water as there is in the country, over which large and commodious steamers run, landing passengers directly at the grounds. It has the great advantage of being situated on one of the most safely managed R. Roads in the country—the Boston and Maine. There is of necessity much danger connected with the movements of such vast crowds of people by any conveyance, especially when so many thousands rush into the cars and are carried over a single track in an hour. The superintendent of the Road was on the ground the last day, and saw with his own eye, and directed with his own command every movement, which resulted in the most perfect order and safe conveyance of all.

The meetings of worship were considered, by many who spoke of them, better than any enjoyed on the ground for many years. They seemed to have deeper-toned devotion and less superficial excitement and animal emotion. A deep and heartfelt conviction rested upon all that the day of the Lord is just at hand, and that a thorough gospel preparation is infinitely important for all to enjoy at the present time. A number of sinners were hopefully converted, and many professors were revived and greatly strengthened in faith, who renewed their covenant with God to be faithful unto the end. We believe the meeting swept away much prejudice which existed against us as a people, and our peculiar faith, which has opened to us a wider door to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom to this generation. We believe God has in great mercy heard the prayers of his people, that divine blessings might rest upon this meeting, and make it a success in establishing his truth, advancing his cause, and preparing his people for the coming of Christ.

After the bustle and confusion of the multitude had gone, and the sweeter sounds of songs and prayers from devout lips had ceased to echo through the consecrated bower, and the servants of God had left the sacred desk and dedicated chapels in solemn silence, a divine influence seemed to linger, and whisper silently but impressively, Walk softly and speak gently and devoutly, for this is a holy place, because God has met his covenant people here, to prepare and marshal them for the marriage of his Son.

BUSINESS PROSPECTS.

The business aspect of the country looks quite discouraging. Men are afraid to go forward in business operations as in other days. They are impressed that heavy financial storms are impending. They have lost confidence in one another, and are perplexed at the signs of the times. They can see no way out of their perplexities. The clouds present no "silver lining," but are growing darker. Says the New York Journal of Commerce:—

"It is worse than idle to deceive ourselves, There is no wide-spread and substantial prosperity. We can find no class of manufacturers, merchants, agriculturists, artisans or common laborers who are steadily earning a profit, or have full and contented employment."

Says the Boston Herald of Aug. 29th, 1874:—

"It is not the panic of last autumn that has caused all the trouble. That panic was only a symptom of the national disease. It showed us where we were; how far we had drifted from our moorings. It gave evidence that there was something rotten in the apparent prosperity which had so long deceived the people and to which the politicians had pointed with proud boasts. The panic only affected a comparatively small number of concerns in one line of business. It toppled over a few large houses that had ventured, 'like little boys that swim on bladders,' too far out upon the sea of speculation. The great producing interests of the country were untouched. There was still work to be done, hands to do it, and money to pay for it. But speculation had received a check and speculative values had disappeared. We have been pretty near down to hard pan ever since, and had Congress possessed the courage to take advantage of the country's situation, and make our currency as good as gold, we should be in a more hopeful state to-day."

BRO. L. BOUTELL writes from East Pepperel, Mass, Sept. 7th, 1874:—"Our tent-meeting has been under way at this place for three days, and is in a very prosperous condition. We have had meetings from morning till evening; had preaching three times a day, besides prayer and conference meeting daily, with a children's meeting. The people fill the tent, and give good attention to the word of life. Some have started in the way of life, and an interest is awakened in the gospel of the kingdom, and a necessary preparation for the event. The meeting will still continue. Everything indicates good results. Pray for us.

"THE YOUNG PILGRIM."

We call the attention of the readers of the World's Crisis to the above paper. It is an illustrated children's paper, devoted to the interests of Bible truth, as understood by us, which furnishes wholesome religious instruction, adapted to the capacities and needs of the little ones; and also that which is calculated to interest and instruct the larger portion of our children. In a simple, yet interesting manner, it sets forth not only the necessity of conversion and holy living in order to salvation, but calls attention to the fact of Christ's speedy personal coming, the inheritance of the earth by the saints, the mortality of the human race, and their dependence on Christ for eternal life, and kindred truths. It is a paper that should visit every family where there are children, which should be circulated freely in our Sabbath-schools, and which should receive the aid and encouragement of every one who is interested in the spiritual welfare of the young.

Besides the foregoing reasons which just tify its claim for patronage is the fact that it is the only such paper published by the people who are waiting for Jesus' coming, either east or west. We have some half a dozen papers for adult readers, published in various parts of the country, and only one devoted specially to the interest of the young. Surely this fact should cause it to receive a liberal support from the body at large.

We solicit subscriptions. It is published by the A. C. Publishing Society, at the office of the World's Crisis; and is issued twice each month for fifty cents a year, payable in advance. Address The Young Pilgrim, Box 355, Boston, Mass.

C. E. BARNES, Editor.

THE ADVENTIST SOCIETY OF HYDE PARK appears to be in a most healthy and prosperous condition. From a small beginning it has gradually grown until now quite a large society has been formed, and religious services of an interesting and profitable character are held each Sabbath, morning, afternoon, and evening. In its first stages it progressed very slowly, scarcely a dozen persons attending the meetings; but under the earnest labors of the present pastor, the Rev. Mr. Preble, Pythian Hall, in Central Block, is filled nearly to overflowing at each gathering. Mr. Preble is a zealous, earnest speaker, and advocates the doctrine of Adventism with a spirit that must convince any listener that he is sincere in what he says.

The religious interest in the society is quite manifest, and conversions to the faith are of frequent occurrence. Many who had at first attended these meetings through idle curiosity have become deeply interested in Mr. Preble's sermons, and have united with the society. It is a note-worthy fact that there are many persons in every community who never attend religious services in the churches, but who are easily induced to listen to the Word of God when proclaimed in a public hall. Why this is so we are unable to say, but such is the fact. And this is one reason why the meetings in Pythian Hall are so well attended.

Last Sunday, four persons who have attended the meetings at this hall during the past few months, were baptized by immersion, and joined the society. The solemn rites were observed in the Neponset river, and quite a large concourse of people were present. The pastor preached three able discourses during the day and evening, and in the evening nearly every seat in the hall was occupied by an apparently interested person. The society is certainly doing a good work, and we hope it will be sustained and encouraged. An excellent choir has been organized, and the singing is equal if it does not surpass that of our other societies. However much others may differ from the doctrines as here enunciated, all should unite in extending a welcome and helping hand to those engaged in building up this new religious society, as its mission is one of love and mercy, peace and good-will to men.—Norfolk County Gazette.

SUNNY christians are very much needed. We are not cheerful enough in domestic life —in our social circles. There is great power in a happy life, that goes through the labor of the day, singing as it goes. We do not sing enough out of prayer-meetings and without a hymn book. There is power in a sunny face and a brightening eye. Oh! for an increase of sunny christians!

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 13th, 1874, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal-giver.

PROPHECY.

B. SPAULDING.

"Wh tsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning."

In reading the good book, we find many prophecies yet unfulfilled. Prophecy seems to be a history of future events; and so far as we have come down the stream of time, prophecy has had a literal fulfillment. This leads us to expect the rest will be just as literal. We see that the prophecies in relation to Nineveh, Babylon, and Jerusalem, were fulfilled to the letter of the word; and prophecies concerning Jesus' first advent: such as he should be born of a virgin, be born in Bethlehem of Judea, be called a Nazarene; that they should part his garments among them, and cast lots for his vesture; that he should die, and the third day rise again; all such prophecies had a literal fulfillment. Then may we not expect that the remaining prophecies will be just as literally fulfilled? Such as, "If I go away, I will come again"; "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven"; "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him"; "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout," etc., etc.

Then, again, other prophecies relating to what will follow Jesus' coming; such as, "Every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him"; "shall look upon him and mourn"; "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." "And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. "And the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth to the other end of the earth; they shall not be lamented, neither gathered nor buried; they shall be as dung upon the ground." This, it will be seen, will require a space of time.

"Their goods shall become a booty, and their houses a desolation; they shall also build houses, but not inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, but not drink the wine thereof. . . . That day is a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness; . . . and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as dung." All this is in the great day of the Lord. We see it cannot be a literal twenty-four-hour day; but it is a space of time which the prophets call "the day of the Lord." It is the space between the first and second resurrection; the space when Jesus is fulfilling the unfulfilled prophecy. We see plainly there must be such a space (whether it be longer or shorter), in order to fulfill all which the prophets have written, as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. In that day of the Lord, Isa. 24th will be fulfilled,—the earth left empty, desolate, barren, and waste; the city of confusion broken down, and every house shut up. In the city is left desolation, and the gate is smitten with destruction. "And it shall come to pass in that day (space of time), that the Lord shall punish the hosts of the high ones, that are on high, and the kings of earth upon the earth; and they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit [the grave], and shall be shut up in the prison [or grave], and after many days [or a thousand years] shall they be visited [or resurrected]. Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Blessed be the Lord. I believe it with my heart.

The infirmities of age are upon me, yet my health is good, and I enjoy life. My faith remains firm in the doctrines I have so long tried to proclaim. I think we have not got to the end of the Bible. There is much to learn yet, and we never shall get to the place where there is nothing for us to learn. When Jesus comes, we shall begin the future age just with that degree of knowledge with which we left this state, and then progress in knowledge throughout the rolling ages of eternity, in that world without end. Blessed be the Lord for the hope of the restitution.

Chelmsford, Mass.

A "CRISIS" EXPECTED.

C. P. DOW.

Intelligent minds foresee and foretell a crisis in human affairs as imminent, and so fulfill what Christ predicted, thus: "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21: 26. In the tri-weekly Witness, of July 11th, 1874, is an editorial, the heading of which reads, "The Crisis of the World," which we give entire thus:—

THE CRISIS OF THE WORLD.

Mr. D'Israeli has taken a place among men which entitles him to be credited with some insight and some foresight, and he tells us that the crisis of the world is nearer than most men think. There looms up before him, as a thinker dealing with great rather than little issues, that coming storm among the nations which, to those who sit on less exalted pinnacles, is yet beneath the horizon. It is undoubted, however, that in the consciences of most men, and particularly of most students of prophecy, there is the expectation of a somewhat near approach of that great shock of nations or of systems, or of spiritual things, called figuratively the battle of Armageddon.

It takes but a glance at the history of the last few years to see that a ferment has commenced among the peoples which shows no signs of early quiescence. The national idea supercedes the old system of divine right. The national idea itself gives way to forms of thought which, seizing simultaneously upon the people of all nations, show their first inherent sputterings of what is called Internationalism. Meantime the political powers seem dissolving into each other and massing themselves under two or three great heads so diverse in nature as to make it appear almost necessary that trials of strength should ensue between them.

It is not, however, contests between potentates, or even contests between peoples that are really great, but contests between systems which involve men's minds and souls as well as their outward estate. We have seen narrownesses of thought lessening their hold, and carrying away long with them much that has been held precious and sacred in the past. We see Ritualism and Rationalism rising side by side in exceeding great strength, hating each other a little, but hating spiritual religion intensely. How the conflict is to be precipitated no man knows, but it does not involve a stretch of imagination too great for ordinary men, to look forward to that time which is prophesied when there is to be "a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great."

Do "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation"? Scoffers may say so, the "willingly ignorant" do thus decide and proclaim, and thus another prophecy is fulfilled (2 Pet. 3: 1-10); but eminent men renowned for sagacity, statesmen, editors and others, as well as divines, see in the near future a terrible crisis in our world's affairs, hurrying on like the wild tornado, unable to tell when, or how, the dark storm will break; aware, indeed, that prophecy gives the only light, yet not agreeing in its application.

Are these men fanatical? Are there no omens of dire and plain significance to be seen? Let us then scan the future, and see it in the clear light of outline prophecy, fulfilled and fulfilling, and thus be made to feel the need of timely preparation for coming events which "cast their shadows before." God's providence warns for our safety. Let us be wise and escape coming destruction.

Hatley, P. Q.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. T. Ongley.

We have just closed our meeting at this place, and as there were no special places to go to, by request, and as Bro. C. F. Sweet had to leave to attend the grove meeting at Springwater, therefore we have packed up the tent and put it away, unless called for again into the field. We might yet hold two or three more meetings this season. If the friends desire, they can correspond with me, and arrangements can be made. Or if any wish my services in proclaiming the truths of the gospel, this fall or winter, without the tent, please notify me, at Warrensville, Lycoming Co., Pa.

In relation to the interest of the meeting here, I have nothing encouraging to write. Quite a number have been fully persuaded in the doctrine, but have not had the moral courage to come right out in obedience to the commands of our Lord and his apostles, and therefore have been retrograding instead of growing in grace. The truth of God, when rightly proclaimed, has a tendency to draw the line for weal or woe; and at times I am almost inclined to the idea that we have entered upon the time when "he that is holy, let him be holy still."

Warrensville, Pa., Aug. 25th.

From Bro. H. Smith.

Dear Editors of Crisis:—It does me much good to read the letters from the brethren and sisters published in your paper. It is real soul-cheering to read their experiences. It brightens our hope for eternal happiness, when we think the time not far distant when all who live faithful shall enjoy themselves together in the presence of our blessed Redeemer. I have been reading papers and tracts for several years published at your office. At first it was with much indifference that I read them, until in 1871, when Bro. H. Davis, of Woodstock Valley, Ct., came into our country (Ooltewah, Tenn.), also Sr. Hastings, of Boston, Mass. Then and there the doctrine of "Adventism" was so clearly taught and proved by the Holy Scriptures, that I was forced to give up my "old fogy" ideas of man, and take the true teachings of the Holy Scriptures.

In the latter part of 1872, I moved to Arkansas, where I have been living for almost two years. I brought with me several tracts, furnished me by Bro. H. Davis (God bless him), which I loaned, to be returned, that I might lend to others. They were the first of the kind that had ever been in this country. They were rejected at first by almost all; but the reading of them caused some to go to the Bible to see if such doctrine was at all in harmony with the Scriptures. Some few have confessed that they do not see how they have gone so long in the dark, when the Bible so clearly teaches the opposite of their old belief.

It makes me almost heart-sick when I look over the campmeeting notices in the Crisis, and know that I cannot attend any of them. Society at large is very poor in this part of the country, though I fully believe there are a great many here who are trying the best they know how to do right. I would be very glad if some one could come to these parts who would preach the whole truth. Bro. Cargile, of Stevenson, Ala., has expressed an idea of giving us a call in the autumn. I am satisfied that he would be gladly received by many. I do hope he will come. One Methodist Bro., who, less than a year ago, was highly insulted by being presented with tracts, now says if Cargile comes he will furnish him a house to preach in. I pray the good Lord to direct the feet of some good preacher to our relief.

De View, Woodruff Co., Ark.

From Bro. Geo. M. Prime.

Brethren of the Crisis:—I some time since sent you a note acknowledging some second-hand papers—the Crisis, Times, Christian, etc. These I have taken great pains to put in the hands of those who wish to know the way of truth, and especially those who sympathize with us. Those papers have made their mark, even in this short time. Many are besetting me for more of those papers. Much agitation is now being felt and exhibited on the probable close of this dispensation. I have declared that I believe it is even at our door. Some call me deranged, and stare at me, as much as though I had broken out from a mad house. Infidelity is rampant here, and the churches are not free from the taint and odor.

I wish I had some good tracts to scatter among the crowd on Court-House Square, some days when there is much talk and agitation on the subject of Christ's second advent; for the talk is carried high at times. We need a good preacher to invite the people into the Court-room, or some church, and calmly talk on this all-important subject of Christ's second coming.

Can you not send out a preacher or two into these parts? The field is good for a successful raid upon infidelity. The churches in this region are emphatically of the Laodicean stamp. There are individual exceptions, and these are the very ones who would leave the sinking ship, if a real christian barge should appear. Bro. J. J. Smith thinks of coming into these parts and spend a month; but he says he is not able to bear his traveling expenses to this Southern Arkansas.

This is a great and an extensive field, where the truth we so ardently love is scarcely known among the common mass of society. There has never been a sermon from one of our preachers within one hundred and fifty miles of this place. We need help.

El Dorado, Ark., Aug, 22nd.

From Sr. A. B. Pilcher.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—We have the blessed assurance that when Christ comes, he will wipe away our tears, make an end of our sorrows, and give joy and rest to the weary pilgrim. I believe that time is not far in the distance. We see the signs that tell of his near approach fulfilling rapidly. The churches are becoming more and more conformed to the world, being "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." It seems as though the fear of God is not before their eyes. They can have their church festivals and picnics, and tell you there is no harm in it. They will say the minister and his family are engaged in it, hence they seem to have no fears.

How few there are, comparatively, who are looking for and loving the appearing of Jesus. Can we say with the apostle, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Brethren and sisters, let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober, striving to keep ourselves unspotted from the world, that we may have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I can truly say that the Lord has been very good to me.

Obituaries.

SMITH. In Hyde Park, Mass., Aug. 26th, 1874, at the residence of her son-in-law, Eld. T. M. Preble, Betsey Smith, widow of the late Nathaniel Smith, of Wardsboro, Vt., in the eightieth year of her age.

Our mother Smith was well and affectionately known in Vermont and elsewhere. She had never removed her church relation from the M. E. church in Wardsboro, although she was a believer in the speedy coming of Christ to give immortality to his followers at the resurrection of the just. A peaceful, patient, loving christian mother has thus been taken, and left a large number of children and many friends to mourn her loss.

By a special request of our precious mother, just before she died, the writer attended her funeral in the Congregational house in Wardsboro, and spoke words of comfort from 1 Thess. 4: 13-18, to a large and deeply interested audience. The third verse of the hymn, commencing—

"My Jesus, I love thee, I know thou art mine," will express a volume of truth relative to our mother.

"I'll love thee in life, and I'll love thee in death,
And praise thee as long as thou lendest me breath,
And say when the death-dew lies cold on my brow,
If ever I loved thee, my Jesus, 'tis now."

This hymn our dear mother requested us to sing just before she died, she making a strong effort to join us in the singing. She will sing again soon!

"Sleep, mother, sleep, with your hands on your breast!
Poor, weary hands! they needed their rest:
Well have we loved you, but God loved you best!

T. M. PREBLE.

MCGLUE. In East Bolton, P. Q., April 3d, 1874, of quick consumption, Rosa S., wife of William McGlue, and only daughter of A. M. and P. Thompson, aged twenty years.

On the 8th day of last October Rosa stood before me a lovely bride, full of youthful hope; and on the 5th of April she lay prostrate in her bridal robes, pallid and still in death's cold embrace. I buried her with others a few years ago in the likeness of Christ's death, and now in the literal grave. She left a good evidence of her acceptance with God, and rests in hope of a resurrection to life eternal. There was a large attendance of sympathizing friends at her funeral. Sermon by the writer. Text, Job 11: 25.

CHAS. P. DOW.

GLIDDEN. In Brome, P. Q., June 28th, 1874, Catharine, wife of Abram Glidden, aged forty-two years.

Her departure was in peaceful hope of life everlasting in the kingdom of God. She professed hope in Christ some twenty years since; but being destitute of christian privileges, and having a large family to care for, the light in her, to a certain extent, became darkness, and her enjoyment was comparatively small; but when the grim messenger of death appeared, her faith rose to a firm trust in the Savior who had bought her with his blood. She was enabled by grace to triumph, looking beyond the grave to the glorious appearing of the Son of God. She leaves a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her loss. Words of consolation were spoken by the writer from Heb. 11: 13.

P. V. WEST.

SMITH. July 27th, 1874, Sr. Wealthy, widow of the late Cory C. Smith, aged eighty years.

She rests in the hope of soon coming from the enemy's land. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Notices.

DEARLY BELOVED, the Mass. Mission Tent is in the field. We have no funds in the treasury. Shall it stop, while the calls are being made upon us, for lack of means? L. BOUTELL.

TENT MEETING.—There will be a tent meeting held in Granville, N. Y., commencing Sept. 19th, and hold as long as duty seems to demand. The large tent owned by the Hoosick Valley Conference will be pitched, under which the word of the Lord will be dispensed, showing our immediate proximity to the day of God, and the preparation requisite for the event. Brethren and sisters in adjacent towns are invited to come over and help us.

H. K. FLAGG, } Tent
A. W. SIBLEY, } Committee.

TENT MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a tent meeting at Groveland, Mass., on the Newburyport Branch R. R., three miles from Haverhill, commencing Tuesday evening, Sept. 8th, and continue afternoons and evenings through the week, and over Sunday, Sept. 13th.

Bro. E. A. Stockman and the Haverhill Church will be at the meeting Sept. 13th, and other laborers during this week. ENOCH MORRILL.

THE Lord willing, there will be a meeting under the New Hampshire Mission Tent, at Warner, Waterloo Village, N. H., commencing Saturday evening, Sept. 19th, and holding over Sunday, Sept. 20th, and as long as duty may demand. Come and help in this meeting.

ENOCH MORRILL.

THE notice for tent meeting at Sutton, N. H., is withdrawn, and a quarterly conference will be held there instead, at some future date.

ENOCH MORRILL.

THE first quarterly meeting of the New York State A. C. Conference will be held with the church in Yorkshire, commencing Friday evening, Sept. 25th, and hold over the following Snnday.

M. R. MILES, President.
A. P. MOORE, Secretary.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The Advent Christian Church of East Creek, Ohio, will hold their next quarterly meeting on the third Saturday and Sunday in September. We earnestly request the brethren of the surrounding country to come and meet with us in a feast of redeeming love.

D. T. CALL, Pastor.

GROVE MEETING.—There will be a meeting in a grove at Vitum Hill, in Sandwich, N. H., on Sunday, Sept. 27th, and Oct. 3d. A cordial invitation is extended to all the good people to meet with us, and assist us in the work of the Master. If the weather should be cold or rainy, the meetings will be held in the Vitum school-house.

E. S. MOULTON.

THERE will be a meeting at Wesley, Me., commencing Sept. 24th, and hold over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited. Brn. N. G. Reed and J. R. Hall are expected.

For the Brn., M. W. CORLISS.

THE ADV. CHRIS. CONFERENCE of the Province of Quebec will (D. V.) hold its next annual session at the "old meeting-house" in Hatley, P. Q., on Wednesday, October 7th, and continue over the Sabbath. All of like precious faith, who are in sympathy with its objects and work, as set forth in its Constitution, will, we trust, make a special effort to attend, and unite in its business deliberations, and religious exercises of preaching, prayer, and song; which, we trust, will be so scriptural, so wisely and kindly performed, as to result in permanent good to the cause of our coming Savior. Especially we would say, let all the ministerial and lay members in the several districts, as far as is possible, arrange to attend. Come early, and come prepared to stay through the meeting. Let due reports, either written or verbal, be forthcoming from the entire field. Let isolated brethren and sisters who feel an interest, and cannot attend, write epistles to be read in conference, and direct to the President, or Secretary, at Ayres Flat. Please attend to this in good season. Christian union is strength; let us have it in action, feeling, and fact. Christian hospitality and kindness will be shown to all who come, by the resident brethren and friends, as on former occasions. Come praying for and expecting good.

CHAS. P. DOW, President.
E. C. ORCUTT, Secretary.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Northern Pa. and Southern N. Y. Conference will be held at Little Marsh, Tioga Co., Pa., commencing Sept. 24th, to hold over the following Sabbath. Those coming by R. R. will leave the cars at Middlebury, on the Corning and Wellsboro road. Trains leave Corning at 7.50 A. M. and 7.30 P. M. Teams will meet the trains at Middlebury on Thursday and Friday.

E. C. COWLES, President.
J. W. TAYLOR, Secretary.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The first quarterly meeting of the A. C. Quarterly Conference of N. W. Kansas, for the second conference year, will be held, the Lord willing, with the A. C. Church of West Creek, Republic county, commencing Friday evening, Sept. 25th, and continuing over Sunday, and as long as the interest demands. Bro. J. C. Smith, State Evangelist, is expected to be present with the State Mission Tent, to assist in preaching; also Sr. M. J. Clark is expected to be present to preach the word. All of like precious faith are cordially invited to attend.

E. N. BLISS, Pres.
J. S. THORP, Sec.

KANSAS CAMPMEETINGS.—The Northern Campmeeting of Advent Christians of Kansas will convene at Clyde, Cloud Co., Kansas, on Thursday, Sept. 10th, the Lord willing, and continue over two Sundays. The State tent will be on the ground, which will contain five hundred people. The following preachers will be there to preach the word: Eld. J. C. Smith, State Evangelist; Eld. Virgil Hunt, Asst. State Evangelist; Elder R. F. Clark, and Mrs. Clark. Others are expected. We have written to Bro. Sheldon to be present, and shall do all we can to have him there. The following have been appointed as committee of arrangements, and are prepared to be on the ground the day appointed, to make full arrangements. I will be there to meet you, if the Lord will: Frank Wilson, Chairman, Clyde, Cloud Co.; W. H. Rich, Clifton, Washington Co.; T. J. Hay, Peach Creek, Wash. Co.; C. D. Potter, Peach Creek, Wash. Co.; J. Roberts, Lake Sibley, Cloud Co.; C. M. Collins, Bransford, Washington Co.; B. S. Conley, Glen Elder, Mitchell Co.

Now, my dear brethren and sisters, and all who love Jesus, we want a general rally from all quarters at this meeting. Shall we have it? Let us give up our worldly business and pleasures for a little time, and come and work for the Lord, that our souls may be blest, and sinners converted and come to Jesus. Preaching brethren who preach the word are invited to attend. Let your baskets be well filled. Come equipped for camping. All bring tents who can. R. F. CLARK, Sec., Peach Creek, Washington Co., Kansas.

THE IOWA GENERAL UNION CONFERENCE AND CAMPMEETING will be held in Brooklyn, Poweskeik Co., Iowa, beginning Sept. 11th, and holding over two Sundays. A boarding tent will be on the ground, where board can be obtained at reasonables rates. We desire to see a large attendance at this meeting. Bring your tents and bedding. J. RIDLEY, Secretary.

P. S. The conference will convene during the first part of the meeting. J. R.

MRS. E. S. JENNINGS will commence a series of meetings at Barnes' Corners, Lewis Co., N. Y., on Sunday, Sept. 13th, to continue over the 20th. The friends in that vicinity will please address me at that place. E. S. J.

LOST or stolen, on the Alton Bay camp-ground, a black and white plaided shawl. The finder will be suitably rewarded by returning the same to DELIA M. SMITH, Plymouth, N. H.

THOSE wishing to write to the church at East Canaan, N. H., will please correspond with E. Whittier until further notice.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork.

Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives of Yale College. 8vo., 68 pp.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject.

We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—One copy, 25 cts.; one dozen for $2.50; sent by mail, postpaid. $17 per hundred, by express. Please order freely. A'GT.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 8. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." For sale at this Office. AG'T.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express. AG'T.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express. AG'T.

OUR SAVIOR SOON WILL COME.

C. P. DOW.

AIR.—"The battle hymn of the Republic."

The light of truth is breaking,
O'er the darkened earth it gleams;
Let it speed along our valleys,
And be borne upon our streams,
Till all the church awakens,
In its flush of golden beams,
Our Savior soon will come.
CHO.—Glory, glory, hallelujah!
Glory, glory, hallelujah!
Glory, glory, hallelujah!
Our Savior soon will come.

With hearts in love with Jesus,
And trusting in his name,
We seek to save our kindred
From the future woe and shame;
And the jubilee and kingdom
To the church of God proclaim,
Our Savior soon will come.—CHO.

During our day of trial,
And the pleading of the Son,
We will never flag nor falter,
In the work so well begun;
Till the day of grace is ended,
And the victory is won,
Our Savior soon will come.—CHO.

The "gospel of the kingdom"
"As a witness" we proclaim,
And the signs of Jesus' coming,
And the wonders of his name;
Thus we tell the Bible story,
Of his long since promised fame,
Our Saviour soon will come.—CHO.

When comes the solemn judgment,
And the awful trumpet's sound
Shall waken up the sleepers
From beneath the quaking ground;
And shall swell the mighty triumph,
May we safe with Christ be found,
Our Savior soon will come.—CHO.

VISIONS AND PROPHECIES.

The subject of visions and prophecies has been of deep importance to me for the last sixteen years. I have been in connection with the Seventh-Day Adventist people for ten years of the time. Having carefully investigated Ellen G. White's visions, I feel it is duty to speak. I consider the Bible quite sufficient to test all these things. I was so near a believer in those visions, that I dared not say aught against them, until I could find Scripture to warrant me in doing so. Having been taught by Eld. White that to speak against the work of the Spirit was sinning against the Holy Ghost, it was with much care and fear I entered upon the investigation. One Bible test I long sought to apply, but could never do so satisfactorily, for the reason that the visions were so much like the Grecian oracles, with their different consructions. For instance, she saw the door of mercy was closed in 1844. But afterwards, she said she meant the door of the first apartment in the heavenly sanctuary. She claimed that then Christ rose up and shut the door, and opened another into the most holy; and Seventh-Day Adventists are those that follow him wheresoever he goeth. This being the great antitypical day of atonement, all are called upon to afflict their souls.

She saw we should not pray for the wicked world that had rejected the first angel's message; but afterwards said she did not mean the whole world, she meant the wicked world that had rejected the '44 movement. I never could exactly see the line between the wicked world that rejected, and the wicked world that had not rejected. Certain it is, that many who did reject the '44 movement have passed into their ranks. She saw there was no travail of souls for the wicked, for the time for their salvation was past. I do not exactly know the twist required to bring this into present truth, but in the light of an oracle it is all easy. Did she set the time for Christ to come in 1845? There are many living witnesses to the fact; yet it must be borne in mind they are considered as enemies, and the faithful cannot receive such testimony.

From the year 1862 to 1868 the visions in shape of testimonies were showered on the church like autumn leaves. The eager, hungry, trusting souls were ready to buy all that came. Among them was announced a vision of the war, its origin, the reason of delays, and its final ending. Now, thought I, is a chance to test these visions by the Scripture rule. This wonderful revelation finally came to hand; but oh! with what disappointment I laid it aside, when I found nothing therein but what I had been told a hundred times by the political newspapers of the day, save the religious style, and a hint in regard to the close. She told us England was restrained from participating in it by her interests; but when England did pitch in, there would be war all over the world; but there would be a little time of peace. She did not tell us whether this little time of peace was before or after England took a hand in, nor how long a little time was. It might be a year, or a hundred years. There was no chance for testing it.

Finally I turned my investigation to the doctrines they teach, as compared with the Scriptures. Surely, if they conflict, then we may without fear call her a false prophetess. Now to the law and the testimony.

In the first place, Ellen pretends to have been shown that the Miller movement, in 1844, was of the Lord, and there was no mistake about the great pillar of time—"Unto 2300 days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed"—but that the great mistake of that movement was in the nature of the cleansing of the sanctuary. It was not the earth, nor of the earth, as they supposed; but had reference to the great antitypical sanctuary in heaven. Then and there commenced the great atonement by Christ, the blotting out of the sins of this world, which were shadowed forth by the cleansing of the earthly sanctuary on the tenth day of the seventh month; and this mistake appears to have been by design of the Creator to sift the world, and bring together a people that would follow Christ wheresoever he goeth; and a full and thorough explanation of all these things was left for new revelation by Ellen G. White. She saw the great antitypical sanctuary in heaven, and Christ in the first, or holy place, where he had been performing the daily ministration from the time of his ascension to the ending of the 2300 days (1844); then she saw him rise up and pass through the door, or vail, into the most holy, to commence the work of final atonement. She saw the heavenly sanctuary, and minutely describes the veil that divides the two apartments. She tells us it was of beautiful material, but does not tell us where it was spun or wove, whether in earth or heaven.

Now, when we look at the type, how plain it all is. The Sanctuary was the dwelling-place of God; for God said, Build me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among you. The first apartment, or holy place, was the dwelling-place of the priests. There they ate and drank, and performed their daily ministration, through the entire year. The second, or Most Holy, was the dwelling-place of God. In it was the representation of his throne, the mercy seat. No man was allowed to enter, only on the day of atonement. Then the high priest entered alone, to make an atonement, or reconciliation, or cleansing of the sanctuary.

According to Ellen G. White's theory, as she was shown in vision, Christ made no atonement while on earth; and when he ascended on high, he did not enter into the Most Holy, where God is, but stopped in the first apartment, there to remain 1800 years, or to the ending of the 2300 days, performing the daily ministration; then came a change in 1844, when he put on his high priest robes, and Ellen saw him rise up to go in before the Majesty of heaven, to commence the work of atonement. Is not this beautifully clear? and does it not show how liable the ancient prophets and apostles were to be mistaken?

It is believed and taught by Mrs. White, that the 2300 days mean 2300 years, which commence with the seventy weeks of Daniel; the seventy weeks covering four hundred and ninety years of the 2300. Now it is evident that Daniel believed the seventy weeks reached to the cleansing of the great antitypical Sanctuary (Dan. 9 : 24). "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." By turning to Lev. 16 : 16–20, we find that atonement, cleansing of the sanctuary, and reconciliation, mean one and the same thing. Daniel declares this great reconciliation takes place within the seventy weeks. He certainly could not mean the yearly reconciliation of the type, because this would be reconciled yearly during the seventy weeks. Here we find Daniel's reconciliation and Ellen's reconciliation 1800 years apart. Again, Daniel declares the anointing of the Most Holy was within the seventy weeks. This must have referred to the great antitpyical Sanctuary, and not to Christ; for it could not be said he was more holy than his Father. By turning to Ex. 30 : 26–29, we find the type went through a process of anointing, that it might become Most Holy.

Now let me turn to the apostle Paul, and see how Ellen agrees with him. In Rom. 5 : 8–10 he says—"While we were yet sinners Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." If Paul does not here refer to Daniel's reconciliation, it is hard to understand what it does mean. In the eleventh verse he says—"Not only so, but we also joy in God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement." Here we have justification, reconciliation, and atonement, all in the past, according to Paul; but according to Ellen, this all took place in 1844. There is only the difference of 1800 years between them.

Ellen has been shown in vision that all these 1800 years Christ was performing the daily ministration. Now let us look at Paul's teaching. Heb. 7 : 27—"Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer sacrifice first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this he did once, when he offered up himself." How terribly Paul was mistaken, when he supposed that with that one sacrifice ended Christ's daily ministration. In fact, by turning to Heb. 9 : 25, 26, we find Paul teaching that Christ does not offer himself yearly, as the high priests offered the atonement sacrifice,—"for then must he often have suffered"; that is to say, when Christ does offer this great atoning sacrifice, he must suffer. Paul seems to think this sacrifice, suffering and atonement all in the past; but Ellen saw him rise up and pass through the door, or veil, to commence the atonement, in 1844. Then, according to Paul, he must suffer in 1844. Paul says in the 28th verse, "So Christ was once offered. Ellen can say, So Christ has been twice offered; or else Paul was mistaken. Heb. 10 : 10—"By the which will, we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." Ver. 12—"But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God." Ver. 14—"For by one offering, he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." Vers. 18–20—"Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh." Now it is evident, according to Ellen, Paul has made a mistake in each of these three verses.

In the first, "there is no more offering for sin." He could not have seen the great atonement offering in 1844.

In the second, "Having . . . boldness to enter into the holiest." But wait, Paul, you cannot enter into this till 1844.

In the third, "Through the veil, that is to say, his flesh." What, the flesh of Christ, the great antitypical veil, that separates the holy from the holiest! Truly, Paul was in the dark, for Ellen saw the veil in 1844, and it was made of most beautiful material, and she saw Christ pass through it into the holiest. Then all these eighteen hundred years, Christ had been in the first, or holy apartment, separated from God's apartment, or Most Holy. We find Paul teaching that Christ entered "into heaven itself"; into "the presence of God for us"; "on the right hand of God," on "the throne of God." Paul knew of no holier place. This was left for Ellen to reveal. Now let the wise ponder well these things, and tell us, is not Ellen J. White a false prophetess?

LONE PILGRIM.

PLEASURE.—I have run the silly round of pleasure, and I have done with them all. I have enjoyed all the pleasures of the world; I appraise them at their worth which is, in truth, very low. Those who have only seen their outside always overrate them; but I have seen behind the scenes; I have seen all the coarse pullies and dirty ropes which move their gaudy machines; and I have also seen and smelled the tallow candles which illuminate the whole decoration, to the astonishment and admiration of the ignorant audience. When I reflect on what I have seen, what I have heard, and what I have done, I can hardly persuade myself that all that frivolous hurry and bustle of pleasure in the world had any reality; but I look upon all that is past as one of those romantic dreams which opium commonly occasions, and I do by no means desire to repeat the nauseous dose.—Chesterfield.

THE BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT.

It is a well known fact that there are those among Adventists who assert that the baptism of the Holy Spirit was confined exclusively to the apostolic age of the church. We have no disposition to write on this or any other subject, merely for the sake of controversy; we write only in the interest of truth.

To receive a baptism of the Holy Spirit we esteem one of the greatest blessings our heavenly Father can bestow on any people. We would therefore wish not to deprive ourself of this inestimable gift, by believing it is not for us. If Christ and his apostles have warranted us in looking for, and receiving the baptism of the spirit, we would joyfully follow their teachings, and receive the holy unction.

Is this blessing pronounced to us? In answering this question we shall claim that the "gift of the spirit," "filled with the spirit," and "baptism of the spirit," all signify the same thing, and refer to the same blessing. To be filled with, or receive the gift of the spirit, is to be baptized with the spirit. Our proof is found in the following Scriptures. In Acts 1 : 5, is found the record of the promise made Christ after his resurrection, of the gift of the Spirit. It reads, "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." This promise was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, the record of which is found in chap. 2. The fourth verse reads as follows: "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost."

This is proof positive that the baptism of the spirit, and being filled with the spirit are identical. Read in this connection the command of the inspired Paul, written in Eph. 5 : 18, "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the spirit." Now unless the instructions contained in the letter to the Ephesians belong exclusively to the apostolic church, which, of course, no one will claim, here is a command to the entire church in this dispensation, to be filled with the spirit; and as "filled," and "baptized" are the same thing, and we have proved that they are, here is our first positive testimony that the baptism of the Holy Spirit is promised to the church during this entire dispensation.

Again, in Acts 10 : 45, is an account of the pouring out of the spirit on the Gentiles. This bestowment of the spirit is declared by Peter in verse 47, and also in chap. 11 : 16–17, to be precisely the same as the church received on the day of pentecost, that is, a baptism of the Holy Spirit. This baptism is called in chap. 10 : 45, and 11 : 17, the gift of the Holy Ghost. We thus prove our second proposition, viz., that the gift of the Holy Ghost and the baptism of the Holy Ghost are identical.

We will now turn to Acts 2 : 37–39. "Now when they heard this they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." "For the promise is unto you and your children, and to all that are afar off; even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

No more positive proof could possibly be adduced, showing that the promise of the "gift"—"baptism" of the Holy Spirit is promised to every son and daughter of Adam's race throughout this entire dispensation; and they will receive its accomplishment if they comply with the conditions named. If any of us, therefore, are destitute of a baptism of the Holy Spirit, the fault is all our own. God has made the provisions whereby we may receive it; he has offered it to us on conditions, and if we comply with the conditions fully, God will fulfill his promise, and give us a baptism of the Holy Spirit.

This must be true, for the word of God plainly states it as true. We need not, then, go mourning in destitution of the Holy Spirit. No. God is willing to bestow it in a baptismal form upon us all. Yea, more. He has inspired his servant Paul to write a command to the church to "be filled"—baptized with the spirit. Let us, dear brethren and sisters, earnestly seek this great blessing, for it is all-important for our comfort, strength, wisdom and guidance . . . When we remember that we are so near the day of his coming, how important that we have the requisite preparation to meet him. Our prayer is, Lord fill us all with thy Holy Spirit. Amen.

But we have other Scriptures we wish to urge upon your consideration. Christ never made but one promise of the Spirit to his church. That promise is several times repeated, but it is in every instance the one promise of the bestowment of the Holy Spirit. This promise is not that in one part of the gospel age he will bestow the spirit in its fulness, and in another portion of the same age in a lesser degree. We are assured that in this dispensation God gives not his Spirit by measure. See John 3 : 34, "He whom God has sent speaks the words of God; for he gives not his Spirit by measure."—Em. Dia.

In King James' translation—our version, the translators have added the words "unto him." But these two words are not in the Greek, therefore the Emphatic Diaglott leaves them out. The simple idea in this text is this: God never gives his Spirit by measure. He does not give the Holy Spirit sparingly, but always in its fulness to those who are prepared to receive it. The promise of the spirit made by the Son of God is recorded in the following texts: John 14 : 26, 27; chaps. 15 : 26, and 16 : 7; Acts 1 : 5. In verse 4, he tells the disciples that the promised baptism of the Spirit is the manifestation, or the gift of the Spirit of which he has told them before. This proves conclusively that the texts we have quoted from John refer to a baptism of the Holy Spirit.

Let us now read John 14 : 16. "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." As the only promise of Christ to the church of a bestowment of the Holy Spirit upon them, is the baptism of the Holy Spirit, which is to abide with the church, not merely during the apostolic age, but forever. This is declared by our great Life-giver, Jesus the Son of God, and must therefore be true.

The question is therefore settled that the baptism of the Holy Spirit belongs to the church, from the time of its bestowment on the day of pentecost, and on forever. Some of us are anxious to attain to all that is made to be our privilege to obtain of the things of God even in this present time, we therefore pray to be filled with all the fulness of God's Spirit. We desire it because of what shall result to us if we have it. We wish to bear the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.—Gal. 5 : 22, 23.

We wish its comforting power in this dark world of trial. We wish to be able to escape all the lusts of the flesh, and "If we walk in the Spirit we shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh."

Finally, when the day of deliverance comes, we want to experience its power to "quicken"—make immortal our frail bodies. To know its quickening power in that day, it must dwell in us now; we must be "filled with the Spirit" in this present time.

May none of us get frightened out of what God has promised us, through fear of fanaticism. If some have been fanatical, there is nevertheless a genuine baptism of the Holy Spirit. Let us all seek to obtain it, and in a few days it will consummate its office work with us by making us immortal, bringing us into an endless life. The days of our pilgrimage are nearly ended, but we are in trials, and perils, surrounded by all the evils of this most wicked age of the world.

We need all the help God has promised in his word, to walk purely before him, and gain a home in the kingdom at last. May God grant to us all a complete, a full baptism of the Holy Spirit. May the great truths we so dearly love, be written on our hearts by the eternal Spirit, then shall our lives be such as will correspond with the holy word.

Brethren, be of good cheer, we are almost home. Keep all ready, and in a very little while we shall hear the voice of our well-beloved bidding us welcome to the joys of an endless, immortal home in paradise restored.—Watchman's Cry.

GOD WILL PROVIDE.

Pilgrim, bound Zionward,
Tempted and tried,
Cast your cares upon the Lord,
Whate'er betide.
Though full of malice keen,
Satan your foe has been,
While on your God you lean,
He will provide.

If you shall troubles meet
Too great to bear,
Take them to Jesus' feet,
Lay them down there.
Ask him to bear them then,
Take them not up again;
Jesus will answer when Called on in prayer.

Though you may be in want,
He can supply;
And you shall never faint
While he is nigh.
Long as your faith relies
Fixed on the promises,
Lift up your cheerful eyes,
Bright is your sky.

CAMP-MEETINGS.

S. S. CHAMBERLAIN.

It is now six years since I have had the blessed privilege of meeting with the dear pilgrims on the camp-ground. But every year I look forward to the time for the Springfield campmeeting with earnest desires to be there, to enjoy all the precious privileges bestowed upon those who do not forsake the assembling of themselves together. It has certainly been my will to be there; but if it is not God's will, I would say, "not my will, but thine be done."

I know that many hearts thrill with emotion at the thought of Wilbraham and Springfield. The first name was more entirely sacred, as to many who assembled there, the meeting was the only knowledge they had of the place, and all the associations of thought were in that connection. That mount seemed indeed a sacred spot, and many hearts were sad at the thought of leaving it forever. The heavenly meetings held in the grove on Mount Wilbraham will not be forgotten by those who took part in them, until all things in this life are faded from the memory.

But to many of the younger members of our families, other places seem peculiarly sacred. Alton is one of these. No one can ever know this side of the great day how much good has been done there. But how long shall these privileges be continued? Are we not now very near the close of this dispensation? Shall we not soon meet around the great white throne, with all the redeemed of all nations? Yes, and we will praise the name of our Lord forever more. Amen.

MRS. PHŒBE PALMER of New York, the most eminent lady preacher in America, says in the Guide to Holiness, of which she is editress:—"Is not He, whose right it is to reign, preparing his people for some great crisis which is to precede his coming to claim the kingdom of this world? So we are disposed to think. The signs of the times are portentous. Let us, beloved, keep our lamps trimmed and brightly burning, looking for and hastening unto the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Jesus, our absent Lord, has told us that he would come again. He has been away nearly two thousand years. Nearly six thousand years has he stood forth before a fallen, redeemed race, as the Lamb newly slain.

The jubilee of heaven and earth—the grand Sabbatic year—is about to break upon us. By the foreshowings of Scripture, we seem to see that there will be a short sharp conflict with the man of sin. But though we may be called to pass through seas of blood, it will but quicken our heart-longing cry, 'Come Lord Jesus, come quickly!'"—Ex.

WHAT CAN CHANCE DO?

A French Atheist is reported to have said: Chance can do anything, if you only give it chance enough;" and added that, "with an infinite number of throws he could throw the Greek alphabet into the Iliad." For, he seemed to imply, from an infinite number of throws, there results an infinite number of positions; therefore the position in which the letters stand in the Iliad. But the first axiom is wrong; an infinite number of throws will not give an infinite number of positions. And the inferences are wrong; the infinite number of positions will not give all positions. Give Diderot a selection of only those particular letters which are in the Iliad, and let him throw with inconceivable rapidity to all eternity, each throw would produce only a confused jumble of letters, without producing orderly sentences. Now in the book of Cosmos (Creation) there are not only orderly and intelligible sentences, but it is all in order; there is no jumble. And it is more impossible to imagine it springing from chance, than to imagine the Iliad thrown from a dice box, or Beethoven's Christus an Oehlberg produced by a dance of cats upon the keyboard.—Bibliotheca Sacra.

CONSISTENCY.—Let us remember that whatever unfits us for religious duties cools the fervor of our devotions, or indisposes us to read our Bible or to pray; whatever we could not engage in with a perfectly clear conscience; wherever the thought of a suffering Savior or a holy God, and the hour of death or of the day of judgment, falls like a cold shadow on our enjoyment; the pleasures which we cannot thank God for, and on which we cannot ask his blessing—these are not for us.

What wait we for? There's work to do
For every heart and every hand,
In this wide world of want and woe,
Where sin has blighted every land.
Let each go forth while yet 'tis day,
Fearless with heaven-inspired might,
To wage a warfare 'gainst the wrong,
And battle bravely for the right.

HOME AND HEALTH.

NEGLECTING OUR BODIES.

Among the most common of these ways are, neglecting to clothe and feed our bodies properly, and denying them nature's most effective antidotes against disease—pure air and pure water.

Most of us wear clothing enough, but somehow we do not succeed in making our bodies comfortable. A tight waist, or a tight shoe, impedes the free circulation of the blood, and so torments us for the time, besides working all the while at nature's fortifications until some point is sufficiently weakened to be easily captured, and forever after held a prrisoner by disease. If fashion so decrees, we expose our bodies to imminent danger and innumerable evils by wearing too much or too little clothing, and even if we avoid extremes and try to dress sensibly, or as conscience requires, we do not dress as health and comfort demand.

With regard to eating, we are just as guilty, or ignorant, as the case may be. We turn away from simple, healthy food, to gorge ourselves with unwholesome mixtures, invented by those who do not understand nature's laws, or the evils resulting from transgression; and then if our intellects are weak, our dispositions unpleasant, we lay the blame at nature's door, and attribute our bodily suffering to Providence, instead of to the irritating, unhealthy food we are crowding our stomachs with.

We spend money for something to quench thirst, and that something, if nothing worse than tea or coffee, is an injury to us, when pure cold water, the beverage God intended us to use, is, or might be, within the reach of all. Only those who use it freely and wisely know how to prize its invigorating, health-giving qualities.

We spend money, too, some of us a great many dollars, in fitting up our homes, and we consider them comfortable only when we have succeeded in shutting out one of God's choicest blessings—pure, fresh air.

We shut ourselves up, night after night, in poorly-ventilated rooms, and when morning comes, we do not allow our lungs to throw out the foul, and drink in the pure air; and then we wonder why we feel so dull and weak. We see that we are growing old very fast, and somehow the world looks so dark, so full of trouble, that we feel discouraged, and we cannot help looking sober, and the young say, "Well, if christians have reason for looking so gloomy, I don't want to be one.

I tell you, friends, we are putting a great stumbling-block in the way of sinners, just by neglecting to care for our bodies properly. Who does not know that a healthy, happy christian will do more good than a gloomy, sickly one?—Earnest Christian.

DRESS OF CIVILIZATION.

I do declare that I think it would be better to die and get out of torment at once than to have to rise every morning for some forty or fifty years and box one's body up in a sort of compressive armor, hang weights to one's hips, and more weights upon one's head—which last are supported by the roots of the hair; put one's feet into shoes a number too small, and not of the right shape, and with heels like stilts; and then go about doing the whole duty of women with a cheerful face and spry air, for from fifteen to seventeen mortal hours out of the twenty-four? That there are so many women who are not frightened into a decline at such a prospect, and that they bravely undertake to do it—nay, more, that they even dream that under such disadvantages they can work side by side with unshackled man, and that they die in trying to do it, certainly says much for their courage, but very little for their common sense.

A man's dress to a great extent is fashioned for comfort. He has contrivances for suspending the weight of his clothing from his shoulders. If the east wind blows he can turn up his coat-collar, button himself up snugly, slouch his hat over his eyes, thrust his hands into his pockets and brave the weather. But imagine a woman removing her hat or bonnet from the angle at which fashion says she must wear it on account of the weather, or turning any of her "fixtures" up to protect her neck and throat, or buttoning up anything that was unbuttoned before, or sticking her hands into her pockets! She would be taken for an improper character out on a mild spree, or for an escaped inmate of a lunatic asylum, should she endeavor by any impromtu arrangement of her habiliments to save her health.—Science of Health.

SUNSHINE AND SLEEP.—Sleepless persons should court the sun. The very worst soporific is laudanum, and the very best, sunshine. Therefore it is very plain that poor sleepers should pass as many hours as possible in the sunshine, and as few as possible in the shade. Many women are martyrs, and yet they do not know it. They shut the sunshine out of their houses and their hearts, they wear veils, they carry parasols, they do all that is possible to keep off the most potent influence which is intended to give them strength, and beauty, and cheerfulness. Is it not time to change all this, and so get color and roses in our pale cheeks, strength in our weak backs, and courage in our timid souls? The women of America are pale and delicate, but with the aid of sunlight they may be blooming and strong.—Home and Health.

MEDICAL HINTS.—The less that simple cuts, bruises, and burns, are meddled with the better. If they are kept clean and excluded from the air, nature will take care of the healing process. The salves and lotions so commonly used are generally irritating rather than beneficial, and hinder rather than hasten the cure. For cuts, a little court plaster to keep the edges of the skin together; for bruises, wet cloths; for burns, a covering of dry wheaten flour, are usually the only treatment, and the very best that can be used. If, from an unhealthy state of the body, or from external irritation, inflammation is produced, something more may be required, the remedy varying with the special case.—Health Reformer.

ENDEAVOR to take your work quietly. Anxiety and over-action are always the cause of sickness and restlessness. We must use our judgment to control our excitement, or our bodily strength will break down. We must remember that our battle is to be won by a strength not our own.

LEARNING TO COUNT.

"Now, boys, you want to be men some day, don't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what do you mean to do when you grow up?"

"I mean to be a sailor, sir."

"I'm going to be a grocer."

"And I a butcher."

"I mean to help mother, sir," was the shrill cry of one of the tiniest of all the little crew.

"That's right!" said I. "Never forget your mother; always try to help her. But if you are to be all these things,—grocers, butchers, and all that sort of thing,—you must first of all learn a great deal, and none of you will get on very well if you are not able to count quickly and reckon correctly. If you mean to be good and successful men of business, you must have your heart right and your head clear. Give your heart to Jesus Christ, and he will keep it right and true. Always be sober, and your heads won't get muddled, as many people's are. Now, suppose we take a lesson in counting as far up as ten; and to help you remember the figures, I will give you a rhyme for every one. Then, to make you more firm in your Band of Hope principles, the rhymes will be about teetotalism. Say them after me:

"Number one, the beer-shop shun.
Number two, nor drink nor brew.
Number three, a teetotaler be.
Number four, keep drink from the door.
Number five, abstain and thrive.
Number six, to teetotal fix.
Number seven, be to temperance given.
Number eight, don't be caught by the bait.
Number nine, a mocker is wine.
Number ten, be teetotal, then."

THE MISSING SHOES.

James Nolan had been constantly in attendance at school for a year, but to-day he was delayed. What could it mean?

"Does any one know where he is?"

"Yes," said a lad; "he went to the fire the other night, and found Pete McCarthy shivering with the cold, just out of bed, with only a bit of an old bed-quilt around him, everything to wear had been burned, so he took off his shoes and put them on Pete, and ran home without, and now he has to wear his mother's or stay in."

"Will they not buy him more?"

"Oh, yes, as soon as pay-day comes; they are not rich, you see."

But James did not have to wait for that. A kind gentleman became so interested in the story of his benevolence, that he gave him a pair, to the great satisfaction of his school-master. James had never been a very good boy, but this act of kindness stimulated him to do right, as no amount of counsel could have done. Indeed, he became from that day, both more diligent in study, and more correct in deportment.

"I never knew I should like to do kindnesses before," he said; "but I mean to keep on now, as long as I live."

Little boys who never thought how blessed it is to help the needy, embrace the first opportunity that offers, and see how blessed it is "to give, asking for nothing again."—Home Guardian.

THE BETTER WAY.

"I want my breakfast," said Georgie. Mamma heard, but did not reply. "I want my breakfast, I'm hungry—mamma! Mamma!" shouted Georgie.

"You need not raise your voice. I heard you when you first spoke to me, but did not reply, because you did not speak properly," said mamma.

"Oh, I forgot. 'The better way' you told me of would be, 'Please, mamma, give me my breakfast," said Georgie, softly. "Is that right?"

"Yes, you know how to behave, but, like many other boys, you do not stop to think. It never sounds well to say, "I want this," or "Give me that." Rude children ask in this way to be waited on. The better way is always to say, 'Please.'"

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 984. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1874. VOL. XXXIX.—NO. 23.

The World's Crisis,
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,
Issued every Wednesday Afternoon, by the ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY,
At No. 160 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass.
GEO. T. ADAMS,
TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

FEAR NOT.

GEO. E. LEE.

Behold! how happy is the man
Who fears not Father's chastening rod,
But who in sore afflictions can
Rejoice, exalt, and praise his God.

Doth sorrow linger at thy door,
Or overflow life's bitter cup?
Be glad! for He that maketh sore,
In deep compassion bindeth up.

What though thy wounds are broad and deep,
And floods of grief surround thy soul?
From thee all harm thy God will keep,
And in his hands will make thee whole.

In troubles oft thou needst not fear,
Nor haste from evil e'er to flee;
But call on Him who loves to hear,
He surely will deliver thee.

Though famine, war, or death draw nigh,
God's faithful ones he will redeem;
In glory they shall eye to eye
Arise and sing redemption's theme.

REPORT
Of the Fifteenth Annual Meeting
OF THE
ADVENT CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, HELD AT
Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 10th, 11th, and 12th, 1874.

Monday, 4 o'clock P. M., Aug. 10th. The meeting was called to order by the President, Bro. S. G. Mathewson, and opened with singing, followed by prayer offered by Bro. I. C. Wellcome. On motion, the Chair appointed Brn. A. W. Sibley, M. A. Potter, and H. K. Flagg, a committee on credentials, and Brn. F. Burr, J. Hemenway, R. W. Wilson, A. Ross, and P. G. Bowman, a committee to arrange the order of business. (Names of preachers and delegates were given to the credential committee.) Whereupon the meeting adjourned till the next morning at 9 o'clock.

Tuesday A. M., 9 o'clock. Bro. M. Batchelor offered the opening prayer. The Chair urged much prayer upon all in view of their responsibility at this time, and hoped all would pay especial attention to the rules of good order. Other names of preachers and delegates were given in, enabling the committee on credentials to make the following report of membership:

The report of the credential committee having been read, Bro. J. H. Whitmore moved its adoption, but by permission changed his motion to a motion to accept the report. The report was accepted and then the motion to adopt as far as read was renewed.

An amendment was moved by Bro. Geo. T. Adams to strike out the name of Eld. J. V. Himes, which had been reported with some hesitancy on the part of the committee. Upon the question of amendment an animated discussion arose, in which Brn. Whitmore, W. L. Himes, Humphrey, F. Burr, G. T. Adams, D. Mathewson, and others, took part, with various pleadings pro and con. Bro. Whitmore thought the course suggested was without precedent, and, if pursued, would render it unsafe for any one hereafter to offer his name as a member. He thought that the committee had no right to report the name as questionable. Bro. Burr thought that what had been published in the papers fully justified the committee in so doing. That the best relief from the difficulties involved in the case was to pass the amendment. Bro. Whitmore urged that Eld. J. V. Himes came as a representative of the Mich. Conference, and that to reject him would be to reject that conference. In reply, it was urged that no conference was ever represented in this body. That every minister was received upon his christian character and co-operation. Bro. Sibley, as chairman of committee on credentials, said that the doubt arose in their minds as to co-operation. Bro. Hemenway said that one object of this Association was the promotion of vital godliness, and those not in good standing were not co-operating. Bro. Whitmore urged that the questionings were based upon idle rumor. He said that if any two responsible men would prefer charges in writing over their own signatures of immoral conduct against Eld. J. V. Himes, he would withdraw that name. Brn. F. Burr and D. Mathewson declared their readiness to do so, and did certify in writing over their signatures certain facts against the moral character of the individual referred to. The question upon the amendment was called for, and a yea and nay vote demanded. The amendment to strike out the name prevailed by 64 yeas to 18 nays, 26 casting no vote. The meeting adjourned till two o'clock P. M.

2 P. M. Prayer was offered by Bro. H. C. Smith, after which the minutes of the last meeting were read, amended and adopted. Bro. Humphrey moved that Bro. Hook's name be dropped from the list of members, as he had denied the name of Adventist, and had not co-operated with us. Bro. Wellcome added also that he had disclaimed all connection with the Advent people, and had refused to organize Advent churches. Bro. C. E. Barnes urged that the rejection of the name, and the refusal to organize churches in the Advent name, was no ground for rejection; that preaching vital godliness and the Lord's coming was certainly co-operation. Bro. Bowman wanted to know, if the platform was so loose as just described, to whom he belonged. A good Methodist might claim membership on such ground. He wanted Bro. Hook to get right up and say whether these things stated about him were true or false, and whether he felt like working with us or not. Bro. Hook said he was like the boy in the Scriptures who refused to go into his father's vineyard. He had repented and went. He loved us, and had joined the Advent Christian Conference in California. Bro. Humphrey withdrew his motion, and the whole meeting was in the happiest mood. The report of the credential committee, as amended in the morning, was then adopted.

The committee on business reported the following order, viz.:—

1. The reading of the Secy's Minutes of the A. C. A.
2. The Treasurer's Report of the A. C. A.
3. The Address of the President of A. C. P. S.
4. Secretary's Report of the A. C. P. S.
5. The Treasurer's Report of the A. C. P. S.
6. The Business Agent's Report of the A. C. P. S.
7. Election of Officers for the A. C. A.
8. Election of Editors of the "World's Crisis."
9. Election of Officers of the A. C. P. S.
10. Promiscuous Business.

This report was accepted and adopted, whereupon the Secretary of the A. C. A. read his minutes, which, having been previously adopted by the Board, required no further action. The Treasurer of the A. C. A. reported no funds received and none paid out. The President of the A. C. P. S. read his annual address, which was replete with timely thought and profitable suggestions. It was accepted, adopted, and by vote ordered to be printed in tract form for gratuitous distribution.

(The President's Address has not yet been received.)

The Secretary of the A. C. P. S. read the following minutes of that Society for the past year:—

SECRETARY'S MINUTES
OF THE
Advent Christian Publication Society, for the Year ending Aug. 10, 1874.

Mr. President and Brethren of the Advent Christian Association:—

There have been four meetings of this Society during the year; two of which were held on the ground, and two at its office in Boston.

At its first meeting, held Aug. 27th, 1873, the following business was transacted:

It was voted, that Geo. T. Adams be continued Business Agent the ensuing year, at the same salary as last year, $300; and that his salary as Treasurer be as last year, $300.

That each Editor or the World's Crisis be paid $14 per week for services.

That each Secretary be paid $20 for services the past year.

That the Editor of the Young Pilgrim be paid $20 per month.

That the society make a special effort to raise $2000 or more, the ensuing year, for the publication and free distribution of tracts, and that the Editors be requested to make from time to time an appeal for this object through the paper.

That the Editorial Committee be paid $200 for their services the ensuing year.

That the following resolution, which was adopted last year, be re-adopted this year:

Resolved, That no appointments be published in the Crisis henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood in this resolution the Editors, Editorial Committee, Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given. That H. V. Davis, J. G. Hamblin, and L. T. Cunningham, constitute the Auditing Committee the ensuing year.

The second meeting of this Society was held at its office in Boston, March 27th, 1874, all the members being present viz:— A. Ross, S. G. Mathewson, M. Batchelor, L. Boutell, W. H. Mitchell, H. A. King, L. T. Cunningham, H. V. Davis, J. G. Hamblin, Geo. T. Adams, and A. W. Sibley.

The minutes of the Secretary were read and approved; after which it was Voted, that Brn. O. R. Fassett, James Hemenway, and John Couch, be invited to be present.

The Business Agent stated to the meeting, that various requests had been made to the managers of the Crisis to publish in its columns certain articles regarding Eld. J. V. Himes, and matters connected with him.

The agent also read letters from several brethren, some of whom were Elder Himes' particular friends.

After a full consultation, in which all present participated, on motion, the President appointed a committee of three, consisting of the following brethren: Geo. T. Adams, S. G. Mathewson, and H. A. King, to draft resolutions expressing the sense of the meeting.

The committee retired, and having attended to the duty assigned them, returned and reported the following preamble and resolutions (the names of committee, in the second resolve, being afterwards inserted by vote of the meeting), which were unanimously adopted:—

Whereas, grave charges have been preferred against the christian character of Eld. J. V. Himes; and,

Whereas, Elder Miles Grant has been accused of improperly dealing with the case; and,

Whereas, serious divisions are growing out of these circumstances, which threaten the interests of Christ's cause; therefore,

RESOLVED, That we, the Advent Christian Publication Society, deem it our christian and official duty to recommend the holding of an ecclesiastical council, to try this case, to be appointed as follows: two persons to be selected by Eld. J. V. Himes, two by Eld. M. Grant, and these four to choose three others, the seven to compose a council to investigate and decide the case.

RESOLVED, That the following brethren, Geo. T. Adams, S. G. Mathewson, and H. A. King, be a committee to forward the above recommendation to Elds. Himes and Grant, with authority (in case either party refuse to comply with the above recommendation) to collect the facts in the case for publication in "The World's Crisis."

The following resolution was also adopted by the meeting:—

Resolved, That the above committee be authorized by this Society to expend a sum not exceeding three hundred dollars, in defraying the expenses they shall deem necessary in holding said council.

It was Voted that the Treasurer be authorized to pay the expenses of the members in attending this meeting. Adjourned.

The third meeting of the A. C. P. Society was held at its rooms in Boston, July 10th, 1874, all the members being present. The following business was transacted. It was voted, that Brn. Grant, Couch and Barnes be invited to be present. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Bro. G. T. Adams, chairman of the committee appointed to correspond with Elds. Himes and Grant in relation to a council recommended in the resolution passed March 27th, 1874, read a lengthy correspondence which he had had with Eld. J. V. Himes and his counsel, from which it appears that they "absolutely refuse to accept the proposed council."

Eld. Grant accepted it, so far as it related to him.

It was voted, that the part of the resolution passed March 27th, 1874, relating to the collection of the facts in the case for publication in the Crisis, and also the appropriation to defray the expenses of the proposed council, be now rescinded.

The following preamble and resolution were then presented and unanimously adopted:

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTION.

Whereas, It is a well-known fact that serious charges against the moral and christian character of Eld. J. V. Himes were preferred many months ago; and,

Whereas, It is a fact that there has been a hearing on said charges, or a part of them, before one or more councils; and,

Whereas, It is a fact that Eld. J. V. Himes has made certain acknowledgements—a confession, and an agreement, which agreement, it is claimed, he has violated, thereby causing many to look upon him as unworthy of their support and sympathy, as a minister of the gospel; and in connection with his previous course, producing division in the body; and,

Whereas, Recognizing the existence of the above facts, the Board of Directors of the A. C. P. Society, with the sole desire to restore harmony in the body, did, at its meeting March 27th, adopt resolutions recommending the selection of a mutual Council to meet, hear, and decide the whole case (Buchanan or Jackson, Mich., being suggested in the correspondence); and,

Whereas, After earnest effort, by continued correspondence of several months, said council has been positively declined,—and all others; the only body before which Eld. Himes consents to have a hearing being "The Michigan Conference," of which he is the President, and elected since some of the charges were known;—and,

Whereas, It is a fact that, under the existing circumstances, a large number of Adventists do not regard the Mich. Conf. as an impartial, unbiassed body to try this case, and therefore it is not satisfactory; therefore;

Resolved, That with the facts in the case already before us, we, the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society, having in charge the publication of the "World's Crisis," the "Young Pilgrim," and various interests of the cause of our soon coming Lord, deem it our duty to the body at large to make the above statement, and to say that we do not regard Eld. J. V. Himes as occupying a position in which we can extend to him the right hand of fellowship, or bid him God speed, as a worthy minister of the gospel of the kingdom of God at hand.

Voted, That the foregoing action of the Society be published in the next issue of the World's Crisis.

Eld. H. A. King having tendered his resignation as a member of this Society, the following preamble and resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Bro. H. A. King—a member of the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society, also a member of the Publishing Committee, and one of the Directors of the Advent Christian Association—feels it to be his imperative duty now to resign these positions; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the Advent Chris. Pub. Society accept with deep regret this resignation, and in parting with our brother, we cheerfully commend him to all christian churches, as every way worthy of their confidence, and wish him a hearty success in doing the Lord's will.

The Treasurer was authorized by vote of the Society to pay the expenses of the members in attending this meeting. Adjourned.

This Society held its fourth annual meeting on the ground, Aug. 10th, 1874. The following business was transacted:

The minutes of the Secretary were read and approved.

The reports of the Treasurer and Business Agent were read and adopted, and ordered to be read before the A. C. Association.

The minutes of the Secretary for the year were read and adopted, and ordered to be read before the A. C. Association.

Whereupon the Society adjourned sine die.

A. W. SIBLEY, Sec'y A. C. P. Society.

It was moved that the Secretary's report be accepted and adopted. Bro. Whitmore protested against the endorsement and publication of that portion of the minutes relating to Eld. J. V. Himes, urging that the Society had no jurisdiction in the case. Bro. Adams explained the action of the Society, stating that they had received many letters and a telegram in regard to this case, and that an earnest effort had been made to have an impartial council chosen to decide the case, which effort had been frustrated by Eld. J. V. Himes and his counsel. Eld. J. V. H. had also published a paper justifying his course. Eld. Whitmore stated that Eld. Himes had not published any documents in his own behalf until he had been published in the Times as unworthy of confidence. He read a protest and appeal from the Michigan Conference against the action of the Society. He said that he had offered to submit the case to an ecclesiastical council, if the President of the Michigan Conference would waive his objections. This he was unwilling to do, claiming that that conference had the only right to try him. He urged that it was an outrage to publish a a man before he had been tried, and before charges had been preferred against him. He had written to Bro. Adams over and over again for the charges in writing, but could not get them. He urged that this Association should rebuke its servants for daring to do as they had done.

Bro. Burr called attention to a few simple facts: 1st. Charges have been preferred. 2nd. Councils have been held, one at Amboy, Ill., and one at Brodhead, Wis. 3d. These councils had convicted Eld. Himes of guilt, and suspended him. 4th. Eld. Himes had confessed his guilt. Bro. J. H. Whitmore read a letter from a part of the Amboy council, forgiving Eld. Himes upon his confession, also a letter from the Western Pub. Society, forgiving him and restoring him to fellowship. Bro. F. Burr's signature was attached to the last of these letters. Bro. Burr explained how his name came to be there. He was moved by sympathy to do what he had no business to do.

Bro. D. Mathewson explained more fully. He said that after the adjournment of the Western Adv. Pub. Association, a meeting was called of its members to consider the case of Eld. Himes. It had no authority. The brethren desired the matter settled. Eld. Himes said he would confess anything and everything if they would receive him and restore him. He (D. Mathewson), as chairman of the meeting, appointed a committee to draw up a confession to be signed by Eld. Himes and published in the paper as a final settlement. The confession was drawn up, signed by Eld. Himes, and forwarded to be published; but Eld. Himes sent a letter after it, telling them not to publish it. He (Himes) afterward telegraphed to publish it, but it never was published, and so the thing fell through. Bro. J. H. W. raised a point of order, that Bro. M. was speaking in self defense, and not to the matter before us. The Chair overruled the objection, on the ground that the doings of the A. C. P. S. were called in question. That Society was charged with publishing a man without a trial. The speaker was showing how councils had been held, and how they originated. Bro. D. Mathewson proceeded, and entered for a moment into some shocking details of alleged facts, on account of which the council at Brodhead was appointed. These statements led to a general wonder why this sad case had not been more thoroughly dealt with, and publicly disposed of long ago.

The question of adopting the Secretary's minutes was called for, and the adoption was carried by a full vote.

The Treasurer of the A. C. P. S. and Business Agent now reported, and these reports were both accepted and adopted; whereupon the meeting adjourned to meet to-morrow morning at 9 A. M. in the Tabernacle.

BUSINESS AGENT'S REPORT.

Mr. President, and Brethren of the Advent Christian Publication Society:—

Another eventful year has rapidly passed, and we are permitted, in the good providence of our heavenly Father, to come together at its close to look over the several departments of our work; and in the discharge of my duty as your Business Agent, I herewith present to you my report of the business operations of the Society for the period extending from Aug. 21st, 1873, to Aug. 6th, 1874.

At the beginning of the year our capital, as given in our last annual report, was $18,501.21. Our present capital we put as follows:—

Property on hand, valued at	$9,048 78
Cash in the Treasury	369 15
Amount due the Crisis, valued at	7,000 00
" " " Young Pilgrim, valued at	400 00
" " on book account, valued at	800 00
Total capital	$17,617 93

While it is true that the amount due on the Crisis account is larger than it was last year, yet in consequence of the dullness of the times, and the increased difficulties of making collections, we have not put our estimate of its value any higher, but make it the same as last year; hence the apparent decrease in our capital.

Our receipts during the past year were $18,866.50.

Book and Tract Department.

During the past year, we have published more than 1,200,000 pages of tracts. We have issued a new question book for Sunday Schools, entitled "The Child's Bible Question Book," which is having a good sale. We have also published an edition each of the Scriptural Question Book, and of the Jubilee Harp. The value of books and tracts on hand at the beginning of the last year was $4,231.72. The cost of books and tracts made and purchased during the year is $2,518.04. Total books and tracts, $6,749.76. The receipts for books and tracts were $3,967.76. Due on book account about $100.00 more than last year. Amount received from the Tract Fund, for tracts granted, $715.84. Total sales and grants, $4,783.60. Value of books, tracts and papers on hand, $3,691.95. Total, $8,475.55.

The World's Crisis.

The financial panic and disarrangement in business affairs throughout the country, during the past year, we find have affected the circulation of our paper, as it has most others; many old subscribers feeling compelled to relinquish a paper they esteem most highly, for the want of means to pay for it, being unwilling to run in debt. It has also been difficult to induce people to subscribe for a paper which they had not previously taken; hence the number of new subscribers is somewhat smaller than usual; which, together with the fact that we have dropped many names from our list for non payment of dues, will account for the reason of the decrease in our subscription list.

The number of names on our subscription list, as reported last year, was 9,638. The number now is 9,584. The number of new subscribers, 1,485; the number of stoppages and delinquents cut off, 1,539; making a decrease of 54. The number of names on our free list is 860, being a decrease of nine since last year.

The receipts for the Crisis during the year have been, on the subscription list, $13,032.79; on the poor fund, $79.95. Total, $13,112.74. On and after Jan. 1st, 1875, payment of postage on all newspapers must be made by the publishers, on being mailed; hence it will be advisable, at our present low rate, to make a small advance in our subscription price, from that date, to meet this increased expense.

The Young Pilgrim.

The number of names on the subscription list of this paper is 3,933; last year, 3,965. Number of names on the free list, 31; last year, 35. Number of exchanges, 21; last year, 28. Receipts on subscription list, $1,003.24; on Pilgrim Fund, $19.25. Total receipts, $1,022.49.

The Tract Fund.

The amount received on the Tract Fund during the year is $670.08. There is a wide field before us in which to scatter tracts; and applications are continually coming in; so that, to meet all of the demands, we are able only to grant a limited supply to each request. Our tracts are gladly received, and we doubt not much good is being accomplished by the free distribution of tracts. Grants have been made from this fund to the amount of $715.84, which is $45.76 more than received during the year. The deficit, however, is made up from a balance left over last year.

The Poor Fund.

The amount received on this Fund the past year is $79.75; while 860 copies of the Crisis sent on our free list, at $2.00 per copy, would amount to $1,720.00. It will be seen, therefore, that in addition to the free distribution of tracts, reading matter equal to nearly 3,300,000 pages of tracts have been sent out, for which we have received only $79.75. It is, however, a great satisfaction to know that the hearts of many of the poor of the flock are made glad by the weekly reception of our paper; and we should be happy to grant the requests that are constantly being received from others of the same class, for the Crisis free, did our means warrant it; but do not see how we can well do so while our receipts on the Poor Fund continue so small. Will not the friends of the cause help the Office in this direction?

Brethren, we are evidently amid the perils of the last days. Men will not endure sound doctrine. Their ears are turned from the truth to fables. Yet there are those who desire the truth as revealed in the word of the Lord; and others there are who may be plucked as brands from the burning. Let us, therefore, not waver in our efforts to spread abroad a knowledge of the great central truth of our time—the coming and kingdom of the great Deliverer, "the Lord himself," "from heaven"—and with thankful hearts, that we have eyes to see and ears to hear, do all within our power to extend the circulation of our papers, books and tracts, lifting our hearts to God that he would bless our efforts to his glory and the good of our fellow beings, and finally crown us with life eternal in the world to come.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GEO. T. ADAMS,
Business Agent A. C. P. Society.

OFFICE OF THE ADV. CHRIS. PUB. SOCIETY, BOSTON, AUG. 6th, 1874.

We, the undersigned, having examined the accounts of Geo. T. Adams, Business Agent of the Advent Christian Publication Society, as embodied in the foregoing Report, find them correct, according to the best of our knowledge and belief.

Wednesday, Aug. 12th, 9 o'clock A. M. Prayer was offered by Bro. P. G. Bowman. On motion, the Chair appointed Brn. Chas. Goodrich, E. McCulloch and E. G. Higgins as committee on ballots for Officers of the A. C. A. Ballots were received at the call of the roll, according to a previous motion. While this committee were out, the meeting, by vote, proceeded to the next item of business. It was Voted, That we elect two Editors for the ensuing year. The Chair appointed Brn. James K. McLean, George L. White, and Geo. L. Teeple, as ballot committee for Editors of the World's Crisis. Ballots were deposited as before, and by vote the committee were authorized to wait on the committee now out, to receive their votes. On motion, the election of Officers for the A. C. P. S. was proceeded with, and the Chair appointed Brn. Geo. A. Streeter, R. Mosher, and P. S. Butler, as ballot committee. This committee was also authorized by vote to wait on the two committee now out, to receive their votes. Ballot committee for Editors reported—

For Bro. J. Couch.....91 votes.
For Bro. M. Grant.....79 "
Scattered among nine other Brn., 36 votes.

Brn. Couch and Grant were declared elected as Editors of the World's Crisis.

The meeting then adjourned, according to a previous motion, till 1½ P. M.

1½ P. M. The Vice President, Bro. M. Batchelor called the meeting to order, and prayer was offered by Bro. L. T. Cunningham. The ballot committee for A. C. A. reported:

For President, S. G. MATHEWSON...79 votes.
For Vice President, M. BATCHELOR...81 "
For Secretary, H. F. CARPENTER...90 "
For Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS.....91 "

For Directors.

The above list was declared elected.

On motion, a nominating committee of five were nominated from the floor to nominate a campmeeting committee of seven, to be elected at the stand. Brn. J. Couch, Cornelius Pike, M. R. Phetteplace, F. Burr, and Sam'l E. Jones, were nominated, and by vote authorized to appoint such a time as they might deem proper to present their nominations at the stand.

Bro. A. A. Hoyt, as chairman of a committe from the ministers' meeting, presented a petition and an appeal in behalf of Sabbath School libraries.

Sunday School Appeal.

1. We are deeply and painfully impressed with the fact that the religious instruction of many of our children has been sadly neglected.

2. This deficiency of training is partly attributable to our great lack of Sunday Schools.

3. We have been restrained from making vigorous efforts in the direction of Sunday Schools, (1) by our constant expectancy of Christ's coming to close the scenes of human probation; and (2) by the difficulty of procuring books that are free from fiction and false theology.

4. In view of these facts and difficulties, and with a desire to remedy the existing evil, we now urge upon the Advent Christian Association the propriety and importance of appropriating five hundred dollars or more, to be used in preparing, publishing, and selecting an adequate list of Sunday School books, such as we shall feel safe to put into the hands of all our children.

A. A. HOYT, }
FRANK BURR, } Committee.
A. A. PHELPS, }

This appeal was accepted, and by vote referred to the Editorial Committee of the A. C. P. S., with the recommendation that that they devote a thousand dollars to secure such books as are suitable to instruct our children in the truths of the gospel. Interesting remarks in favor of the petition were made by Brn. Bowman, Goodrich, Wellcome, Hoyt, Grant, and Couch.

The committee on ballots for the A. C. P. S. reported:

For President—A. ROSS.....88 votes.
For Secretary—A. W. SIBLEY.....74 "
For Treasurer—GEO. T. ADAMS....83 "

Editorial Committee.

The above list was declared elected. No other business being presented, the Association adjourned sine die.

H. F. CARPENTER, Secretary.

HYPOCRISY desires to seem good rather than to be so: honesty desires to be good rather than seem so. The worldlings purchase reputation by the sale of desert; wise men buy desert with the hazard of reputation. I would do much to hear well, more to deserve well, and rather lose opinion than merit. It shall more joy me that I know myself what I am, than it shall grieve me to hear what others report me. I had rather deserve well without praise, than do ill with commendation.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Sept. 16, 1874.

Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the "CRISIS," issued from this time forward, are at the rate of $2.00 a year, payable IN ADVANCE.

Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of Drafts, Bank Checks, and Postal Money-Orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS.

THOSE who send articles for the "CRISIS," should direct them to the "EDITORS OF WORLD'S CRISIS," Boston, Mass.

PLEASE READ, REMEMBER, AND ACT ACCORDINGLY.

The brethren, sisters, friends—one and all—whoever may write to this office, sending articles for insertion in the Crisis, or subscriptions for the same, notices, appointments, reports, or orders for papers, books, tracts, or anything of the kind, will confer a favor and do the right way by directing their letters in either one of the following ways:—

"EDITORS OF WORLD'S CRISIS, Boston, Mass."

"WORLD'S CRISIS, Boston, Mass.," or

GEO. T. ADAMS, Agent, Boston, Mass.

Those who send articles for the Young Pilgrim should address—

"EDITOR YOUNG PILGRIM, Boston, Mass."

In no case address letters on business connected with the papers, or office, to any of the clerks, compositors, or helps in this office.

AGENT.

NOTICE.

To those who have sent us money to renew their subscription on the paper, and do not see the figures changed, we would say, Have patience with us, and we will do as fast as we can. On account of the campmeetings, a large amount of work has accumulated in the Office, but we hope in the course of two weeks to have all straight.

GRACE.

The grace of God is made, in the Scriptures, the grand and all-important principle in the divine economy which offers salvation to our lost and ruined race. Gospel grace is a divine and heavenly element originating in infinite love, and flows out from God, the fountain of all goodness. Grace is applicable only to rebels; those who have rendered themselves unworthy of favor or protection of law by the voluntary transgression of it. It can proceed, therefore, only from those who are executives of law to those who are transgressors of that law. "Grace in the strict sense of the term, is spontaneous favor to the guilty or undeserving; mercy is kindness or compassion to the suffering or condemned. It was the grace of God that opened a way for the exercise of mercy toward men." Webster. This definition of the word grace, evidently gives the Bible sense in which it is used. Grace is a principle of kindness and sympathy conferring favors and blessings upon those from whom law, founded in justice and equity, would withhold them. It grants mercy where law would execute penal judgments.

Law, founded in equity and justice, demands of its executives certain protections and blessings upon its loyal subjects. Common law requires a father to protect and bestow certain blessings upon his offspring, as long as the child shall be faithful to the parental government; but when he becomes a designing rebel against that government, the father, by that law, is no longer under obligation to bestow those blessings upon his child. He would then be justified by that law to deliver the son up to the executives of justice to be punished. But if the parent possessed love for the wicked child which produced kindness and sympathy for him, so that he would protect him from the executioner of justice, giving the rebel an opportunity to turn from his rebellion and become again a loyal and honored child, this kindness would properly be called grace. Kindness to those to whom it is due by law is not grace, but faithfulness; but when it is exercised towards those who have rendered themselves undeserving of it, then it is grace.

When a government voluntarily places men in official positions, it is under lawful obligation to protect and reward those men as long as they remain faithful to their trust. Those acts of the government granting favors to its servants are not acts of grace, but of faithfulness to its officers. But if those officers should steal the government's treasures, and abuse its sovereignty, and it should still exercise such kindness and interest in their welfare as to delay to execute its laws upon them, putting them on probation for future honors; such acts of kindness, which no law required it to perform, but were produced entirely by love, are acts of grace.

God, as the Creator of our world and all its creatures, bestowed upon man, as the head and ruler of this world, great honors and rich blessings. Those acts of kindness on the part of God to man were manifestations of his faithfulness to his creatures, as a glorious Creator and bountiful Benefactor. But when our first parents became traitors to God, and abused the sovereignty of his government by willfully breaking his law in yielding obedience to his open enemy, they put themselves outside of all law, as to protection and its promised blessings. They had then forfeited all lawful right to existence, and all the blessings of life. All love and favor expressed and bounded by law had been passed; and if no love had existed in God, reaching man when he had passed beyond the protection and secured blessings of law, then he must have ceased to exist that day. God expressed this when he said, "For in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." He was put in a "dying" condition that "day," and did die according to that statement; for dying must precede being dead. All his posterity from that day have only lived in a "dying" condition. The poet has truthfully said, "The day we begin to live, we all begin to die." Our race, from the date of the fall, has been in the condition of a condemned criminal standing upon the scaffold with the noose around his neck, the excutioner waiting a few moments to give him opportunity to prepare to meet his Judge. Every moment of life given to a sinner is a manifestation of the wonderful grace of God. That grace holds the uplifted sword of justice from striking down the heaven-insulting rebel, and also offers him, upon the easiest terms, reconciliation and restoration. God, being the author of man's existence, and the supporter of his life, had a perfect right to demand his service and adoration, this being the object for which he created him; and also a perfect right to cause his existence to cease when that object could not be obtained by perpetuating it.

Upon this principle God enacted his law for the government of man, specifying that if he proved to be disloyal, he should be thrown into a "dying" state, and should "die." God explained what he meant by this death. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." That is, this death should carry him back to the condition he was in before he existed as man. If a man, having a right to invent and manufacture a machine for a certain purpose, made of gold, silver, and iron, and it fails to accomplish that purpose, has he the same right to destroy it that he had to make it? Has he a right to melt down the gold, silver, and iron, and return them into bars as before? All will say that the right to destroy the machine (not the metals of which it was made) legitimately resulted from the right to make it. So it is with God. He had a right to create man for a certain purpose, and that purpose could not be accomplished without making him a moral agent, which necessarily put him on probation, making his future destiny contingent upon the volition of his own will. That volition could turn but two ways, either to loyalty or disloyalty to his Creator. Loyalty would protract his existence forever. Disloyalty would cut short his existence as unworthy of his preservation.

Therefore, when man became a rebel against his Creator, he placed himself outside of all protection or favor from law and justice; both condemning him and demanding his immediate destruction. His condition was dark and hopeless, unless love for him could be found, producing grace which could benefit outlaws.

But how glorious and ever blessed is the truth, that love was found in the bosom of our heavenly Father, which offered grace to our ruined race, giving all who should sin personally a probation, so that they could have an opportunity to voluntarily regain what they had voluntarily lost. This grace appears God-like and blessed, when we consider that it embraced, so kindly and affectionately, those who had so persistently abused that fatherly love by the most aggravating treachery and blasphemy. But the infinity of that love, and the boundlessness of that grace appears most glorious when we contemplate the means necessary to be employed to apply it for the salvation of sinners. The love which would consent to suffer such rebels to return to God with the expectation of receiving his favor, appears truly glorious. But when it manifests a willingness in Deity to give his only begotten and well beloved Son, the darling of his heart, the brightest of all the glorious ones in heaven, to leave the seat of his exaltation with the Father, and stain his spotless robes with the sins of a debauched race, taking upon himself and suffering the terrible curse for rebellion, opening his bosom to receive the last poisoned dart hurled by an insulted law of justice against a ruined, condemned class, it appears superlatively and infinitely God-like and glorious.

O matchless and indescribable love and grace of God in giving his Son to die for those who hated him! Open our eyes, Holy Father, that we may get a glimpse of this adorable grace, viewing its height, depth, and eternal results in offering salvation to an outlawed family. Fill our hearts with the same divine essence—infinite love—that we, too, may be willing to sacrifice the darling objects of our affections for the salvation of those who may hate Thee and us. O grace, grace, infinite, adorable, eternal grace! feeble words to express the hinge upon which our world hangs over the gulf of everlasting oblivion, and on which it swings out into eternal blessedness.

"WHAT SHALL WE DO?"

It is important that every christian should let his light shine wherever he may be. The last days are upon us, and each one should do all in his power to persuade others to be ready for the great and glorious day, now at hand. It is a question of interest as to what is the best way to spread vital godliness and true holiness. In order to be successful the subject should be made prominent on all proper occasions. But let it be done in great kindness, gentleness, patience and perseverance.

The following advice from the Christian Standard is worthy of careful consideration:— M. G.

"Now what shall be done to garner the wheat? Let every one upon returning to his home and usual place of worship, seek the communion of the sanctified. Wherever two or three can be found enjoying this experience, there establish weekly meetings—there worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness—there 'give to him the glory due unto his name'—there testify meekly, but constantly by your spirit, life, and lips, that Jesus is competent to save to the uttermost. There too invite others to come and taste with you the heavenly gift, and be made partakers of the Holy Ghost. Do not start your meeting in any spirit or manner of opposition to the stated means of grace, nor allow yourself to assume the semblance of an attitude adverse to your pastor. Select an afternoon, or vacant evening for your service. Ask the pastor to announce the meeting and its purpose. If a slant, a jeer, a gibe, is flung at you, or your cause, occasionally, pay no attention to it. If any one not in sympathy with you, should so far forget himself as to indulge in bitterness, vituperation or insult, be infinitely careful not to retaliate. Do not allow such treatment to provoke in you even a spirit of complaining—much less of censoriousness."

BRO. GEO. THOMSON is confined to his bed, and is "utterly helpless." Those who wish to help a poor, suffering, faithful minister of Christ, can do so by sending a gift to Bro. Geo. Thomson, Prairie du Sac, Wis.

BETHEL CAMPMEETING.

The Bethel (Vt.) Campmeeting began Saturday, Sept. 5th, and closed the 13th. It is pleasantly located on elevated ground, in a retired place, about two and one half miles from Bethel village. We left Boston at 8 A. M., the fifth inst, and arrived at the camp-ground about 4 P. M. We found Bro. Carpenter on the ground, sweetly trusting in the Lord, while busily at work in preparing for the meeting. In the evening we had a profitable season in the worship of the Lord. The leading spirit manifested showed that there was a general hungering and thirsting after righteousness, as is being manifested throughout Christendom.

The movement on holiness is certainly a remarkable one. It has had no equal since the days of the apostles. It is most emphatically the work of the Holy Spirit. Satan is doing all in his power to stir up prejudice against it, but it goes steadily forward, producing blessed results. The more it is opposed, the more it spreads. Those who may try to hinder it will find they are engaged in dangerous business, that will bring no reward.

The campmeeting is now (Tuesday, Sept. 8th) in a very healthy condition. It is as far advanced in spirituality as such meetings are generally the last of the week. There is a blessed harmony among the preachers and people on the subject of consecration and holiness, and nearly all professors present, who have not received the gift of the Spirit, are taking steps to secure the priceless boon. We are expecting glorious results from this meeting. A Congregational and Methodist minister are present, and pleasantly co-operating with us in the good work. Sectarianism is at low ebb, and the tide of pure christianity is rapidly rising. Praise the Lord.

M. G.

THE CAMPMEETINGS this year have been excellent, and have shown an increased hungering and thirsting after righteousness, in the hearts of those looking for the coming of Jesus. The impression is deepening that the Savior will soon appear, and that what is done must be done quickly. The spirit of sacrifice for the good of others, is also increasing, which shows that the Spirit of the Lord is occupying a large place in the hearts of the disciples of Jesus. The omens are encouraging for good people, but alarming for those out of Christ. They have but a narrow margin left for repentance.

It is a sad fact that the unconverted are becoming more and more careless as they approach the day of the Lord. They have resisted such great light, and abused so many privileges, their hearts and consciences are seared by the hardening process of sin. It is very difficult to persuade the sinners of New England to become christians, because they have had the highest privileges, and have trampled them under their feet. The greater the light resisted, the stronger the bonds of the enemy become. How little they realize their perilous condition.

M. G.

REVOLUTION.

Some of the Spiritualists are talking with much boldness as to what they purpose to do when the hour arrives for action. They do not hesitate to say that they intend to overturn the present order of society, the existing governments and religions, especially the Christian system. We believe Spiritualism is Satan's pet religion at the present time, and is to-day the most dangerous, subtle foe with which Christianity has to contend. In it is combined all that is anti-God, anti-Bible, and anti-christian.

In Hull's Crucible, Sept. 4th, 1874, we find the following leading editorial:

"The fact is, advanced minds everywhere begin to see that Spiritualism means more than raps and tests—it means Revolution—a complete overturning of religious, political, social and financial systems. Weak backed and weak headed Spiritualists will, as a result, either desert the cause entirely, or resort to all kinds of abuse of those who are saying and doing that which will precipitate the incoming Revolution."

In another editorial, in the same paper, we find the following announcement of the system of marriage, taught by those who follow the teaching of the demoniacal spirits:

"It is none of the business of society, whether we, as an individual, love one woman or a dozen; and whether that love shall culminate in the sexual act with one, or all of them, is a matter that only concerns us and them. But should we make our 'Declaration,' of monogamic relations with one woman to the world, we should virtually consider it taking away from all others who might need. This would not only be cruel, but wicked; and with our present views we could never do it. If we see fit, we shall consort with one woman; but we shall do so no longer than we shall see it a necessity to both parties; and if we shall see other needs during the time, we shall live true to them."

Sentiments like the foregoing are now put forth boldly before the public. This is an element in the "New Religion" offered at the present time by prominent Spiritualists. Can any thing be more fully Satanic?

M. G.

A VISIT WEST.

We have made arrangements to visit friends and a few churches in the West this fall. Our object is to see relatives, and do a little good in the cause of Christ, if possible. We shall visit Central Illinois, and Iowa. We expect to spend Sunday, Sept. 27th, at Rochester, N. Y., and Sunday, Oct. 4th, at Buchanan, Mich. Shall probably return through Philadelphia and New York. All my appointments East are withdrawn.

J. C.

NEW RELIGION.

It is a well known fact that the Spiritualists call their system a "New Religion." Instead of being a "new religion" it is but a new name for an old one, as by Satan to the ancient heathen. We commend the following sensible thoughts to the thoughtful, in relation to the doings of Spiritualism:

M. G.

"Where are the schools and colleges that have been established? Where the arts and sciences, aided and advanced? What great moral force is thrust into the heart of the world? What homes blessed and cheered, and what new sanctities inspired? What new ties created, and what old ones strengthened? Who have been made more holy in disposition? What great works of philanthropy been performed, and what monument of disinterested benevolence left for our admiring and grateful world? We confess we look in vain for any satisfactory answer to these questions, from a religion that was to supplant Christianity, because Christianity had lost its power, and was being outgrown by the world.

Now man's nature demands that a new religion should furnish something better than an old. It should tell us something better than we know about God, with far more satisfactory proofs of his wisdom, power and goodness than we possess. It should unfold higher and nobler conceptions of his purposes and his providences. It should fill the soul with loftier hopes and aspirations, and with irresistible freshness of power and impulse. It should improve on everything which Christ, or Peter, or John, or Paul, has given us of the life immortal, and its sublime fruitions. It should look forward and upward, not backward to Bramah, Budd or Mahomet; Confucius, Zoroaster or Plato.

We could say much right here, but we simply ask, Has the new religion done this? It has not one word in all its literature that can come within the remotest comparison with the gospel of John—the conversation of Jesus with the disciples before and at the last Supper, the sacerdotal prayer—recorded from the 13th to the 18th chapters of John. It has not one word that can be named with the parables of the Master! not one that can be looked at twice beside the 8th chapter of Romans—the 15th of 1st Corinthians, or that can be named the same day as equalling that grand and matchless Epistle to the Ephesians. In greatness of conception, in grandeur of diction,—in loftiness of ideal, in towering, and yet perfectly just and warrantable splendor of climax, this single Epistle alone, more than matches all that the new religion contains, or ever will, a thousand times over."

RIOT OF CRIME.

The advance of crime is truly alarming. The tide of wickedness is rising continually, with no prospect of abatement. The powers of darkness are having a jubilee. Men seem to be throwing off all restraint, and acting out their concealed corruptions. Perils abound more and more. Human life is but little regarded, virtue and innocence find but little support. The church of Christ may well cry, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

The following, from the Republican Banner, Aug. 26th, 1874, affords some idea of the state of things in the world:

"For gross licentiousness in its most horrible and revolting aspect, the year eighteen hundred and seventy-four stands forth from the calendar as the blackest of the century, so far, at least, as this country is concerned, and nearly half the year yet to hear from. This riot of crime has been confined not to the lowest orders of society, but embraces all classes from cap-stone to mud-sill. Crime in all its phases has held high carnival from one end of the land to the other. Neither depopulating pestilence nor famine breeding panics have staid the reckless raid of diabolism or set their warning seal of disapprobation with visible effect. If, according to ancient tradition, cities were destroyed for the reeking iniquities of their people, well may we marvel that the besom of destruction is withheld from our own land. The daily record is sickening—appalling. Men turn from it with loathing, and hide it from their households, lest from their hearthstones shall be bred 'shapes hot from Tartarus.'"

TENT MEETING.

Brn. Couch and Grant:—The 3d of Sept. our Mass. Mission Tent was pitched in this place. I arrived the next day, and found the tent in a beautiful grove all ready for business. Bro. Leslie had every thing so perfected, that every thing was comfortable for the meeting. The people came out to hear, so we had quite a congregation in the afternoon, and many more in the evening. It soon became evident that the interest was increasing; the people were interested in what they heard, and they wanted to hear more. Saturday and Sunday we had preaching morning, afternoon and evening, beside prayer, conference, and children's meetings daily. We soon found that the Holy Spirit made the truth mighty in convincing and convicting the people, and some ventured the inquiry, "What shall I do to be saved?" Others found themselves backslidden from the Lord, and were ready to confess their wanderings, and a return to the fountain; so we dare not stop our meetings, but have continued them from day to day, and shall till over another Sunday.

And I will say, to the glory of our God, that the meetings are creating a great interest in all this region of country. They come in from the towns near by, so by the grace of God the good seed is being sown. The Advent message is being given, and the Lord is doing wonders. Glory to his ever blessed name.

The old and the young are in earnest to find the way of life, and every seat seems to be an anxious seat, although there is no great excitement, but a convincing of the better judgment of the people. The tent is well filled every evening. The old Advent message, with the Bible truths as simple as they are, have not lost their power to convict and convert. So, dearly beloved, keep at the specific work. O how purifying, how sanctifying, this gospel of the kingdom! Only get men to believe it. I wish the tent could be put up in many places where the Advent voice cannot be otherwise heard.

Brn. Potter, Leslie, Merriam, and others, are with us, but best of all, Jesus is with us.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 13th, 1874, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

FROM BRO. J. A. CARGILE.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brethren:—Two weeks ago, by the blessing of God, I formed another church in Alabama, near this place, with eight lovers of truth; one of whom is a minister. He has become convinced that we have the truth, and has followed me in casting his lot among the despised followers of Jesus. Thank the Lord. We now have four preachers here, within twenty miles, and we have good reason to look for others soon. The following two days, after the church was formed, we continued the meeting with Brn. Smith, Waldrop and Stuart. The next Monday night, at Bethesda church, Bro. J. J. Smith and myself ordained Bro. D. B. Waldrop to the work of preaching the gospel, and administering its sacred ordinances. The following week, or a part of it, we spent in a revival meeting, conducted by the M. E. South brethren. Seventeen have been converted, and much good done.

Friday night we started for Philadelphia, Tenn., to hear a discussion on the immortality of the soul, between Bro. A. M. B. Graham, of our faith, from the Michigan Conference, traveling in the interest of a sewing machine company, and a Bro. C. B. Martin, of the Baptist church. Found considerable excitement. The Baptist church was closed against us, but we were told that the Methodist brethren would open their house for us, and desired us to preach that night. We consented. A little after sunset, we were informed that they had declined the use of the house to us.

Bro. Graham and myself replied, "All right." An aged gentleman (Bro. Porter) told us, if we would empty his wood shop, it was free for us. Many true friends came to our assistance, and we soon cleared the room of some wagons, buggies, and other lumber, and by seven o'clock a small audience was comfortably seated, and ready to hear us try to preach Jesus. It was the first time we ever met Bro. Graham. God blessed us. We had a good time. Next morning (Sunday) Bro. Martin was on hand in due time for the debate, but is was very wet and rainy, and they mutually agreed to postpone the debate till next Sabbath. We tried to preach at eleven o'clock A. M., Bro. Martin at four P. M., and Bro. Graham at seven in the evening.

Coming home on the train this morning, I formed the acquaintance of a gentleman from Atlanta, Ga., who endorsed our views, after hearing me express them.

I thank God for sending Bro. Graham to my help just at a time when my hands are so full of work for the Master. He is a young man of fine talent, and a mind well stored with Bible truth, and a heart brim full of God's love—just the man I need. We were only together about twenty-four hours, yet I love him as though we had known each other all our lives.

Dear brethren, I now think, if the Lord opens the way, that I will spend November in Arkansas. Let us have your prayers for God's blessing on our labor in these new fields. I firmly believe that what is done must be done quickly, for our Master is at the door.

Stevenson, Ala., Aug. 31st, 1874.

FORESHADOWINGS OF EVENTS.

There exists at the present moment a prevalent impression among God's people, that important events are at hand,—that a crisis greater than any which has appeared since the beginning of time, is fast approaching, and that however long and short its continuance, it will result in the discomfiture of the enemies of God, and the deliverance and enlargement of his people. We hear of this expectation from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south. It is a conviction which has forced itself upon their consideration—which has sprung up spontaneously in their minds. We find a definite expectation of events, great and terrible, coupled with most undefined conceptions respecting the particular forms they may assume,—a clear apprehension of their general character, bearing, and results, united with obscurity of vision in regard to their special attributes and accompaniments; a remarkable unity of sentiment as to characteristic features, with some diversity as to subordinate details. This state of mind which pervades the christian world is precisely that which we ought to expect on the eve of an era so momentous. It is sufficient to stimulate prayer and intelligent observation, whilst it neither interferes with freedom of action, nor with the due performance of public duty.

Whence comes a unanimity so marvelous—a consent almost universal? Doubtless the same reasons essentially have, at one time or other, entered the hearts of all, and determined their judgment. But few comparatively may have given themselves the trouble to trace their conviction to its sources, to distinguish its several grounds, and to sum them up in order.—Signs of Our Times.

BAPTISM AND RANTISM.

In coming to the consideration of the two words before us, we would know as much about their origin and place in their original language as possible. To do so, we must first consider them orthographically and technically, and then follow them into the English language, at least as far as they may be traced there, and learn what they mean to us, and what we may know of them. The subject is a deeply interesting one, and we approach it with prayerful hearts, praying God's blessing to rest upon us while we engage in it.

We propose, first of all, to present a tabular view of the words, placing them parallel to each other, in order to present to the eye of the reader the characteristics which they have in common, and also their essential difference. We so arrange the table that, commencing first with the root of the verb, we may trace it to the English derivative. We then follow the nouns in the same manner, closing each "part of speech" with the English derivative word. We request the reader to examine it carefully, and, as far as possible, critically; for the better the list is understood, the clearer will be the consideration of the subject.

We have only to preface the list with the remark, that it will be observed that all the Greek words of the second column have before them an apostrophe. This is because, in the Greek, the two letters of the alphabet "R" (rho) and "N" (nune) have always this character, called the "spiritus asper," or rough breathing, and we therefore give it its place, but drop it in forming the English word; because the English language will not allow its use, and all words which come to it must be made to conform to its rules.

We also call attention to the fact that the Greek "Z" has the sound of "dz," and therefore Baptizo is to be pronounced as though spelled baptidzo, and Rantizo as though it were rantidzo; a point which is often overlooked in speaking the words. The following is the list of the words in their order:—

VERBS.	VERBS.
Greek Root Letters—Bapt—from Baph.	'Rant.
Infinitive Mood—Bapt-ein.	'Rant-ein.
Present Indicative—Bapt--o.	'Rant-izo.
Frequentative Verb—Bapt—izo.	'Rant-o.
English Derivative—Baptize.	'Rant-ize.
Progressive Part. Bapt-i-zon-tes.	'Rant-i-zon-tes.
Eng. Derivative Part. Bapt-iz-ing.	'Rant-iz-ing.
NOUNS.	NOUNS.
Greek, from Bapt-o, Bapt-os.	'Rant-os from Ran-to.
Masc. Gen., Bapt-is-mos.	'Rant-is-mos.
Fem. Gen., Bapt-i-sis.	'Rant-i-sis.
Bapt-is-ma.	'Rant-is-ma.
Eng. Deriv.—Baptism.	'Rant-ism.
Greek, Bapt-is-tes.	'Rant-is-tes.
English, Bapt-ist.	'Rant-ist.
Greek, Bapt-is-te-ri-os.	'Rant-e-ri-os (from Ranteer.)
English, Bapt-is-te-rite.	'Rant-e-rite.
Greek, Bapt-is-te-ri-on.	'Rant-is-tron.
English, Bapt-is-try.	'Rant-is-tror.

Having thus completed the list, and discovered that "Baptism" and "Rantism" are both alike derivative words, and in the same manner are derived from the Greek, we come to the inquiry as to how we have "Baptism" in the English language so commonly used? We have it in the Bible, as the name of a rite or ordinance, and it is used at the present time in its literal sense exclusively in that manner. As a word, having the right to its place equally with all others, we do not question it; and yet, when we consider the method by which it has come into our language, and the use that is made of it, we find it necessary to question such a state of things. To do this, we must consider the fact that there are two methods of making people acquainted with the meaning of the words of a foreign language.

The first is by the method referred to, of transferring the word itself, making the necessary idiomatic changes; and the other is by transferring the meaning of the word, by expressing it in a word which is original to the language into which the meaning is to be introduced; or, secondarily, into a derivative word, which has been made from some language beside the one which is being rendered into the other; care being taken always to select such a word as will the most nearly express the true and original meaning which is to be conveyed. There is, it is true, some difficulty in doing this, as there are not always to be found words of different languages exactly corresponding in meaning. There are shades of thought and feeling which words in some languages cannot express as well as those of some other languages; and there are some deep tides of feeling, and ranges of outstretching thought, that no words can express; they are too deep and broad and high for any utterance of the tongue. This is often true of christian feeling, and the poet well expressed it when he said—

"Tongue can never express
The sweet comfort and peace
Of the soul in its earliest love."

But there can be some approach to it, and when thoughts and feelings, in the meaning of words, are to be changed from one language to another, it should be done as faithfully as possible. The method of transferring the word is the poorest method of all, and should never be adopted if it can possibly be avoided; never, at all events, unless the word is, when transferred, as well known and understood as any other derivative from any other language. The method of transferring the meaning is that which is familiarly known as translating. We have several samples of translations, among which the English Bible, known as King James' Version, is the most remarkable. In it we have, for the first time it was ever used in the English language, or perhaps in an earlier translation, the transferred word, Baptize; which is, in its presence there, the proof that all "Our English Bible" is not a translation.

We propose to show the method by which this work was done, by taking another passage, and adopting the same method. In Acts 15: 3, we read that the apostles declared the "conversion" of the Gentiles. In this verse we will select the word "conversion." As we have seen already, it is a derivative word, and comes from the Latin language,—from convertum. The Greek word was therefore rendered into a derivative from the Latin. That original word was epistrophe, which comes from the verb epistrepho, which is in turn from strepho, and means "to turn." "To turn" is Anglo-Saxon, and the word might have been rendered "the turning," so that the passage would have read, the apostles declared "the turning of the Gentiles."

Now, suppose the translators had chosen to have adopted the same method with this word, which they did with Baptism; it would have been as follows: According to the rule for Anglicizing words of the class to which epistrophe belongs, we have only to change the final e into y, and we have an English word, Epistrophy, and the verse might read that the apostles declared "the epistrophy of the Gentiles"; but we have not exactly such a word in the language, and it would become necessary to learn it, as it has become necessary to learn the meaning of Baptism; but we hope it would have been understood more correctly than we think Baptism has been.

We already have a word nearly like it, the word "trophy," from trope, or trophe, which is allied to strepho, and means the same, "a turning." It is used to represent an evidence of victory or conquest; so we speak of the "trophies of war," the "trophies of a conqueror," because such things are a proof that the battle "turned" in favor of the warrior who secured these "trophies." And so the Gentile converts were the trophies of the apostles; that is, they "turned to" them, and so were "converted."

As the word Baptism, however, has never been translated, we must consider it as it is, and must learn its meaning by resorting to the original; and we must understand "Rantism" in the same way. We wish to understand them in their classical sense, which is their only pure and true meaning, and then pass to their scriptural meaning and use, which must correspond with the classical meaning; for, although Baptism as a word is in the Bible, and Rantism is not, yet the original word of one is there as well as the other, and is full of interest and importance.

It will be seen by our list of these two words, by what method the Greek words become English ones; "Baptize" being from Baptizo, and is made by changing the final letter "o" (the Greek omega) into the English "e." Rantizo furnishes us also with "Rantize" in the same way. So we have "Baptizing," from Baptizontes, by substituting for the Greek termination, ontes, the English one, "ing." We also get "Rantizing" in the same manner. "Baptist" comes from Baptistes, by dropping the final "es" of the Greek verb. "Rantist" is also made in the same way. We find a slight difference in spelling the words "Baptisterite" and "Ranterite"; the difference of a single syllable; but the words have the same relative sense. They become English by dropping the termination "os," and substituting "te." Again we have "Baptistry," from Baptisterion, by changing "erion" into "y"; and Rantistror, from Rantistron, by dropping the "n" and substituting "r," so as to give us the termination "or." It is thus that these words are formed, and by this means they have as far as they have come into use become known, whether properly understood or otherwise.

In our next paper we propose to consider their true and perverted meaning.

REVIVAL MELODIES.—We have just received four choice revival melodies, prepared by Wm. McNeal, Haverhill, Mass. They are entitled (No. 1), "I know I love Jesus"; (No. 2), "What shall I say to-day?" (No. 3), "Depth of Mercy"; (No. 4), "Jesus calls, he speaks to-day." Each melody has also an excellent temperance song attached to the same sheet. Price 5 cts. single copy; 50 cts. a dozen; $4 per hundred, all postpaid. Address Wm. McNeal, Box 59, Haverhill, Mass.

THE PROMISED RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS.—Acts 3: 19-21.

Here St. Peter, under the influence of the outpouring of the holy pentecostal spirit, speaks certain words bearing upon the glory to be revealed at the restitution of all things at the second advent of Christ. Remarkable is it at so early a period of the church that this grand and deep subject of the word of God should have been connected with his preaching of Christ crucified for the conversion of sinners, but it is my opinton, as it is the opinion of many others, that Christ crucified preached, and Christ glorified proclaimed, should be constantly connected together. And so it was on this memorable occasion, just after his preaching at the day of Pentecost, when he speaks of the times of refreshing, and of Jesus, "whom" he says, "the heaven must receive till the times of restitution of all things," and those times he speaks of thus: "which times God has spoken by the mouth of all his prophets since the world began." Here, then, we have the importance of the subject set before us in connection with the preaching of the gospel. Taking only this view of Christ's humiliation, you take a very gloomy, one-sided, imperfect view, but take the humiliation of Christ and his suffering, in connection with his future glorification, when he shall personally reign over this very earth upon which he suffered, then you have a more complete and proper scriptural view of the revealed word. The hope it presents is that of joy following after suffering, and of the crown succeeding to the cross.

It is most pleasant to think of restitution after humiliation, and of light and glory succeeding the approaching days of thick darkness. We are all, I think, agreed that we are on the verge of days of unequalled tribulation. But it is pleasant to know that at evening time there shall be light, for these threatening days of darkness are soon to be succeeded by the brightness of the Lord's presence, and the Lord's presence not alone, but his presence with his glorified church; the Bridegroom's presence with the bride in united glory. And as the reflection of that glory, there shall be the extension of light and truth and the universal knowledge of the glad tidings of the gospel, "peace on earth and good will towards men" all over the earth. Let us look forward to this, for we need some scriptural hope to uphold and comfort us in this world of daily trials, heavy trials, trials of the world, the flesh, and the devil, trials within and without. We need some great object of consolation to bear us up and sustain us with the Holy Spirit's grace, and we find such an object of hope and consolation in Christ not only as a crucified and interceding Savior, but also as a coming and reigning King, when there shall be a manifestation of the sons of God in resurrection glory with their Lord, and that period is close at hand.—Signs of Our Times.

OF THAT DAY AND HOUR KNOWETH NO MAN.

Mention the prophecies to a multitude ignorant of them, and about nine out of every ten persons will confront you with, "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man; no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Mark 13: 32. They seem to have learned this verse only. How strange! And they always quote it in order to prevent others from studying the prophetic parts of God's word. Is this the design the Lord had in view when he uttered the words of this verse? Having just given the most remarkable chronological prophetic discourse in the whole Bible, did the Lord then intend by this verse to discourage its study in order to understand it? Who so rash as to charge such intention upon the Son of God?

That the Great Prophet intended this discourse to be understood is evident from the following parts of it: "Whoso readeth let him understand," Matt. 34: 15; "Behold I have told you before" (25th verse), "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors" (33d verse); "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh," Luke 21: 28; "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man" (36th verse.)

Of this we may be certain, that the spirit that influences persons to neglect the reading and studying of any part of the Bible is not from God. Hear what the Lord says concerning the book of Revelation, of which many professed christians speak so lightly, not to say irreverently: "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand." Rev. 1: 3. Let us strive for this blessing—let us read and hear.—Prophetic Key.

Correspondence.

From Sr. I. A. Goodrich.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—With a heart full of love and gratitude to our heavenly Father, I wish to tell you of his unspeakable goodness to poor me. O how many of you know of his goodness by a blessed experience! I rejoice to-day with all my heart that I ever found such a loving Savior. While I think of his goodness, I am often led to weep and praise his dear name. Well might the child of God sing,

> "I'm happy I'm happy, O wondrous account;
> My joys are immortal, I stand on the mount;
> I gaze on my treasure, and long to be there,
> With Jesus and angels my kindred so dear."

O what a blessed time that will be, when we get where we can shout and sing the praises of God and the Lamb, as eternal ages onward roll. Is it not enough to repay the sufferer here? I am glad that I am worthy to be one of that happy number. Thank God, death cannot prevent us from seeing him as he is. Thank God for a full and free salvation, which is purchased without money and without price. If ever I had reason to thank our heavenly Father, it is now, when I realize that we can stand in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free. This is our heaven-bought privilege. Whosoever Christ maketh free is free indeed. May God help us to act and live as free children, while we sojourn here in this vale of tears. I expect to reap a rich reward "in the sweet by and by." As He knows what we need, and what is for our best good, I leave myself in his hands. I know he will do just what is right by me.

If we will make Christ our choice, he will bring us through every trial, and at last we shall reach the shore of eternal blessedness and unfading glory. The way may look dark; we may see no light ahead, and our frail bark may be tossed to and fro on the sea of trouble; but even there we should have no fears, for Jesus has said, I will be with thee; I will never leave nor forsake thee. Blessed thought! How often he appears to our relief, and we hear that sweet voice saying, "It is I, be not afraid." In view of such precious promises, let us cling to Christ, who is our life, so that, when he shall appear, we may realize what we have gained by making Christ our choice.

New Britain, Ct.

EXCITEMENT AMONG THE JEWS.—The Indian Portugera, a Portugese journal published at Goa, says a great excitement has been caused among the Jews at Bombay by the issue by their pontiff, H. B. Koyn, who has lately arrived from Jerusalem, of a pamphlet entitled, "The Voice of the Vigilant"—the object of this voice being to persuade the Jews that it is useless waiting longer for the promised Messiah, as this is Jesus Christ himself, "whose doctrines have been spread all over the world without sound or force. Compare," says the pontiff, "the Old and New Testaments, and the truth will be seen." He says that he was born in the old law, and under it was elevated to the pontificate, but the light had already penetrated with its rays into the deep recesses of his mind, and he is therefore persuaded, and with well-founded reasons, that it is in vain that the Messiah is now looked for.—Guide to Holiness.

Obituaries.

JONES. In Massena, N. Y., Aug. 1st, 1874, Mary, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Jones, aged twenty-two years, five months, and seven days.

The subject of the above notice had neglected the one thing needful until just before her death, when she whispered, "Lord, forgive," which gave her parents hope that in answer to prayer she would be saved, as was the dying thief. She had read her Bible nearly every night the past year before retiring, and had become interested in its teachings, and in conversation with the companion of the writer had manifested a desire to become a christian. She doubtless would have given all she possessed, the last hour of her life, if she could have served the Lord one month. But her end had come.

May the dear friends who read of this sad and unexpected event, take warning from the same, and spend that time in the service of Christ which many, like Mary, would gladly have done when it was too late. She was a kind, amiable, and affectionate daughter. She leaves many friends who mourn that so fair a blossom should be plucked, and left to wither and decay. Her parents are wonderfully sustained by the christian's hope, knowing that the Judge of all the earth will do right. C. PIKE.

Advent Times, please copy.

GATCHELL. In Hermon, Aug. 26th, 1874, Rachell Gatchell, wife of Bro. Wm. Gatchell, aged fifty-two years and seven days.

She sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, in sure and certain hope of a part in the "first resurrection." Her husband and children sorrow deeply, but they are sustained by the hope which is like an anchor. Funeral sermon by the writer, from 1 John 3: 2. F. A. BAKER.

CARPENTER. Fell asleep in Jesus, July 23d, in Palmyra, Mich., Sr. Sarah A. Carpenter, aged fifty-three years, six months, and twelve days.

Sr. C. was an invalid; had not stood on her feet for four years. She was a great sufferer. About one year ago she became helpless as a babe. Thirty years ago she embraced the blessed hope of the Lord's appearing by putting on Christ by baptism.

She was one of the old primitive christians. She leaves a large circle of friends to mourn her loss, also a husband and two children. She chose her funeral text (1 Cor. 15: 55) from which I spoke words of comfort. J. W. BRITTAN.

CLARK. In North Adams, Mass., Aug. 27th, 1874, of diphtheria, Lizzie E., only daughter of Jerome and Sophia Clark, aged ten years.

Lizzie was a child of rare beauty and promise. In her were centered strong affections and high hopes, but death has rudely crushed them all. The blow falls heavily upon the stricken parents and an only brother, as well as a large circle of friends, who bitterly feel her loss; but they sorrow not as those without hope. We tried to comfort the stricken mourners at the funeral from the words of Rev. 21: 4. ELIZABETH WARREN.

DEMING. In Cornish, N. H., July 8th, 1874, Bro. John W. Deming, aged seventy-four years, nine months, and twelve days.

We saw in him exemplified the beauty of a consistent character. Although he suffered severely the last years of his life, yet he was patient, submissive, and meek. Death has triumphed. But soon we expect to hear him shouting victory over death and the grave.

"O hail, happy day!"

Funeral services by Eld. J. G. Bennett. C. H. FLETCHER.

MAGOON. In North Hatley, P. Q., July 31st, Cecelia Magoon, infant daughter of Bro. Lewis and Sr. Linda Magoon, aged one year and four months

As they committed that little rosebud to the silent tomb, they could lift their aching hearts to their Father, and say, Thy will, not ours, be done. They know that soon our Life will appear, and bring their loved ones with him. O, glorious hope. Sermon by the writer, from 2 Kings 4: 26. JOHN CHAPMAN.

KENASTON. In North Hatley, P. Q., Aug. 7th, 1874, Bro. Nathan Kenaston, aged eighty-two years, two months, and five days.

Notices.

OHIO CONFERENCE.—The annual session of the Ohio State Conference will be held, the Lord willing, with the church in Norwalk, Huron Co., O., commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 15th, and continue over the following Sabbath. This will be an important meeting for the cause of truth in this State. Let every A. C. Church in the State appoint delegates without fail; also let all who love the appearing of our Lord in glory, and the resurrection of the dead, come. All are welcome, and will be provided for.
E. MCCULLOCH, President.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The next quarterly meeting of the first Christian Church of Wayland and Loon Lake, called the Church of God, will be held at Wallace, N. Y., commencing Oct. 3d, at one o'clock P. M., and hold over the following Sunday. A cordial invitation is extended to all to come in the fulness of the gospel of Christ.
For the church, E. C. COWLES, Pastor.

WAYNE COUNTY TENT.—The Lord willing, the Wayne Co. Mission Tent will be pitched in Wallworth, Wayne Co., N. Y., to commence a series of meetings, Friday evening, Sept. 18th, and to continue over three Sundays. As this will be the last tent-meeting this year, we hope to see a large number of our brethren and sisters. Wallworth is six miles north of Palmyra. JAS. E. WELLS. R. C. BROWN.

P. S.—We will report our meeting at Williamson (which is in progress) next week. The Lord is with us, and many have enlisted for Jesus. Pray for us. J. E. W., R. C. B.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The first quarterly meeting of the A. C. Quarterly Conference of N. W. Kansas, for the second conference year, will be held, the Lord willing, with the A. C. Church of West Creek, Republic county, commencing Friday evening, Sept. 25th, and continuing over Sunday, and as long as the interest demands. Bro. J. C. Smith, State Evangelist, is expected to be present with the State Mission Tent, to assist in preaching; also Sr. M. J. Clark is expected to be present to preach the word. All of like precious faith are cordially invited to attend.
E. N. BLISS, Pres.
J. S. THORP, Sec.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Northern Pa. and Southern N. Y. Conference will be held at Little Marsh, Tioga Co., Pa., commencing Sept. 24th, to hold over the following Sabbath. Those coming by R. R. will leave the cars at Middlebury, on the Corning and Wellsboro road. Trains leave Corning at 7.50 A. M. and 7.30 P. M. Teams will meet the trains at Middlebury on Thursday and Friday.
E. C. COWLES, President.
J. W. TAYLOR, Secretary.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The Advent Christian Church of East Creek, Ohio, will hold their next quarterly meeting on the third Saturday and Sunday in September. We earnestly request the brethren of the surrounding country to come and meet with us in a feast of redeeming love.
D. T. CALL, Pastor.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting held in Salisbury, N. H., at the Union meeting-house, commencing Friday, Nov. 27th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands.
C. H. FLETCHER.
D. F. LEAVITT.

THERE will be a meeting for prayer and conference at Bro. B. C. Crabtree's (the Tileson House), Mattapan, Friday evening, Sept. 25th. All who love to pray are invited.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The first quarterly meeting of the Advent Christian Conference of Nova Scotia will be held, the Lord willing, with the church at Scott's Bay, commencing Oct. 1st.
JOHN J. WOODWORTH.

FOUND on Alton Bay camp-ground, two vails, two parasols, one shawl, one fan, one traveling bag, one pair of eye-glasses and two cases, three pair of gloves, and some odd ones, and several pocket handkerchiefs. Direct to J. G. SMITH, Farmington, N. H.

LOST on Alton Bay camp-ground, one black water-proof cape, red lining, without hood. Any one having found the same, will confer a favor by forwarding it to J. M. JENNESS, Alton, N. H.

NOTICE.—As I expect my labors in this section will soon close, I would say I shall be ready to go and preach "the gospel of the kingdom" anywhere, as the Lord may open the way, the coming fall and winter. Any wishing to correspond with me can direct for the present to A. P. MOORE, Linden, Genesee Co., N. Y.

HAVING closed my labors with the church at Clinton, Clinton Co., Iowa, I am now at liberty to go into other fields as the Lord may direct, and brethren and friends may desire. My address until further notice will be Adrian, Mich.
SILAS B. MABEY.

I HAVE resigned my pastoral charge at New Hartford, Iowa, for the present, and removed to Raymond, Iowa. J. W. BURROUGHS.

☞ THE ALTON BAY Campmeeting Committee are requested to meet at the Crisis Office, Boston, Mass., Wednesday, Sept. 23d, at 10 o'clock A. M.
J. COUCH.

Discussion.

The discussion between Miles Grant and Wm. C. Thurman will be held in Mystic Hall, Charlestown, No. 70 Main Street, commencing Sept. 22d.

DEARLY BELOVED, the Mass. Mission Tent is in the field. We have no funds in the treasury. Shall it stop, while the calls are being made upon us, for lack of means? L. BOUTELL.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. For Bro. Normandean, from Thos. W. Brooks, $5.00.
GEO. T. ADAMS.

Tent Meeting.

The Mass. Mission Tent will be pitched in Keene, N. H., Friday, Sept. 18th. Meetings will be held each afternoon and evening on week days, and on Sunday at the usual hours of worship. At this meeting an effort will be especially made for the conversion of sinners, and it is hoped that all the lovers of Christ in Keene and the region around will come and labor for the lost and perishing in these last hours of time. Come, all ye laborers in the vineyard, and work.
L. BOUTELL.

CONFERENCE.—The New York State A. C. Conference will be held with the church at Yorkshire, commencing Friday evening, Sept. 25th, and hold over the following Sunday. The church at Yorkshire has never united with the conference, but desires now to do so. Although it is at one side, yet we hope all that can will make an effort and sacrifice to attend, and come praying God's blessing upon the meeting. Yorkshire is on the Buffalo, N. Y., and Philadelphia R. R., thirty-five miles from Buffalo. Stop at Arcade Station, which is about a mile from Yorkshire village. Those coming with teams will be well cared for. We hope to see a good turnout in the name of the Lord.
M. R. MILES, President.
A. P. MOORE, Secretary.

SISTER H. B. HASTINGS will address the Sabbath School at Union Hall, South Ashburnham, Mass., Sunday, Sept. 20th.

N. H. ADV. CHRIS. CONFERENCE.—The Lord willing, the fourth quarterly session of the N. H. Advent Christian Conference will be held with the church at So. Sutton, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 1st, to hold over the following Sabbath. An invitation is extended to all to come to the feast. Our preaching brethren especially are requested to come—all who can labor together for the salvation of the perishing. May the Lord greatly bless.
T. W. PIPER, G. W. BROWN, D. W. DAVIS, } Committee.

TENT MEETING.—There will be a tent meeting held in Granville, N. Y., commencing Sept. 19th, and hold as long as duty seems to demand. The large tent owned by the Hoosick Valley Conference will be pitched, under which the word of the Lord will be dispensed, showing our immediate proximity to the day of God, and the preparation requisite for the event. Brethren and sisters in adjacent towns are invited to come over and help us.
H. K. FLAGG, A. W. SIBLEY, } Tent Committee.

THE Lord willing, there will be a meeting under the New Hampshire Mission Tent, at Warner, Waterloo Village, N. H., commencing Saturday evening, Sept. 19th, and holding over Sunday, Sept. 20th, and as long as duty may demand. Come and help in this meeting.
ENOCH MORRILL.

THOSE wishing the New Hampshire Mission Tent to be pitched in their vicinity, will please write immediately to ENOCH MORRILL, South Deerfield, N. H., Chairman of Tent Committee.

GROVE MEETING.—There will be a meeting in a grove at Vitum Hill, in Sandwich, N. H., on Sunday, Sept. 27th, and Oct. 3d. A cordial invitation is extended to all the good people to meet with us, and assist us in the work of the Master. If the weather should be cold or rainy, the meetings will be held in the Vitum school-house.
E. S. MOULTON.

THERE will be a meeting at Wesley, Me., commencing Sept. 24th, and hold over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited. Brn. N. G. Reed and J. R. Hall are expected.
For the Brn., M. W. CORLISS.

THE ADV. CHRIS. CONFERENCE of the Province of Quebec will (D. V.) hold its next annual session at the "old meeting-house" in Hatley, P. Q., on Wednesday, October 7th, and continue over the Sabbath. All of like precious faith, who are in sympathy with its objects and work, as set forth in its Constitution, will, we trust, make a special effort to attend, and unite in its business deliberations, and religious exercises of preaching, prayer, and song; which, we trust, will be so scriptural, so wisely and kindly performed, as to result in permanent good to the cause of our coming Savior. Especially we would say, let all the ministerial and lay members in the several districts, as far as is possible, arrange to attend. Come early, and come prepared to stay through the meeting. Let due reports, either written or verbal, be forthcoming from the entire field. Let isolated brethren and sisters who feel an interest, and cannot attend, write epistles to be read in conference, and direct to the President, or Secretary, at Ayres Flat. Please attend to this in good season. Christian union is strength; let us have it in action, feeling, and fact. Christian hospitality and kindness will be shown to all who come, by the resident brethren and friends, as on former occasions. Come praying for and expecting good.
CHAS. P. DOW, President.
E. C. ORCUTT, Secretary.

THE Lord willing, I will commence meetings at Cowdersport, Potter Co., Pa., Oct. 1st, and continue one week. Will attend to baptism.

I may be addressed at the above place for further labor, if desired, or at Warrensville, Lycoming Co., Pa. J. T. ONGLEY.

I WOULD say to all the brethren and sisters in the State of Kansas, that I am now traveling with the Advent Christian Mission Tent of Kansas, with Bro. and Sr. Smith. I expect to go with the tent until the last of September; after which time, I will visit and hold meetings with all who may write to me, and inform me of their whereabouts. If it is the Lord's will, and the people desire it, I will devote Oct., Nov. and Dec., to holding meetings from place to place, as the interest demands. Let all who want me to visit their neighborhoods during those three months, and preach the word, write to me, and inform me when they would like me to come. Direct to VIRGIL HUNT, Wellington, Sumner Co., Kansas, Box 104.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork.

Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives of Yale College. 8vo., 68 pp.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject.

We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—One copy, 25 cts.; one dozen for $2.50; sent by mail, postpaid. $17 per hundred, by express. Please order freely. AG'T.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." For sale at this Office. AG'T.

CORRECTION.—The postage on the "History of the Advent Message," will be 20 cts., the postage on books having been reduced one half.

A NEW BOOK. "THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express. AG'T.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

BY HENRY CONSTABLE, A. M.

We have this valuable work in its unabridged form of 330 pages, neatly bound in cloth, for sale. Price $1.00; postage, 16 cts.

SEED.

The farmer planted a seed—
A little dry, black seed;
And off he went to other work,
For the farmer never was known to shirk,
And cared for what had need.

The night came with its dew—
The cool and silent dew;
The dawn came, and the day,
And the farmer worked away
At labors not a few.

He builded solid walls—
The stout enclosing walls,
Lest guileful foes come in,
And quick possession win
Of fertile lands and halls.

He trimmed the growing vines,
The clambering, reaching vines,
That the sun might have access,
Bringing its blessedness
To the soul of the ripening wines.

He planted the seed in faith;
He left it alone in faith.
And what do you think the sweet soil wrought?
What miracle do you think it brought?
This, so the legend saith:

Home from his work one day,
One glowing summer day,
And his children showed him a perfect flower;
It had burst in bloom that very hour;
How I cannot say.

But I know if the smallest seed
In the soil of love be cast,
Both day and night will do their part,
And the sower who works with a trusting heart,
Will find the flower at last.

THE POWER OF FAITH AND PRAYER.

J. RIDLEY.

In this age of unbelief, when men are denying the power of prayer, not only in word, but in practice, it is cheering to know that some are trusting in Elijah's God, and proving that he hears and answers prayer concerning not only spiritual things, but temporal things also. And while so many who profess to be followers of Christ and ministers of his gospel are afraid to preach the truth lest their salary be cut short, and who are deriving their support from the world, or are looking and depending upon ungodly men for their support, it is encouraging to learn of some who have faith enough in God to do his work, and look to him, not to man, for the means to carry it on. And thus it should be.

Such a man is George Muller, of England, who, under God, has helped so many orphan children, and distributed so much religious literature. I have been so wonderfully blessed in perusing a record of his life that I would transcribe some of it for the benefit of those who have not been fortunate enough to see the work.

George Muller was educated on "worldly principles," and while attending school he was led into many sins, for some of which he was kept a prisoner over a year, when his father paid for his release. But the Lord found him, and ever after he devoted his life to his service. He is a man of education, being "master of six languages, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, German, French and English," and can read and understand a number of others.

Shortly after he began to preach, he received a call to become the pastor of a church at Teigmouth. He had been there but a short time when he became convinced after a careful examination of the Scriptures, that baptism should be administered only by immersion; he was therefore immersed. Very soon, also, he began to have conscientious objections against "any longer receiving a stated salary." He says, "My reasons against it were these: 1. The salary was made up by pew-rents; but pew-rents are, according to James 2: 1–6, against the mind of the Lord; as, in general, the poor brother cannot have so good a seat as the rich. 2. A brother may gladly do something towards my support if left to his own time; but, when the quarter is up, he has perhaps other expenses, and I do not know whether he pays his money grudgingly or of necessity, or cheerfully; but God loveth a cheerful giver. Nay, I knew it to be a fact that sometimes it had not been convenient to individuals to pay the money when it had been asked for by the brethren who collected it. 3. Though the Lord had been pleased to give me grace to be faithful, so that I had been enabled not to keep back the truth when he had shown it to me, still, I felt that the pew-rents were a snare to the servant of Christ. It was a temptation to me, at least, for a few minutes, at the time when the Lord had stirred me up to pray and search the word respecting the ordinance of baptism, because thirty pounds ($144) of my salary was at stake."

For these reasons he laid the matter before the brethren, and the pews were made free, and "there was a box," he says, "put up in the chapel, over which was written that whoever had a desire to do something towards my support might put his offering in the box. At the same time it appeared right to me that henceforth I should ask no man, not even my beloved brethren and sisters, to help me, as I had done a few times, according to their request, as my expenses, on account of traveling much in the Lord's service, were too great to be met by my usual income. For, unconsciously, I had thus again been led in some measure, to trust in the arm of flesh, going to man instead of going to the Lord at once. To come to this conclusion before God required more grace than to give up my salary."

From this time onward, he never has run in debt for anything, and thus has lived within his income. He says, "We never contract debts which we believe unscriptural (according to Rom. 13: 8); and therefore we have no bills with our tailor, shoemaker, grocer, butcher, etc.; but all we buy we pay for in ready money. The Lord helping us, we would rather suffer privation than contract debts. Thus we always know how much we have, and how much we have a right to give away. I am well aware that many trials come upon the children of God on account of not acting according to Rom. 13: 8."

He remained at Teigmouth about two and one half years, when he felt that the Lord wanted him to go to Bristol. And from an account of a sermon which he preached about this time, we may learn how he viewed that which has so cheered and inspired our hearts as a people. "This evening", he says, "I preached, as fully as time would permit, on the Lord's second coming. After having done so, I told the brethren what effect this doctrine had upon me on first receiving it, even to determine me to leave London, and to preach throughout the kingdom; but the Lord had kept me at Teigmouth for these two years and three months, and that it seemed to me now that the time was near when I should leave them."

After going to Bristol he still continued to ask only the Lord for what he needed, and though he did not know when he ate his breakfast sometimes where his dinner was coming from, yet the Lord never forsook him, and his "bread and water" was always sure. But this was not enough, that he should merely preach to his flock and trust in the Lord. He was convinced that the Lord required him to feed the hungry, and clothe the naked, and send the gospel to the poor. And so he began by feeding the poor as the Lord opened the way. "Shortly after," he says, "the number of poor who came for bread increased to between sixty and eighty a day, whereby our neighbors were molested, as the beggars were lying about in troops in the street, on account of which we were obliged to tell them no longer to come for bread. This thought ultimately issued in the formation of the Scriptural Knowledge Institution, and in the establishment of the Orphan Houses." His reasons for forming a new institution for the spread of the gospel instead of uniting with some of the Bible, tract, and school societies then in existence, are given as follows:—

1. "The end which these religious societies propose to themselves, and which is constantly put before their members, is, that the world will gradually become better and better, and that at last the whole world will be converted. To this end, there is constant reference made to the passage in Hab. 2: 14—'For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea;' or the one in Isaiah 11: 9. . . . But that these passages can have no reference to the present dispensation, but to the one which will commence with the return of the Lord,—that in the present dispensation things will not become spiritually better, but rather worse,—and that in the present dispensation it is not the whole world that will be converted, but only a people gathered out from among the Gentiles for the Lord, is clear from many passages of the divine testimony, of which I only refer to the following: Matt. 13: 24–30, and verses 36–43; 2 Tim. 3: 1–13; Acts 15: 14. A hearty desire for the conversion of sinners, and earnest prayer for it to the Lord is quite Scriptural; but it is unscriptural to expect the conversion of the whole world. Such an end we could not propose to ourselves in the service of the Lord."

2 "But that which is worse, is, the connection of those religious societies with the world, which is completely contrary to the word of God. 2 Cor. 6: 14–18. In temporal things the children of God need, whilst they remain here on earth, to make use of the world; but when the work to be done requires that those who attend to it should be possessed of spiritual life (of which unbelievers are utterly destitute), the children of God are bound, by their loyalty to their Lord, entirely to refrain from association with the unregenerate. But, alas! the connection with the world is but too marked in these religious societies; for every one who pays a guinea is considered a member. Although such an individual may live in sin; although he may manifest to every one that he does not know the Lord Jesus; if only the guinea be paid, he is considered a member, and has a right as such to vote. Moreover, whoever pays a larger sum can be in many societies a member for life, however openly sinful his life should be for the time, or should become afterwards. Surely such things ought not to be."

3. "The means which are made use of in these religious societies to obtain money for the work of the Lord are also in other respects unscriptural; for it is a most common case to ask the unconverted for money, which even Abraham would not have done (Gen. 14: 21–24); and how much less should we do it, who are not only forbidden to have fellowship with unbelievers in all such matters (2 Cor. 6: 14–18), but who are also in fellowship with the Father and with his Son, and can therefore obtain everything from the Lord which we possibly need in his service, without being obliged to go to the unconverted world. How altogether differently the first disciples acted in this respect, we learn from 3 John 7."

4. "Not merely however, in these particulars is there a connection with the world in these religious societies, but it is not a rare thing for even committee members (the individuals who manage the affairs of the societies) to be manifestly unconverted persons, if not open enemies to the truth; and this is suffered because they are rich, or of influence, as it is called."

5. "It is a common thing to endeavor to obtain for patrons and presidents of these societies, and for chairmen at the public meetings, persons of rank or wealth, to attract the public. Never once have I known a case of a POOR, but very devoted, wise, and experienced servant of Christ being invited to fill the chair at such public meetings. Surely the Galilean fishermen, who were apostles of our Lord himself, who was called a carpenter, would not have been called to this office, according to these principles. These things ought not so to be among the disciples of the Lord Jesus, who should not judge of a person's fitness for the service in the church of Christ by the position he fills in the world, or by the wealth he possesses."

6. "Almost all these societies contract debts, so that it is a comparatively rare case to read a report of any of them without finding that they have expended more money than they have received, which, however, is contrary to the spirit and to the letter of the New Testament. Rom. 13: 8."

Thus has Mr. Muller gone on year after year, asking help of no man, but letting his requests be made known unto the Lord, until now he has five large Orphan Houses, and feeds, clothes, and provides schooling for over 2000 orphans every year. He takes them at all ages, from infancy to twelve years of age, and keeps the girls until they are sixteen and seventeen years old, and then finds work for them; and the boys he keeps until they are between fourteen and fifteen, when he "puts them out to learn a trade."

In his report for 1872, Mr. Muller says:—"There are altogether sixty-five schools entirely supported by the funds of the Institution, and during the past year twenty-one schools were assisted. In the sixty-five schools, entirely supported by the funds of the Institution, there were on May 26th, 1872, 4,747 scholars. The total number that frequented the schools of the Institution, entirely supported by its funds, from the beginning, amounts to 27,488. There have been circulated since March 5th, 1834, through the medium of this Institution, 75,393 Bibles; 139,218 New Testaments; 13,605 copies of the Psalms, and 132,134 other small portions of the Holy Scriptures. The total amount which has been spent on missionary operations is $563,074. There were one hundred and eighty-seven laborers in the word and doctrine, in various parts of the world, assisted to a greater or less degree in 1872.

The number of books and tracts which have been circulated since Nov. 19th, 1840, is above forty-two millions and a half (exactly 42,578,554), at an expense of $100,429.50.

"At the commencement of the last period there were 1,845 orphans in the Orphan Houses. During the past year two hundred and sixty orphans were admitted into the five houses now in operation; so that the total number on May 26th, 1872, would have been 2,105, had there been no changes. The total number who have been under our care since April 11th, 1836, is 3,835. These are destitute children, who have lost both parents by death. Without anyone having been personally applied to for anything by me, the sum of £370,535,15 (about $1,783,390) has been given to me for the orphans, as a result of prayer to God, since the commencement of the work, which sum includes the amount received for the building fund for the five houses. Besides this, also, a great variety and number of articles of clothing, furniture, provisions, etc., have been given for the use of the orphans."

Truly there is a God whose "eye is over the righteous, and whose ear is open to their cry," and it is better to trust in him than to put confidence in men, for "no good thing will he withhold from them who walk uprightly."

Dear brethren, let us learn by these examples to trust more fully in the Lord. "Be careful for nothing, but with thanksgiving and supplications, let your requests be made known unto the Lord," for he would have men to "pray everywhere, and not to faint."

RESURRECTION.

F. A. ROUNDS.

"There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." 1 Cor. 15: 44.

We are well aware of the difficulties which crowd upon our conceptions of this subject, from the fact that the ordinary usage of the word body suggests ideas drawn from material substances and forms. But as we have Scriptural authority for the use of the phrase "spiritual body," we must deem ourselves at full liberty to employ it in this connection, notwithstanding any possible conflict with previous ideas. It is undoubtedly true that the term body is for the most part applied in common language to sensible, material substances; yet, as no word could be found more adapted to convey the idea intended, we see no reason for forbearing its use.

It is inevitable, from the nature of the case, that spiritual objects should be denoted by terms drawn from the material world, and the mind naturally modifies their import according to the innate exigencies of the subject. In the present instance, we regard it as certain that there is, in the constitution of man, a principle properly denominated spirit, and this spirit is the life principle, which God, the creator, breathed into Adam at the beginning, by which he (Adam) lived, moved, and had an existence. The text says, "There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." Can we infer from this that there is now, at the present time, a spiritual body? We think not. What is this whole chapter the subject of? We answer, The resurrection. How does God, through his prophets and apostles, talk about the future? By bringing things up or to his view, that are not, as though they do now exist. So in regard to his resurrection. God is looking down to the great resurrection scene. He says at that time there will be, or "there is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." The idea is that there will be the two bodies there in the resurrection morning, but the space of time between the two will be so short, that it will not be perceivable. Hear God again: "We shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." What change is this which is to take place at the sounding of the last trumpet? Why, it is changing from the natural body to the spiritual body. It is corruption putting on incorruption. It is this mortal putting on immortality.

From the few remarks now made, the reader can scarcely be left in a mistake as to the true import which we think is attached to the phrase "spiritual body." Spiritual, in this connection, is not to be understood in a metaphysical sense, as distinguished from material; but in a moral sense, as distinguished from fleshly, fallen, sensual. Metaphysically speaking, the appropriate term is physical body. The Bible meaning of the word spiritual is very different from what people generally suppose it to be. They suppose it to be a phantom, something unreal, having no form or comeliness; and truly it is nothing to be desired by us who believe in material things. The Savior, at one time after his resurrection, made his appearance to the disciples, and they thought that they saw a spirit; but he said unto them, "Why are ye troubled? and why do such thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." The Savior wished to destroy their idea of seeing something ghostly, or an airy spirit, which has no form or comeliness. He requested them to put their hands upon him and handle him, to convince them that it was the same literal, tangible being that was crucified upon the cross. Why, says he, I am not an airy spirit, as ye suppose me to be; I am something very different from that. I have got flesh and bones. "Handle me and see" for yourselves. See if what I tell you is not true. A spirit does not have "flesh and bones as ye see me have." "And when he had thus spoken he showed them his hands and his feet," and they were so overjoyed at what they had seen, that they could hardly believe their own eyes. "And while they believed not for joy," he says to them, "Have ye here any meat? And they gave him a piece of broiled fish, and of an honeycomb."

It is one of the grandest things which God has put into our nature, that we should love real, literal things. Everything in nature speaks in favor of this, and it is something that we cannot get out of our nature. And the more real, the more substantial, and the purer a thing is the better we like it. The longer a thing lasts, the more we prize it. Hence, God has put into our nature that we should love life, and the longer we live the better we like it; that is, we like to live, we love life. This is in our nature, and we cannot get it out. Hence, God has promised us eternal life, and every true christian loves the very thought of such a life.

A spiritual body is one that does not decay; one in which there is no corruption. Take out of our system, or bodies, sin and corruption, and it will not change our identity at all. It is an inward change, not an outward one. We shall then, as the Scriptures say, run and not be weary, walk and not faint. Oh, how glorious and cheering the thought! As this principle of life flows from Him who hath life in himself, and who gave such a demonstration of its efficacy in raising Christ from the dead; the supposition is perfectly easy, that the same power is competent to a complete spiritual quickening of the whole man in his saints, so that they shall stand before him as in the highest sense alive, soul, body, and spirit, a completely perfect being which can never die.

"ARE THERE FEW THAT BE SAVED?"—Luke 13: 23.

E. L. BITLER.

"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" Ps. 15: 1. "He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully." Ps. 24: 4. "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned, but he honoreth them that fear the Lord: He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent." Ps. 15: 1–5. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Mark 16: 16.

"Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Luke 12: 32–34. "But and if that servant shall say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming, . . . the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and will cut him in sunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers. And that servant which knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes." Luke 12: 45–47.

"If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly." Rev. 22: 19, 20. "And my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Rev. 22: 12. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

SERMON ON A POSTAL CARD.
Text, Heb. 13: 1.

GEO. THOMSON.

1. This text is not applicable where brotherly love does not already exist.

2. Being addressed to christians, it is taken for granted that it should and does exist among them.

3. It is at least implied that it may cease to exist among them, hence the admonition to perpetuate it.

4. We learn its importance from many passages of Scripture.

Have you doubts about your acceptance with God? Here is a test (1 John 3: 14).

Do your neighbors doubt your sincerity? Here is a criterion (John 13: 35).

Can you love God and cherish ill-will towards your brother? Impossible. (1 John 4: 27.) Plain talk, but it is God's own truth, and we cannot get around it.

Can we be mean, stingy and penurious, and love God? Never; as well expect to find M. C. and honesty in the same person. 1 John 3: 17.

Can we be saved without this principle? No. (1 Cor. 13.) Better possess this, and be destitute of all things else, than possess all things and be destitute of love.

Can anything be substituted for love? can benevolence? We may hoard $100,000 in life, and bequeath it in charity at death, but it will not purchase eternal life. We may be as zealous as the Crusaders, and suffer martyrdom, and be damned. Knowledge, eloquence, power, and mountain-moving faith alone will not take us to glory.

Three things constitute the religion of Jesus. First, Love. Second, LOVE. Third, LOVE. "Let brotherly love continue."

GENTLE WORDS.

Gentle words, how they calm the world-sick soul—how they soften the hardened heart, and turn aside an evil intention. When anger resteth in the breast, and gentle words are timely spoken, like a charm they hold a check over the tempted spirit, until the dark vision has passed; then thankfully do we regard their source, and bless the author who has thus kindly turned aside our wrong intention, calling our better motives into action.

When we deliberately reflect upon what might have been the result had not those gentle words fallen upon our ear, great is the train of thought into which the mind intuitively wanders. Those gentle words recall memories which perhaps have long been slumbering in our hearts, but they are there still; and, when a volley of harsh words only re-callouses the already hardened heart, gentle words will penetrate when the possessor thinks it exclusively closed; but there is ever space for gentle words to reach its inmost depths.

Like manna from heaven they come to the weary soul, reviving it with the light of love; the effervescent spark is kindled, and erring humanity is piloted over the pit which might have been its snare.

One gentle word is treasured up, another is bestowed upon us, this joins the first, and thus they form in the heart as the coral amasses in its ocean home, and the larger space they occupy the less room there is for malignant emotions, which are a bane to the soul if cherished in the heart. Years may pass, and the gentle words of long ago are not dead but resting, to revive in the day when they are necessarily called forth for some good cause.—Ex.

WORDS FOR THE AFFLICTED.

C. C. DARLING.

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's suffering; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." "Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience;" and "consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." "If any man suffer as a christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf." "For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." "For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake." "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." "Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth; therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty; for he maketh sore, and bindeth up; he woundeth, and his hands make whole. He shall deliver thee in six troubles, yea, in seven there shall no evil touch thee."

A HAPPY MAN.

A certain divine who had prayed earnestly that God would teach him the perfect way of truth, was directed to a certain place where he could find an instructor.

When he came to the place, he found a man in ordinary attire, to whom he wished a "good morning."

"I never had a bad morning," replied the man.

"This is very singular, I wish you may always be so fortunate."

"I was never unfortunate," said he.

"I hope you will always be as happy," said the divine.

"I am never unhappy," said the other.

"I wish," said the divine," "you would explain yourself a little."

"That I will cheerfully do," said he. "I said that I never had a bad morning, for every morning, even if I am pinched with hunger, I praise God; if it snows or rains, whether the weather is serene or tempestuous, I am thankful to God; and, therefore, never have a joyless morning. If I am miserable in outward circumstances and despised, I still praise God. You wish that I might always be fortunate; but I cannot be unfortunate, because nothing befalls me but according to the will of God; and I believe his will is always good, in whatever he does, or permits to be done. You wished me always happy, but I cannot be unhappy, because my will is always resigned to the will of God."

"But," said the divine, "what if God thrust you down to hell?"

"I have two arms of faith and love, with which I would hold to my God and Savior and not let him go; and I would rather be in hell with God, than in heaven without him."

The divine, astonished at the man's answers, asked him whence he came.

"I came from God," he replied.

"When did you find God?"

"When I left the world."

"Where did you leave him?"

"With the pure in heart."

"What are you?"

"I am a king."

"Where is your kingdom?"

"It is within my own bosom. I have learned to rule my appetites and passions; and that is better than to rule any kingdom in the world."

"How was you brought into this happy condition?"

"By secret prayer, spiritual meditation and union with God. Nothing below God could satisfy my desires. I have found him, and in him I have found peace and rest."—Religious Herald.

THE CONTENDING PARTIES IN ROME.—The following is from the Catholic Review:—

"The day of reckoning appears to be at hand in Rome and throughout Italy. The royal revolutionists have been playing for a long time with the red revolution, and now they find their plaything ready to blaze at the doors of their stolen palaces. Poor Victor Emanuel thinks in his speeches, if nowhere else, that 'We have come to Rome, and here we shall remain.' But the day of reckoning is not far off, and the seizure of the papers of half a dozen Internationalists will not long delay it. Victor Emanuel has been too successful in debauching the conscience of young Italy to find protection now from its excesses in the arrest of the few Internationalists whom he has just imprisoned."

It will be seen by this that there are three contending parties in Rome—the Papists, the republicans and the devotees of Victor Emanuel. Though the Internationalists and republicans are hostile to all monarchies; but they have a bitter, personal hostility to the Papacy, regarding it as the enemy of all progress. And yet this Catholic writer gloats over what seems to him a menace to the government of Victor Emanuel, forgetting that although the government is hostile to the Pope's pretensions, it is the only obstacle to the removal of what remains of Papacy in that city.

Though the Internationalists have been comparatively quiet during the past two years on account of the combined opposition of the European nations, they have been at work secretly, as events plainly show, and, we doubt not, will ere long reveal themselves and their powers. Most of the Italian republicans are Internationalists or are in league with them. In view of these contending parties, together with the warlike aspect of the European nations, generally, we think the near future promises interesting events to those who are "waiting for the Lord."—Ex.

HOME AND HEALTH.

EXCITEMINT.

The people in these "last days," seem to be more than usually fond of excitement. They are not so particular what it is, only that it is something to stir up their passions. Hence the most exciting things receive the chief attention. Satan knows well how to take advantage of these things, and turn them to his account. He is getting up horse races, boat races, Hippodromes, etc., etc., to divert the attention from every thing sacred, and to fill the mind with the vanities and follies of this world, so as to keep out all thoughts of the world to come, and the preparation necessary for salvation.

The following from the Pen and Plow is to the point:—M. G.

EXCITEMENT A DISEASE OF SOCIETY.

In a recent conversation with a German friend upon the state of modern society, he made the following very forcible remark: "Excitement is disease. Man does not need it. He ought not to have it. What a healthy mind most craves is placidity; to do its work in perfect calm, without any stimulus except that afforded by perfect bodily health. Mind and body healthy, each will give all the stimulus the other needs without resort to artificial means." There is so much meaning in this that it will bear considerable amplification. Mental dissipation and physical debauchery are alike disastrous in their effects; alike breed a fierce appetite for more, an appetite that will not be appeased except by deeper and deeper draughts, which finally ruin mind and soul.

The taste for mental excitement now prevalent, through all classes of society, is strongly evinced in the theatrical performances, the prominent literature of the times, the morbid taste for sensational displays, involving danger to human life, the detailed accounts of crimes and executions demanded of the press by the public, and the general personal uneasiness to be observed when people having nothing in particular to do. Few people, comparatively, can sit down and content themselves in quiet thought. A philosphical work would reduce them to the last stages of mental exhaustion. A discussion upon any solid topic is ineffably wearying. Their mental notions are, so to speak, shaky and uncertain till they have had their intellectual grog.

This state of things is so wide spread that we are justified in calling it a disease of modern society. Its symptoms are exotic suicides, speculative manias, gambling embezzlement, and crimes of a more heinous type. What is the remedy? That is a question easily asked, but terribly hard to answer. Religion, legislative enactments, social philosophy—all seem powerless to effect a cure. We are sometimes disposed to think that the only way is to let the disease run its course, like small-pox, producing its unsightly eruption, until the poison eliminates itself from the body politic. Society, as at present organized, may die of the disease, or peradventure it may survive to enjoy better health afterwards.

The social science conventions do not seem to get at the root of the matter at all. They persist in isolating single symptoms, and looking upon them as the disease itself. One member will tell you that the inordinate love of wealth is the matter, taking for a text the familiar but utterly false maxim, "The love of money is the root of all evil," and propose to enact laws that shall prohibit the accumulation of giant fortunes. Another assigns the evils of society to drunkenness, and so on. These things are results, not causes.

We do not profess ability to prescribe a cure for the universal malady of the age. It will require the sober study of philosophers for years to come; but of one thing we feel very certain, namely: that all systems of ethics which place faith in the emotional nature of mankind, only substitute one form of excitement for another, without even approximating a cure.

TEMPER IN HEALTH.—Excessive labor, exposure to wet and cold, deprivation of sufficient quantities of necessary and wholesome food, habitual bed-lodging, sloth and intemperance, are all deadly enemies to human life; but there are none of them so bad as violent and ungoverned passions. Men and women have survived all these, and, at last, reached an extreme old age; but it may be safely doubted whether a single instance can be found of a man with violent and irascible temper, habitually subject to storms of ungovernable passion, who has arrived at a very advanced period of life. It is therefore, a matter of the highest importance to every one desirous of preserving a "sound mind in a sound body," so that the brittle vessel of life may glide down the stream smoothly and securely, instead of being continually tossed about amidst rocks and shoals which endanger its existence, to have a special care, amidst all the vicissitudes and trials of life, to maintain a quiet possession of his own spirit.—Sel.

FAITH A REMEDIAL AGENT.—A merry heart conduces to a balanced circulation, one of the essential conditions of health. A firm faith gives steadiness and straightforwardness to character, and determination to the will, both of which are indispensable to the "normal play of all the functions." The doubting mind must of necessity waste more or less of its vital energies in unavailing efforts to solve the complicated problems and unfathomable mysteries of a future state; or if it settles down in the quiescence of unbelief, it lacks the inspiration and inspiration and innervation of hopefulness. The man with abiding conviction that God rules, and that existence is eternal, will go through difficulties, endure privations, face dangers, and triumph over disasters, that would appal and unman a despondent or a doubting heart.—Science of Health.

MUSIC FOR THE SICK.—We clip the following from a European journal: "It was the celebrated German physician Hofeland who first fully recognized the curative power of music. Frequently the life of a dying man might be saved by gentle music not too near his bedside. It is often only to attract his attention and hold it with something that imparts pleasurable feelings, in order to sustain him beyond that moment of supreme exhaustion which marks the crisis of disease. Usually, however, the ears of the dying are regaled with no music sweeter than the sighs and sniffles of their sorrowing friends. Of course they are troubled, depressed, and when the critical breath comes, fail to catch it, and so die. There is much in this theory."

THINKING WHEN SICK.—On a recent occasion, when the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon arose in his pulpit to speak, he apologized at the outset on the ground of being unwell, adding, "One cannot think very clearly with a cold in the head." There is a world of truth in the words. When the body is sick the mind is weak, and the thoughts are not clear or vigorous. It is useless to know this truth unless we apply it, and avoid colds and illness wherever it is possible to do so, as it generally is.

LET parents make every possible effort to have their children go to sleep in a pleasant humor. Never scold or give lectures, or in any way wound a child's feelings as it goes to bed. Banish every worldly care at bed time, and let sleep come to a mind at peace with God and all the world.

AIR YOUR BEDS.—Some advocates for excessive neatness have the beds made up immediately after they are vacated. It is not healthy. They need to air for a couple of hours. Open the windows as wide as possible, and set open the doors also. Unless there is a thorough draught, there is no true ventilation of a sleeping room. The only exception to this rule is during high winds, when the door cannot safely remain open, and in very wet and foggy weather.

THE BROKEN PANE.

One day Robert Rich was throwing stones, when he hit a window, and broke a pane of glass. No person had seen him throw the stone. He might have slunk away and kept his act a secret, if he had not been too noble a boy to do such a meanness.

Mr. Hardwick, who lived in the house where the window was broken, was a lawyer, and seemed to be of a stern, harsh temper; for he used to scold the boys if they but crossed his fields, or even entered his woods. Robert did not like to meet him.

But Robert had more fear of doing wrong than facing the anger of the lawyer. So he went up to Mr. Hardwick, and said:

"In throwing a stone just now, I broke a pane of glass in one of your windows."

"Well, then, you must send a glazier and have it mended," said Mr. Hardwick, in an angry tone.

"That is just what I wished to do," said Robert, "and I will do it at once."

Struck by this manly reply, Mr. Hardwick asked Robert if he had any money to pay the glazier.

"Yes," said Robert; "I have half a crown that I have been saving up."

"What have you been saving it up for?" asked Mr. Hardwick.

"I have been saving it up to buy my sister a sunshade," replied Robert.

"Well, sir, I look to you to see that my window is mended."

Robert bowed, and took his leave. That same day he sent a glazier, and had a new pane of glass set in place of the broken one. He felt that Mr. Hardwick had claimed of him no more than was right, and he did not blame him. But, as Robert sat at his lesson that evening, the door-bell rung, and a package was left for him. He opened it, and what do you think he found? In the package was a beautiful blue sunshade, and with it a letter from Mr. Hardwick in these words: "Take this as a proof that I was pleased by your readiness in doing right to-day."

Robert ran and gave the sunshade to his sister, and she was delighted with the gift. His father, when he learned what had happened, said to Robert,

"We should always do right for the love of right, and not in the hope of reward."

"I am sure I did not hope for reward," said Robert. "I should still have been glad that I paid for mending the window, even if I had got nothing in return. For surely I deserved nothing. I see that a man may seem stern, like Mr. Hardwick, and yet be kind at heart."—Examiner and Chronicle.

A LITTLE ACT OF KINDNESS.

One dull Saturday night, the wind blew hard and the rain was beginning to patter against the window-panes and make large drops upon the pavement. It was not very pleasant to be out of doors, but food must be had, and all classes of persons were hastening to get it.

Soon two little colored girls hurried past with an empty basket, and one of them said:

"Oh! be quick, for it's going to rain hard and the chips will all be wet."

"Yes, I'm coming in a minute," said the other, who lingered behind—for what purpose, do you think?

Leaning against the lamp-post at the corner of the street was a poor old woman, bent with age and infirmities. In one hand was her market basket, in the other a bundle, and she was trying to open an umbrella. The wind blew against her, the bundle slipped from her poor old fingers, rolling into the gutter, and the umbrella would not come open.

But the quick feet and fingers of this little girl soon set all things right. First, she hastened to rescue the bundle and restore it to its owner, then opened the umbrella and placed it securely in the old woman's hands. She waited for no more, hastening on after her companion, but amid the falling rain the old woman could be heard saying:

"God bless you, my child!"

Ah! it was a little deed, but done so cheerfully and quickly, it showed that the child had a kind heart.—Ex.

"HE said he would, and he will." This was a child's definition of faith in Christ, and is it not both clear and correct? Christ said that he would save those who trust in him, and he will. No doubt, no fear, no suspense. He says that he will give grace and glory, and that no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. Yes, young reader, he will do as he has promised. "He said he would, and he will."

WHAT A CHILD CAN DO.—A little boy who attended a temperance meeting, was asked by his father when he returned:

"Have you learned any thing, my boy?"

"Yes, father, I have, I have learned never to put strong drink to my lips, for it kills fifty thousand persons annually; and how do I know that it will not kill me?"

The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

"BEHOLD I COME."

I am coming! All my loved ones,
Softly sleeping 'neath the sod,
Shall awake to life eternal—
Wake and smile to meet their God.

I am coming! Faint and fear not,
Weary, heavy-laden one;
You—the sick, the sad and sorrowing—
Shall immortal joy put on.

I am coming! Ye have trusted
In me only through the fight,
And ye shall be crowned as conquerors,
Sharers in my royal might.

I am coming! And the evil
Against which you've nobly stood,
Shall yet die, and everlasting
Only be the reign of good.

Yes, I come! I know ye love me,
Ye, my death-bought, snow-white throng,
Having my returning waited,
Ye shall sing the marriage song.

MUSINGS.

JAS. H. BROWN.

"And others were tortured not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection; and others had trial of mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonments."

Why the trials? Why the endurance, the despising of deliverance? What the motive? "A better resurrection." The assurance of things hoped for—conviction of things not seen,—that the just by faith shall live, while if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. Patience is required. The same race is to be run that the great cloud of witnesses have passed over and endured as seeing Him who is invisible; Jesus himself being the beginning and end, having endured the same contradictions, on account of sin.

If the highest room of the feast is to be had when the King comes in, the lowest place must be taken here. With the Gentiles it is not so; for those who are accounted greatest exercise dominion. With the Lord's children, those that would be rulers there, must be servants here. He is most fit to rule who is best to obey. The most just, compassionate, and merciful judge, is he who is least esteemed among men, and has no cause to take a bribe, or fear a frown.

Injustice and oppression cover the face of the world to-day. Rich men tread down the poor. "From the least of them even unto the greatest of them, every one is given to covetousness." "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so." The man in mean raiment is despised; the cause of the poor and needy is not judged; "they hunt every man his brother with a net, that they may do evil with both hands earnestly. The prince asketh, and the judge asketh for a reward." Such are the rulers and judges of the world at the present time and of a worldly church,—of the wild beast governments, which devour and trample under foot, instead of raising up the oppressed and down-trodden, and of a professing church having the same killing spirit and characteristics of a beast.

The dominion has been given to them, politically, and they have proved unfaithful to their trust, and the rule must now be given to one who is just. As such an one, the Son of man the dominion claims. He is brought before the Ancient of Days, and his claim is recognized, and it is given him. His claim—born to be the King, coming for that very purpose, he established his right by being of the Royal line, in which God had purposed a King should come, filling all the requirements of character and power that must be found in one who would reign in righteousness; taking a servant's place and learning obedience through what he suffered, making himself the least, that he might be the greatest. He was victorious. He established his right as one fitted for the office, for in him no sin was found. Though slain by wicked hands, he rose triumphant over death. The keys of death and the grave belong to him, and he can lock or unlock at his pleasure. All power was his in heaven and earth; all the needed requirements are found in him; and it was for the joy that was set before him that he endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of God, angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him; though as yet we see not all things put under him.

As He endured for the "joy" and the "hope," so they did and we must. It was a willing obedience. They chose to suffer affliction, rather than enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; and God chose them to inherit the promises. So with Christ. God chose him to be a King and Priest, and he responded to the choice—"Lo, I come . . . to do thy will, O God." For ourselves he laid down his life. He had power to lay it down; he chose to do it. What shall I pray? "Father, save me from this hour"? Nay; "for this cause came I unto this hour. Father, glorify thy name." All the requirements of the Lord are met, willing service for the joy in store. So God calls us, not to be the King of kings, but to a joint heirship with him to his inheritance and kingdom.

Those that were the husbandmen yielded not the fruit in its season, and the vineyard was let to others. The King came to them at the right season; he that was to sit on David's throne; but they would not have such an one to reign over them. Lo, I turn to the Gentiles, he said. The place I offer you, I give to them. "Ye shall not see me . . . till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." "Go ye out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be full." They shall be "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness."

Yes, we are chosen; chosen "that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; . . . predestinated . . . unto the adoption of children, . . . to the praise and glory of his grace, . . . having made known unto us the mystery of his will, . . . which he hath purposed in himself; that in the dispensation of the fulness of time he might gather together in one all things in Christ; . . . that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus."

Thus we are called with an high calling. If the office to which we are called is high, much more the fitting required to make us competent, so to speak, to fill the place. If a beautiful situation in the building is chosen for a stone, the more chiseling is required. We are living stones. God has determined to erect a building. He will have a temple to dwell in, in which he is to be praised. The corner stone has been chosen and fitted. Multitudes of other stones are fitted and carefully laid away to rest, till the building is to come together. "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, ... God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Each is chosen for a particular place; each has to be peculiarly fitted for that place. Let not one stone glory above another; though there are to be pillars in the temple of our God, yet it were a useless pillar without the stones it supports. Because the plain stone does not require the fitting of the pillar, is it not therefore of the temple? Yea, it is more necessary. If all the graces shine not out on the plain stones that deck the earthly entablature, count it not less of the building because it has not had the work bestowed upon it that you have. All wheat does not bear alike; some only thirty fold; but it is gathered in the harvest time, for it is good, ripe wheat, perfect of its kind. The same seed sown on different parcels of ground brings forth different quantities of fruit. The same principle is in the building. The difference of quality of the stone, and difference of place chosen, require difference in the fitting.

Paul was called to be an apostle. That calling subjected him to tribulations and afflictions that all others might not have. A necessity was laid upon him, and it was, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel."

Abraham was called to leave his father's house, and go into a strange country, and God promised to give him the land he saw for an everlasting inheritance. Isaac and Jacob, heirs of the same promise, were called to dwell in tents. As pilgrims and strangers they sojourned, that they might declare to all around that they sought a heavenly country; and they thus so lived that God was not ashamed to be called their God. Many have been called to be faithful even unto death, and by so doing confessed that they expected a crown of life. Others endured mockings, scourgings, bonds, imprisonments. All did not have the same trials, but all had sin to resist in some form or other.

The Lord makes tools with which to fashion us out of all the affairs of life. He it is that has chosen the place for us in the building, and is the architect of the whole; and knows what each stone requires to fit it for its particular place; and his plan is to so fit it; and for that very purpose he makes all things work together for good. Let us submit, and be fitted for the glory.

What a building it will be; an house not made with hands, fitted by God himself, with the glory of God, each stone fitting into its place without the sound of hammer; the whole body perfected, "they" and "us," the members united to each other and to the Head, sitting in heavenly places with him, as we now do in him. How the building shines! It has the glory. The stones are no more tossed here and there, and lying among the rubbish, and counted as things of nought, disallowed by worldly builders. No, God has his eye upon each piece, and it shall yet shine in its true place. Yea, I verily believe the temple will yet be built, and the divine Architect's own plan carried out, and the house be perfected; but not in this present state of things. The house cannot be built till every stone is fitted. Each stone, indeed, is fitted here; but the house is not built in its completeness till the just by faith live again; till it can be a house of glory; till that which is perfect is come. Then sorrow and sighing shall flee away, and there will be the everlasting joy; for the King of glory has come in. Those for whom it was prepared will sit on his right hand and on his left. There are those who sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Those who have forsaken houses and lands for his sake receive an hundred fold, and life eternal. "The meek shall inherit the earth." Abraham is to have the land that was promised him.

Those who have laid up their treasure in heaven, by ministering to the necessities of saints, and having compassion on the poor, lending to the Lord, find it has gained a wonderful interest. Those who are teachers shine as the brightness of the firmament, and those having turned many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever; while all have an inheritance in the kingdom, and Jesus gives his sheep eternal life. Thus each stone finds its place as the Lord has appointed. Many have received the earnest of the inheritance, but none have received the promise; nevertheless the time hasteth greatly. The last stones are being chosen and fitted, only a few are lacking. Who will fill the place? Whosoever will, may. Soon the Bridegroom will call the bride, and she will rise to meet him in the air. Even now, we can almost hear the invitation:

The time of singing birds is come, and winter's gone,
The sparkling dewdrops kiss the golden morn;
The verdant lands in sunlight stretch away,
Arise, my dove, my fair one, come away.

The whole creation in enraptured lays,
Exulting, sings its gushing notes of praise;
Blessings and glory, hallelujahs ring,
From the uplifted souls of every living thing.

From mountains, rivers, hills, and dales, and skies,
The wondrous grandeurs of the new creation rise;
From trees and grass and flowers of fragrance rare,
Yielding enchanting perfume on the balmy air.

My dove, my fair one, rise and come away;
Why 'mid the wintry blasts and darkness stay?
Why midst confusion, tempest, cold and pain,
Why, O why, dost thou longer there remain?

Thou'st proved thyself that thou art ever true,
Thy longings, love, desires, are ever new;
Thy yearning heart and longing eyes doth say,
O, he whom my soul loveth, come I pray.

Thy wedding garments, spotless, pure and fair,
Thy lovely form and features, beauties rare;
All, all thy graces haste my soul to say—
Arise, my love, my fair one, come away.

Leaping upon the mountains, I make haste;
Thy love is wine and honey to my taste;
Fairness of silvery moon thy sun-lit face,
The sweetest, richest perfume, thy embrace.

Waiting thou need'st not any more delay,
For earth's dark winter's gone, forever passed away;
Singing of birds and joyous spring times come,
And the unfading beauties of our Eden home.

Littleton, Mass.

OUR HOPE.

The apathy or indifference which is generally displayed by professing christians towards the true "hope of the gospel," or towards the doctrine of the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ in the clouds of heaven to judge the world in righteousness, is, in my opinion, a fearful sign of the times, as we cannot but look upon such indifference as a proof of prevailing infidelity or worldliness. The means of grace and the ordinances of religion appear to be looked at as the end or object for which a profession is made, as if there were no futnre glory either for the church itself or for every individual member. Even with regard to many whom we cannot but look upon as true christians, the indifference or opposition which they manifest towards the glorious doctrine of the premillennial advent, and personal reign of the Lord Jesus Christ over this earth, which he has redeemed with his own blood, is a sad and painful evidence of a wide-spread declension and apostasy.

Surely all the true seed, the spiritual Israel, should be looking for and hastening to the coming of the day of God, and the manifestation of his kingdom upon this sin-cursed and groaning earth of ours. One might suppose that the reign of Satan, of sin and death, with all their dreadful consequences, had endured long enough, and that the hearts of all saints were so sick and weary of it all that a perpetual agonizing cry were continually ascending to the throne of God, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

But, so far from this being the case, both the pulpit and the religious press (with a few noble exceptions) actually sneer and scoff at the Advent doctrine and at those who maintain it. If this be not blasphemy, it is very nearly allied to it, and all Christendom will soon be given up to judgment, as its bitter and inevitable consequence. Babylon and Antichrist will soon throw off the mask, and will be consumed or fall together. At this crisis it seems most desirable that some effort be made to unite all the Advent saints together as the heart of one man, in view of the near approach "of the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of our gathering together unto him."

The world has now well-nigh run its disastrous course, and we may begin to lift up our heads, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. All churches (both national and voluntary) seem to have rejected the "blessed hope" of the prophets and apostles, and of the primitive church universal, and are turned aside unto fables, or unto the hope of the hypocrite and of the fool. There is, therefore, the more occasion that those whom the Spirit of God has aroused up from sleep should sound the trumpet in the hearing of those who are sleeping and slumbering.

Judgment is coming, and the Judge standeth before the door, and yet we hear the cry of "peace and safety," education, improvement, enlightenment, progress, discovery, science, and the like. But there will be a terrible awakening very soon, when the day of grace has passed away and the door of mercy shall shut with iron clang, and that forever.

Great have been the privileges of Christendom. An open Bible, a preached gospel, a crucified Savior, a great atonement, religious ordinances, and means of grace, and what is the result of it all? Popery, infidelity, formalism, or rationalism. No church holds the apostolic faith and hope together; or by virtue of the blood of the cross, is waiting and looking for the glory that is to be revealed.

This is a dark and dreary retrospect, and it presents to us a dark and terrible future. For, although it is true that Christ will be revealed to those who are waiting for him, it is also true that Antichrist will be revealed to those who know not God, and who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Prophetic Times.

LITERAL BAPTISM.---No. 3.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

We propose in this paper to consider the literal sense of "Baptism" according to its real, classical definition. To do so we shall leave "Rantism" a while, for the purpose of considering each of the words by itself. We suppose there may be some interest to know what that new word means; but please let curiosity wait a while, and we promise them that suspense will not detract from the interest and clearness of the meaning, when they have it at last. Baptism has an interest associated with it which the church of Christ deeply feels, because it is the name of one of the only two ordinances which Jesus delivered to his disciples as their charge, for perpetual and proper observance. The well-known fact, that there are differences of opinion as to the meaning of the term, and the method of observing the rite of which it is the name, does not detract from that interest, although it is supposed to be a reason for silence as to its meaning and use. We do not feel the force of the argument which is often used to deter one from investigating a controverted subject, that if one is only sincere, no matter whether he is right or wrong, and that the conscience is the true index of right in the premises. We know how hard a hold on prejudice revered self-opinions have, and how strongly men contend for what they highly esteem, but we claim that the true sense of anything is the criterion of opinion, and therefore that opinion is not the criterion of sense. On that principle we act.

Just before Jesus left his disciples and went away, he gave that high commission bearing the seal of the Court of Heaven—"Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28: 19. It is essentially important to know exactly what he meant by the term "baptizing," the progressive participle for "baptize," from which, in its infinitive form, we have the noun "baptism."

As has been intimated, and is well known, there are diversities of forms for the administration of the ordinance, growing out of diversities of opinions; opinions which have been formed by means as varied as the methods of administration employed. We find the different sects of Christendom observing the rite according to the following classification; to wit:

1. Sprinkling water on a person. Practiced by the Roman Catholic Church, the English and Protestant Episcopal Churches, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Methodists, and others.

2. Pouring water on a person. A method practiced by the Methodists, although by them but rarely at present.

3. Immersing the person in water. Practiced by the Greek Church, Baptists, Free-Will Baptists, Ana-Baptists, Menonites, Adventists, and sometimes other sects.

Some of these sects are particularly strenuous as to form, while others are not as particular; the Methodists being specially liberal, so that they accord to the candidate the privilege of choosing his own method, that if the conscience of the candidate is satisfied, it is sufficient. They (the Methodists) generally practice it in different localities, according to the methods most in vogue in any place.

If we were to seek among these religious sects, going from those who practice one method, to those who practice another, we could not find a satisfactory answer to the question—"What does the word mean?" and we propose, therefore, to resort to none of them, but to go to the classical authorities. As we have seen that the word is of Greek origin and extraction, we shall do best by learning, first, what the word means in the original.

We propose, however, to consult first of all the English lexicographers, as the word has an acknowledged place in the English language, and has a meaning there. We consult Mr. Webster, whose Dictionary is said to be "the best in the world." We turn first to "Baptism," and read—

"Baptism—The application of water to a person as a religious ordinance."

"Baptize—To administer the sacrament of Baptism; to christen."

"Baptist—One who administers Baptism; John, the forerunner of Christ; one who rejects infant baptism, and holds to adult baptism by immersion."

"Baptistry—A place where baptism is administered."

From these definitions it would seem that either sprinkling or pouring must be true baptism, as they are (as Mr. Webster says) "the application of water to a person." Both, even, may be correct, if Mr. Webster is right, who ought to be, seeing he is standard authority and a profound scholar and linguist. But if he is right, then those whom he calls "Baptists," who reject all forms of the rite but immersion, are misnamed, and those who practice "sprinkling" or "pouring" exclusively, are the true Baptists.

A second definition which he gives us—"to christen," does not really define the word, and leaves us, as "christen" means "to name," to suppose that baptism is simply naming.

We turn to his definition of "sprinkling," and he tells us that it means "to scatter in small drops—to baptize." So that at length we come to Mr. Webster's definition of "Baptism" as follows: Baptism is "to apply water to a person," etc.; to do this is "to sprinkle"; to sprinkle is "to scatter in small drops"; "to scatter in small drops" is "to baptize." Reversing the order a little, we have the definition as follows: "Baptize—to scatter in small drops—to sprinkle."

If we follow Mr. Webster, then, we shall be settled in the conviction that sprinkling or pouring is Baptism, and that nothing else is or can be.

But there is something about this defining which makes it unsatisfactory. We might conclude that it was all as it should be, but for one single fact which we have thus far overlooked, but which we will notice presently, as it is of essential importance.

True defining is a sort of translating, so that if a word to be defined is a Greek derivative, its meaning must be given in words corresponding in meaning to the word to be defined, but belonging to or coming from some other language than the Greek, and so defined as to make the whole matter clearly distinct, and plainly evident. To define "baptize," therefore, as "to administer baptism," as Mr. Webster does, is not defining and is but "begging the question" and leaving it where he finds it. We must therefore find relief from a more satisfactory source; and we turn to consult standard classical authorities for the meaning of the words.

We shall consult the best Lexicons extant—Liddell & Scott, Donnegan, and others. They give us the definition of the words in both the literal and metaphorical sense; but as we have at present to do only with the literal, we give it, which is as follows:

"Bapto—To dip; to plunge into water; to submerge; to dip in a vessel and draw."—Donnegan.

"Baptizo—To immerse; immerge; submerge; sink; wash; baptize."—Greenfield. "To immerse into a liquid; to submerge."—Donnegan. "To slip under; to emerge."—Liddell & Scott.

"Baptismos—Immersion; baptism."—Greenfield. "Immersion; submersion; a washing; a bathing."—Donnegan. Liddell & Scott give us the same definition of the word.

"Baptisma—What is immersed; hence immersion, baptism, the ordinance of baptism."

One can readily see that these definings are directly opposite to those given by Mr. Webster, and although Mr. Greenfield sometimes subsitutes the words derived from the Greek as a definition, because he is defining for a reader of the New Testament who is acquainted with King James' version, yet, where he claims to define he is reliable, as he must be and agrees with the others, and they all make it evident that immersion and not sprinkling is "baptism"; and we are satisfied that they are correct, for several reasons, one of which is that in the definitions of Mr. Webster he tells us (and this is the point that we overlooked) that "Baptism" is from Baptein, which, he says, means "to dip in water"; and then he gravely tells us that instead of this, which is the application of the person to the water, it is "the application of water to a person"; and so defines contrary to what he acknowledges to be the direct and classical meaning of the word; a course which is unjustifiable and censurable.

We have really no choice as to the method of administering or receiving the ordinance other than to be right; but how can we choose that, if we depend upon the definers and they are equivocal? That Mr. Webster is, it is evident. Still, as he is in harmony with the classical authors in giving the sense of the original, their testimony and his on that point convince us of the true meaning of the word, and so we hasten to lay his contrary testimony aside, and to reject the practice of those who, in their practice are in harmony with it, and say, because the true meaning of the word requires us to, that neither "sprinkling" or "pouring" is baptism, but that "immersion" is the only true form of its administration; and we are glad to know that both the Latin and Greek verbs brought into use in this way, to wit, baptizo and emergere, are in perfect harmony of sense,—a matter that we shall yet notice.

It is certainly refreshing and pleasant to find some place whereon we may rest with confidence and satisfaction; to know that there is an ultimate ground of meaning, from which there is no appeal; although there is a demurring and a deviation of practice. There are many souls, honest and true, who are tremblingly anxious to be right about baptism, and are harrassed by doubt and perplexity in their interest to know and do as they ought; while some are settled and fixed that the word itself cannot and does not mean but one thing, and that, the same as the Latin derivative "immersion," and therefore Immersion is the only true baptism.

Mr. Webster, however, while he defines sprinkling to mean baptism, does not give immersion that meaning at all. He defines it as "the state of being immersed"; and immerse he tells us is "to plunge into a fluid"; but no reference or allusion is made to "baptism" or "baptize," although in defining the Latin derivative he might properly give us the word from the Greek, especially as the two words, as verbs, correspond so identically in meaning. One can readily see the difference in his definings of "baptize" and "immerse." The latter is "to plunge into a fluid"; but to baptize is to administer "baptism"; and a plainly marked effort is made to avoid defining the word literally. Let us see how "immerse" would be defined on the same principle. It must be "to administer, or perform, immersion." Not a satisfactory answer at all, and one giving the inquirer no light except he finds immersion to mean something more than he does now—"the state of being immersed"; which, if "to immerse" is to perform immersion, is defining in a circle, just as has been done in defining "baptism" and "baptize."

Evidently Mr. Webster allowed himself here to do what no lexicographer should allow in himself, and has let preconceived opinion influence him in his effort to do something with the word. He was a member of a church whose principal and almost only method of performing the rite was sprinkling, and so his definitions suffer the effect of his theological opinion. If he had been defining the original, evidently, as he has given us an illustration in the infinitive baptein, he would have acted in a more commendable manner, and have been true to the meaning of the word.

There is, after all, one consideration which may be urged in mitigation of the case and course. It is that usage sometimes materially changes the meaning of words, as in the case of "prevent," which is found in 1 Thess. 4: 15—a word which there means, and meant when the translation was made, precede; but now means to hinder. The argument will not hold, however; because, if the change of sense occur at all, it must be in the original term, and it would never answer to change the meaning of a word derived from a Greek word, as "baptism" is, to any other meaning than that of its original; and, beside (although we anticipate somewhat), it will be seen that any word used in the Scriptures must always bear the meaning it had when originally used; and, especially, no name of an ordinance can be changed to mean anything other than it did when it was instituted; as it is disastrous to the cause of truth, a perversion of "the right way of the Lord," and destructive of the beautiful harmony which God designs shall exist in his church, which is essential to its prosperity and uniformity, and creates discord and division, as we have sadly known to be the case.

HOLINESS NOT GROWTH.

There is no phrase of christian holiness upon which there is so much perplexity and confusion, as that of its proper relation to growth in grace.

The majority of christians feel and know that they are unsanctified, and often find themselves, either voluntarily or involuntarily, groaning after it. Indeed, it seems to me that a desire for holiness is a spontaneity of the regenerate heart; he who does not greatly desire to be made holy, either was never "born again," or has lost his first love. Even those who oppose holiness as an attainment of this life, so far forget themselves in prayer, as to plead earnestly for a clean heart.

The fact is, the whole christian church has been groaning after holiness for many years, and still (with the exception of a few Joshuas and Calebs) she lingers in the wilderness. And why this delay? Because, though she seeks it with tears and humiliation, she seeks it not by faith. The church believes in holiness, but expects to approximate toward it by a growth in grace. I have said approximate toward it, because those who believe in holiness as the result of growth, never expect to be made holy now. They believe in always groaning and seeking after it, but never obtaining the blessing this side of death. Hence, if any one, however old in the service of God, lives to tell the story after entire sanctification, they think there must be a mistake somewhere. It does seem to me that if there is any one feature of this subject upon which the church needs line upon line, and precept upon precept, it is that which is indicated at the head of this article. The greatest delusion of the church on this subject, is that holiness is a growth in grace, or a legitimate result in growth; it is in this cradle of carnal security, in which she has rocked her soul to sleep. I hope the word carnal will not be objectionable in this connection, because Paul recognizes regenerated persons as being in a state of partial carnality; and any thing which will keep the soul out of purity, through the blood of Christ, must perpetuate that carnality ad infinitum.

On the subject of holiness, the church is divided into two classes, called by way of distinction, specialists and anti-specialists. Those who are denominated specialists, believe that sanctification, or holiness, is purity, death to sin, freedom from sin, the being cleansed from all sin, all unrighteousness, all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, which the apostle calls by way of supplement, "perfecting holiness in the fear of God." The anti-specialists believe that holiness is the result of growth or development; that it consists in maturity of the christian graces which have been planted in a state of embryo in the regenerate heart.

If the above definitions be correct, the reader will readily perceive that the divergency of these two classes consists as much in a difference of opinion as to the nature of holiness, as to the means and manner of its attainment. Our views of the nature of christian holiness, must settle our convictions as to the method of its attainment. If holiness is a state of maturing, then, of course, it is only to be hoped for as the result of development or growth which is dependent upon a diligent use of the means of grace. If, on the other hand, holiness is purity, and not maturity, a clean heart, and not development of the graces, then it can only be expected by an application of the blood of Jesus Christ through faith.

Entire sanctification is full or complete salvation. Upon what is this salvation conditioned? Let Paul answer negatively and affirmatively: he says, "It is not by works of righteousness which we have done." "Not of works, lest any man should boast." "According to his mercy he saves us, by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." "By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." Peter adds his testimony, Acts 15: 9: "Putting no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith."

But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, we shall be saved even as they. God purifies the hearts of both Jews and Gentiles by faith; in other words, saves them by grace. It seems that by a little candid reflection, all must see that holiness is not maturity, but purity; that it is not effected by growth, but by eradication; not by a developing, but by a cleansing process. Sin is not washed away by growth, but by the precious blood of Christ. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." No, my brother, this cleansing is not effected by solemn resolves, of works of righteousness which we have done, or can do; but by a personal application of the blood of Christ received by faith, naked faith in Jesus as the mighty to save.

What, then, is the relation which holiness sustains to growth in grace? Mr. Wesley answers this question: "Sanctification is doubtless preceded and followed by growth in grace." This is doubtless true. Growth in grace precedes holiness. The new-born soul is saved up to all the present light he has. He has no consciousness of remaining sin. The old man is so stunned that he thinks he is dead; but by the light of divine grace which he receives as he advances in the christian life, he is enabled to make the discovery that the old man was subjugated but not destroyed; that the law of sin is still at work. The flesh, or carnality of the heart, is warring against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, so that they are contrary the one to the other.

Growth in grace leads on to the discovery of the remains of sin, or the carnal mind; and growth in the knowledge of the truth leads on to a right apprehension of the nature of the needed blessing—holiness.

Growth in grace discovers the evil, but does not remedy it. Men do not grow into grace, nor out of sin. They can only grow in the grace into which they have been divinely planted. Regeneration is a passage from a death in sin, to a state of life in Christ. Holiness is a passage from life to death; it involves the death of the old man, of the living self—the destruction of the inbeing of sin. The sinner is not brought to life by growth, neither is the old man killed by growth. In order to live with Christ in the highest and sublimest sense, we must be crucified with him. If we would share the resurrection, we must submit to the death. Holiness is a new creation after the image of God. It is a great mistake to place holiness at the end of the christian journey, and expect to reach it by growth; it clips ths wings of faith, and shuts the soul up in uncertainty on this sublime theme. If I cannot and may not believe that Christ can and will and does make me holy now, I cannot believe for the blessing at all.

To believe that I cannot receive the blessing now, is to believe that I never can receive it, because the future is always beyond the grasp of faith. This progressive and future salvation is, 1. Never overtaken. 2. It seeks the object by works, and repudiates faith. 3. It reverses the divine order, which declares that now is the day of salvation. Holiness, then, is not growth in grace, but the best possible preparation for a vigorous and successful growth. Purity and soundness are conditions, and not the result of growth in grace; the cleaner the ground is kept, the more rapidly the corn will grow. The child is not expected to overcome disease by growth, but medication. Good health, or soundness, is sought as a means of promoting the growth of the child.

The greatest hindrance to a successful growth in grace, is the unsanctified state of the church. In yonder garden are planted a variety of beautiful flowers. The gardener sees that something is retarding their growth. On examination, he finds that noxious weeds are springing up and smothering the flowers. Does he, can he, expect that the growth of the flowers will overcome the difficulty? Not at all. He knows that the growth of the weeds will keep pace with the growth of the flowers; he simply proceeds to pluck out the weeds, to let in the sunshine, and thus secure the growth of the flowers. God plants all the graces of the Holy Spirit in the heart of the regenerate; and nothing promotes their development into full maturity so completely, as to keep that heart pure—to pluck up every root of bitterness, every carnal desire, and cast out every idol. Let all the wood, hay, stubble, and cockle be consumed by the Holy Ghost, and these graces will spring into new life, bud into beauty, and blossom and mature into the ripe and perfect fruit.

Finally, we conclude that the highest state of growth, and consequent maturity, are conditioned of present purity. The new-born soul, saved up to its present light, dying in that condition, is saved, of course, on the same principle that the infant, unconscious of its inherent depravity, dying, is saved by Christ, through the Spirit who worketh when and where and how he pleaseth. But the advanced christian, conscious of remaining sin or carnality, who sees his only remedy through the blood, and rejects holiness through faith in Christ, willfully, not only ceases to grow in grace, but passes under condemnation of guilt, and is in imminent danger of losing his justification and his soul. We can only grow, as christians, by walking in the light; that light points to the blood, and he who rejects the blood, draws back unto perdition. We must either conquer through the blood of the Lamb, or be conquered.—Advocate of Holiness.

Be afraid of seeking or finding comfort in anything but God alone, for that which gives the comfort takes so much of thy heart from God.

AGENT.

A VISIT WEST.

We have made arrangements to visit friends and a few churches in the West this fall. Our object is to see relatives, and do a little good in the cause of Christ, if possible. We shall visit Central Illinois, and Iowa. We expect to spend evening, Sept. 30th, at Lockport, N. Y., and Sunday, Oct. 4th, at Buchanan, Mich. Shall probably return through Philadelphia and New York. All my appointments East are withdrawn.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

God's works and institutions are all perfect; and every truly intelligent mind, which loves perfection and sublimity, will love and enjoy those works and ordinances in proportion to their knowledge of them. The literality and external appearance of many of God's types, symbols, and ordinances appear very insignificant and unmeaning, disconnected from those things which they signify. The slaying of the paschal lamb and the sprinkling of its blood, disconnected from Christ and his atoning blood, appears like a useless, senseless ceremony; but when connected with him, the subject is increased in magnitude and importance, by every additional fact and idea seen in the connection, until it becomes infinitely glorious and important. So it is with all the ceremonies and ordinances of divine origin.

The Lord's supper, celebrated as it should be, in a quiet, unostentatious way, appears very crude and undesirable, compared to worldly state festivals celebrated with gilded splendors and royal magnificence in palaces and imperial halls. But when the eye of faith, assisted by revelation and the Holy Spirit, looks beyond the emblems, and views, in sublime grandeur, the embemized flesh and blood of the immaculate Christ, it expands to incomprehensible dimensions of interest to our race.

The bread and wine of this christian fesval are expressly declared to be, or to represent, the body and blood of Christ. But the question arises, Why are these articles taken as emblems, and what is their adaptation to represent Christ's body, and how do they show in their use a gospel connection between Christ and his church? The body of Christ in its sacrificial relation to his church has two parts—solid and fluid—"flesh and blood." To represent that body in that relation two articles must be ussd, a solid and a fluid. The separation of the flesh and blood produces death; while their union in a normal state, vitalized by the spirit of life, results in life. The human body is produced from food; and bread in the Scriptures is taken as the representative article of all food; therefore is a most appriate article to mystically represent the body. But there was evidently something more than the chemical elements and their combinations in the body designed to be illustrated. It emblemized the flesh of Jesus, not as a man only, but as a Savior. Not to explain physiologically his organism, but to show its saving relation to his church. Jesus explained this important truth beautifully on this wise:—On a certain occasion a vast concourse of people had remained a long time with him to hear his doctrine, without food; when he miraculously fed the multitude with a little bread. This convinced the people that he had wrought a miracle, and they reckoned it parallel to the case in the wilderness, and said, "Our fathers did eat manna in the desert, as it is written, "He gave them bread from heaven to eat." Jesus said,—"The bread of God is he that cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." He again said, "I am that bread of life. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead. This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." Jesus shows very plainly that the manna and the bread he would give related to each other in being given by God to his people. Both came down from heaven, and were given by God to give life to his people. But the manna gave only temporal or mortal life; while the other would give eternal life. The manna was the primary type, under the law, and the communion bread the emblem under the gospel. Both had two parts; one perishable, and the other enduring. The perishable is designed to show Christ and the church in a dying state; the imperishable to show Christ and the church in an undying state.

The bread represents human flesh, both of Christ and his church; for Jesus said of it, "Take, eat, this is my body;" and Paul said of it, "For we, being many, are one bread and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread." 1 Cor. 10:17. This shows a wonderful union between Christ and his people, expressed by him thus:—"He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me and I in him." This union is beautifully illustrated by receiving the emblems of Christ's body in our bodies when we eat and drink them.

But how did God make the manna illustrate the dying condition of Christ and the church? and also their undying state? The mass of the manna was so perishable that when the darkness of the first night came, it "bred worms and stank." So it is with the church in this world. When the darkness and sleep of death comes, their bodies breed worms and decompose just like the manna. To represent an undying Christ and church by this bread, Moses said unto Aaron, "Take a pot, and an omer full of manna therein, and lay it up before the Lord, to be kept for your generations." The manna thus selected and put into the "golden pot" was placed in the "tabernacle which is called the holiest of all, which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant," "and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant" over which were the "cherubims of glory overshadowing the mercy-seat." Paul instructs us that this holy place where the manna was kept represented heaven itself; for he says, "Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." The manna was laid "up before the Lord, to be kept for your generations." Christ has gone into heaven, "there to appear in the presence of God for us"—the generations of the church. The manna in the golden pot strikingly represents Christ. The golden pot represents the golden splendors of heaven itself. The manna in the pot became unlike the masses which were gathered, for an invisible preservative had evidently been infused into it, which protected it from the liability of decomposition and destruction by worms. This most aptly and strikingly represents Christ's undying state, as he appears before God in heaven to plead for us. God says—"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna." Jesus said—"I am the living bread which came down from heaven."

Common bread is not "living bread," has no life in itself, but only supports life—is a staff of life; but this bread has life in itself, and can not only support life, but give life to the dead.

The changing, corruptible manna represents the changing, dying, human body; the unchanging, incorruptible manna the immortal, undying body. The incorruptible bread was first in a corruptible state, for it was a part of that which decayed; but it was mysteriously or miraculously changed to an incorruptible state. Paul says of the saints' bodies, "This incorruptible must put on incorruption." Like the manna, Christ's body was a part of the great mass of human flesh, and was, like all others, mortal; but God, by an inscrutable act, changed it at his resurrection to an immortal, deathless state. Paul also refers to this change when he says, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed."

This wonderful transition of humanity from a mortal to an immortal state was the great object of Christ's mission into this world. As mortality was the result of sin, so immortality will be the result of sinlessness, or holiness. As mortality and death were the curse and penalty of a broken law, that law cannot be made honorable without inflicting that penalty, either directly or indirectly, upon the transgressor. This placed our sinful race in a helpless and hopeless condition. The loss of life for transgression gave to the sinner no claim for ilfe beyond that death.

Seeing a ruined world and a lost race in such a woful and hopeless condition, the adorable Jesus stooped to take the place of doomed rebels, and received in his own sinless flesh the curse for sin. The broken law demanded of the sinner, as its penalty, life for his transgression; and as the life of the body was in the blood, it called for blood. Jesus voluntarily suffered the penalty of the law by permitting his blood to be shed, as if he had been a sinner; making that blood available to cancel the sins of all who would accept its atoning efficacy by faith.

God took grain to represent Christ and his people in both the Mosaic and Christian dispensations. He also took the wine to represent them, illustrating their flesh by the grain, and their blood by the wine. The matured wheat has no fluid, as a circulating medium, which could appropriately represent the blood; but the grape has just such a fluid, which beautifully represents it. The original habit of man was to partake of, as the supporters of life, bread and wine. These were the two representative articles which entered into the composition of the human body, and perpetuated its life.

The sins of humanity have forfeited all right and title to a future existence; but Christ has opened a door of hope and given assurance that all who accept the provisions he has made shall have a future existence with him, enjoying a common brotherhood together. He, the head, pattern, first-fruits; they having bodies like his glorious body. His death and resurrection opening the way for their transition from a mortal, corruptible condition, to an immortal, ever-blessed state.

The re-living of Christ's organism became the assurance to the church of future, tangible, glorious being, and is memorialized by the Supper. The bread and wine properly, and by divine authority, represent an organic, tangible body, the same in Christ as in his people. The eating and drinking of the emblems represent receiving, through Christ, a glorious body, just as real as the emblems and the Christ they illustrate. They eat and drink unworthily who do not discern the Lord's body. "Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God."

The grand point of faith in this memorial service is the recognition of real manhood, organized of earth matter, endowed with heavenly powers and attributes, restored to the image of God to enjoy eternal life through and with Christ in glory. The service presents two distinct parts—the sufferings and the glory. To illustrate this the emblems are first presented in their separation, thus manifesting death, and the pain and agony of the Savior in passing to that state. In that condition they are received by the church, who by this act manifest their faith in that death, as the grand event which should open the door for the passage of humanity from sin to holiness, from darkness to light, from death to a glorious immortality. The emblems are then united together, as they pass into the bodies of the communicants, to mingle with their flesh, thus showing by their union the re-living of Christ, and by their incorporation into the flesh of believers, that their bodies will also be animated by the same new and eternal life. This mingling of the emblems as they are received, when viewed by faith, carries the mind from the suffering and pain of the dying scene to the triumphs and victory of the resurrection, which fills the heart with praise to God and everlasting gratitude to the victorious and ever adorable Redeemer. This praise and thanksgiving, produced by thus making active our faith in the triumphs of our race through the death and resurrection of Christ, is designed to be expressed in the communion hymn.

The Lord's Supper is an intellectual, spiritual, and devotional feast. It looks back upon the past with a sigh, and to the future with acclamations of praise. It tells of Christ's sufferings and victory. It manifests believers' confidence in the Redeemer, and their union with their Head. It is as imperatively our duty to observe it, as it is to be baptized, or do any other christian duty. It spans the period between the first and second advents, giving us an example of suffering and patience at the first, and a promise of triumph and glory at the second.

BETHEL CAMPMEETING.

We have just closed an excellent campmeeting at Bethel, Vt. It was said to be the best one they had ever had. Some were converted, and eleven baptized. The early morning meetings before breakfast were heavenly seasons. The subject of holiness was continually made prominent, producing most blessed results. There was scarcely any opposition. Most of the ministers present were a unit on the subject, and could speak of a rich experience in the service of Christ. Through the faithful efforts of Brn. Carpenter and Hoyt, during the past year, several churches in Vermont have been led to take advanced ground in the cause of Christ, and were ready at once to lend a helping hand in the service of the Lord. Their spirit of devotion has been much intensified during the meeting, and a large number made a full consecration to Christ, and received in return the gift of the Spirit, producing "perfect peace." The remark was common that they never before felt such love for God and all mankind. They were astonished to find themselves in possession of such "great peace." Some had been struggling to obtain it for months, but found at last, that when they made a full surrender to Christ, stopped their struggling, and trusted him fully, they received what they sought, and could truly say, "Jesus is all in all." The spirit of christian union and brotherly love kept increasing through the entire meeting. It was truly a heavenly feast.

The weather was fine throughout the meeting, and well adapted to camp life. There were thirty tents on the ground, besides the large one, in which we held our evening meetings. We had preaching from Brn. H. F. Carpenter, A. A. Hoyt, I. Damman, E. N. Morse, A. Damon, Wm. C. Stewart, O. Beckwith, C. S. Shattuck, E. B. Rollins, and the writer. We think the results of this meeting will be lasting, and very profitable. There was much deep heart work experienced. The preachers and lay members seemed anxious to be just right in the sight of the Lord. They manifested an unusual deadness to the world. Daily the interest became greater, and at the close of the meeting there was deep conviction on unconverted hearts that christianity is a blessed reality, which they very much needed. They wished to have the meeting continue longer. We look back upon the meeting as a grand success. We had excellent order, excepting Saturday evening, when some rude young men, who had been using the cup of intoxication, made some disturbance; but kind treatment won the victory, and the crowd on the Sabbath behaved with marked propriety. It was estimated that there were over thirteen hnndred teams on the ground. Some four or five thousand people were present, and an unusual interest was manifested to hear the truth presented on the destiny of the wicked, and the evidence that we are near the end of this dispensation.

The last evening was devoted to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, followed by an interesting conference meeting. Several new ones requested prayers at the close. Monday morning, at 6 o'clock, we had our last meeting. It was a precious season. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon us, giving a parting blessing that will not be soon forgotten. Almost the entire company could say their all was on the altar, at the disposal of the blessed Savior. We parted with bright hopes of meeting soon in the everlasting kingdom.

PLAINFIELD DISCUSSION.

At this date (Wednesday, Sept. 16th) we are engaged in a discussion of the following question, at Plainfield, Vt. "Do the Scriptures teach that man has a separate entity, called the soul, that exists in a conscious, intelligent state, between death and the resurrection?" Bro. Stephen Skinner, of Mattora, Ill., is on the affirmative. He appears to be an honest, christian man, who manifests a kind spirit. He is a Methodist preacher, but is opposed to some of the practices of the M. E. Church, especially its polity. Thus far, he has not introduced any new points. We are to have three more sessions. Last evening he expressed a wish to close the debate, but said, "I won't back out." We believe special good will result from the discussion. We meet in the Universalist church. The Vermont Mission tent is pitched near by, as a lodging place for our Brn. and Srs. who come from other towns. It is also purposed to hold meetings in the tent after the close of the discussion. Bro. Hoyt resides here, and is a true, earnest worker in the vineyard of the Lord. He is publishing the "Biblical Messenger," and editing it in company with Bro. Carpenter. It is a good monthly, advocating the doctrine of holiness. Price 60 cents a year.

MECHANIC FALLS CAMPMEETING.

This meeting was a season of precious experience to the waiting people of God. They gathered in goodly numbers to the consecrated, tented grove, where the Lord had graciously smiled upon them in past years. The meetings were characterized by deep, heartfelt devotion, and earnest seeking for perfect preparation to meet the soon coming Judge. Harmony and christian union seemed unbroken, and all could say, "It is good to be here." A deep conviction evidently rested upon the large congregations who attended, that the Scriptures are being fulfilled, indicating that the day of the Lord is nigh at hand.

A meeting was held under the Mission Tent Saturday evening, which was especially interesting. Great power was manifested, without any undue excitement. Sinners were powerfully convicted, and more than a score came to the altar, weeping for their sins, and sought for pardon with prayers, and expressions of a fixed purpose to be the Lord's. We anticipate that the meeting will result in the strengthening of faith in believers, the conversion of sinners, and in preparing a people for the judgment. A number were baptized the last Sunday; among them was Bro. J. Porter's son, of Canada, who was converted the previous evening.

There was quite a large number of preachers present, who seemed to be earnestly interested in the great work of saving the perishing. The spirit of all our large and small meetings shows plainly that christian labor is drawing to a close. It seems like the finishing work of gleaning the harvest, of putting on the last touches to christian character. May the God of all grace assist us in doing the last work assigned the church of Christ.

TENDENCY OF SPIRITUALISM.

That Spiritualism leads away from Christ and the Bible, no one can dispute, who is at all acquainted with facts connected with the system. While it leads away from christianity, it also leads into iniquity in various ways, but especially in the gratification of the desires of the carnal heart. It holds up no restraints to the natural man, but advocates that "man's natural demands are God's highest commands." Consequently free-loveism is a common result flowing out of such a system. There is semi-occasionally a person among the Spiritualists who stands up boldly against this part of the system. But when they do dare to expose its corrupting tendency, they are at once denounced, and shunned by the body of Spiritualists, which clearly shows that they uphold its corruptions as well as its doctrines.

Mrs. Emma Hardinge Brittan, who has been a popular Spiritualist lecturer and writer, has ventured to speak against the increasing corruptions of Spiritualism, and for so doing is publicly denounced by her associates. She says:

"I have no quarrel with the free loveites personally, no will or intention to dictate to them. Whenever I have entered a plea against the direct and universal association of their views with Spiritualism, it has inevitably been without personality or personal vituperation; but there are two distinct evidences that this course has not been reciprocated by them, and that on one point at least, Spiritualists cannot discuss all subjects without the whole body becoming committed to the opinions of the few. These evidences are, first, the universal identification in the public mind of free loveism with Spiritualism, and next, the fact that I—the only public speaker, as far as I am aware, who has publicly pleaded against the association—have been so denounced, insulted, reviled and tabooed by the Spiritualists, publicly and privately, that I have been driven out of my field of usefulness, and compelled to drop pen and hush voice, and let the storm of abuse and vituperation pass by."

If the body of the leading supporters of Spiritualism were pure, they would rejoice to have such women as Mrs. Brittan stand up boldly against all that tends to evil. Such a person should be popular among them. But such is not the case. The fact is, there is not another system of religion in the world further removed from a pure Christianity than Spiritualism.

"SCIENCE VS. CHRISTIANITY."

It is quite a common opinion at the present day that science clashes with christianity. This is a very great mistake. True science may conflict with popular theology in many respects, but not in the least with the principles and doctrines of a pure christianity, as supported by the sacred Scriptures. Scientific speculations may conflict with the Bible, but all scientific facts never. Often have skeptical geologists assumed they had found something in geology that was opposed to the Mosaic account of creation, but usually, in a short time, some one else would find something else to prove their assumption false. No christian need have any fears that any scientific fact will ever be discovered that will cross the pathway of the Bible account of creation, which teaches that the earth and man were made about six thousand years ago.

The leading editorial in the Boston Journal, Sept. 5th, 1874, says:

M. G.

"The recent address of Professor Tyndall, with its implied hostility to the teachings of Christianity, and its apparent tendency toward absolute materialism, suggest the inquiry, What will be the effect upon religion of the theories supported by the advanced scientists of the day? Will religious teachers be content to take the place scornfully assigned to them by Prof. Tyndall, holding sway merely over the emotions, and barred out forever from intellectual investigations? It is becoming daily more apparent that the science of this generation is largely a Godless and faithless science. Hardly one of the men now living who are most prominent in scientific speculation and research is imbued with the reverent spirit of christianity, while very many have it for their avowed object to pull down the foundations of the old faith, without troubling themselves overmuch about the constructing of one. One great secret of the love which was felt for Agassiz, even among persons who were unable to follow him in his investigations, was the feeling that he stood as a champion of religious truth. From the bewildering speculations and belittling conclusions offered us by Darwin and Huxley and Spencer and Tyndall, we were wont to turn confidently to Agassiz, and say: Here we have a man equal in learning to any of these, as keen and patient an investigator as any, as acute and thorough a reasoner as any, and yet behold his simple faith, his unfaltering fidelity to religious truth, his sustained reverence of spirits. . . .

In the scientific teachings of the day it is important to distinguish closely between demonstration and theory, between facts which were proven and the inferences that are drawn from them. We may follow with interest the studies of Darwin, admiring his patience and skill, and welcoming the additions to our store of knowledge which he has made, bnt we are under no compulsion to accept his inferences or adopt his theory, especially as important links are still wanting in the chain of evidence relied on for its support, and it is distinguished for nothing so much as for the unexplained absence of proofs which ought to exist, and which have been laboriously but vainly sought for. It is not bigotry nor intolerance, but common prudence and sagacity, which forbid the christian world to cut adrift from the moorings of its faith and launch out on a sea wild with speculation and stormy with doubt. The materialistic naturalists write ponderously of 'the origin of life,' but have they told us a word yet of what its origin really was? Is not that the very point at which they always stop short? They have studied the conditions under which life exists; they have analyzed the constituents of living bodies; and then, armed with this knowledge, they have taken dead matter, molded and blended it in the right proportions, subjected it to the proper conditions, and after all their pains what have they had but dead matter still? With much show and flourish of trumpets, with profuse promises aud boastful words, they have led us down to second causes, and left us without resource save to turn back to Him who is the great first Cause, in whom we live and move and have our being.

Whatever actual truth has been brought to light by the investigations of science, so far from overthrowing revelation, has tended to confirm it, and to afford a new light for its interpretation. This is notably the case with the geological demonstration of the antiquity of the earth. Opposed at first by religionists, in a mistaken zeal, it has since been found to harmonize most perfectly with the Biblical account, and to give new beauty and significance to the first chapter of Genesis. The very order of creation there indicated has been confirmed by the facts brought to light by geology; and it remains still as great a marvel as ever that a book written like the Bible, in the early days of man's history, before the dawn of scientific research, should stand with unimpeached veracity in the broad glare of modern discoveries.

That the position taken by Professor Tyndall and those who think with him, even if it should some time assume a more pronounced form of hostility to christianity, can do permanent injury to the cause of religion we fiud no reason to believe. Temporarily it may dazzle and mislead. But it is quite as likely to shock the sensibilities of those whose religious faith has been partly shaken as to drive them back into a more absolute allegiance to their old beliefs. It must necessitate also a more advanced scholarship, and a more active intellecual aggressiveness on the part of christian teachers.

Pulpit utterances, that they may be effective, must be adapted to the new emergencies. In a time when the world has grown shrewdly critical, and is balancing the probabilities between faith and unbelief, the watchmen on the walls of Zion must needs let their voice be heard. Incidentally, also, we may hope that the new controversies, or the new phases of old controversies, which await us in the near future, may generate a spirit of tolerance and catholicity. Each party has something to learn from the other, and the exchange of epithets never yet accomplished much toward the settlement of a question. Theologians must throw off intolerance, and scientists must cease to be arrogant in their claims and absolute in their assertions. As to the ultimate result it will be, in our opinion, precisely the same as in times past: the truths proven by science will be found entirely consistent with the truths brought to light by revelation. Christianity has nothing to fear."

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 13th, 1874, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

LETTER FROM T. J. GREENE.

To the A. A. M. Society, Greeting.

DEAR BRN., I thank God that I am allowed to make a report so favorable to the cause. Most assuredly the Lord has been with me to bless. I preached at Oak Grove, Columbia Co., Aug. 7th, to Aug. 9th, to a large and attentive audience. Some could not get in the house; all listened with breathless silence. The Lord was with me in spirit. The evidence was overwhelming. It really appears that he gave the words I should say, which so disarmed outsiders that they say it was all Bible, and the best Advent preaching they ever heard. The closing discourse was chosen by the audience—Destiny of the wicked. One old lady wanted to know how the saints could walk on the ashes of the wicked if they went to heaven and the wicked to hell? I told her I wanted to know the same, but no such doctrine was to be found in the Bible.

I offered the parting hand to all who had a feeling of brotherly love for me. Many came forward and bade an affectionate adieu. They pressed me hard for another appointment.

Since I left I have heard from them twice, still urging me to return, but having so many calls in new places, have not as yet responded. How much our cause suffers for want of more preaching brethren to feed the little flock hastily gathered and often left to starve!

The brethren of the Oak Grove church are alive, and struggling hard against the enemy. They are much in want of help. May the good Lord strengthen them is my prayer. Bro. W. A. Sheffield says of our meetings—"I hear good results from our glorious meetings Saturday and Sunday, and all hands say you must come back." He thinks the effect upon our opponents quite cheering, the most bitter speaking favorably of it. So much for kindness to our enemies. May the Lord keep me in the same meek and lowly way, so that I may at all times manifest a Christ-like disposition towards those who hate me. Bro. S. further says—"Surely your coming among us was ordered by Him who doeth all things well, or so much good would not have grown out of it."

My next place was Baldwin, Duval Co.: but on account of some misunderstanding, I failed to get a hearing. One man was so bitter against us that he fairly raged. I challenged him for discussion but he declined. He says he "never will believe the dead unconscious." I quoted the Scripture "The dead know not anything." He said he did not care what the Bible said, he never would believe such a doctrine. Oh Lord! have mercy on him!

Baldwin is the bitterest place I ever found. I am to preach here Sept. 27th, and answer many objections to our doctrine. Brn., pray for me.

I next preached at Brandy Branch, Nausau Co., with marked effect. They are prejudiced but many willing to hear our evidences. God opened my lips and gave the power to speak truth with much boldness. Many are almost persuaded to be christians. One brother and wife have been expelled from the Baptist church for holding our faith. He would not renounce, and urged them to show where he was wrong. They of course could not do it, but they expelled him and his wife. They are now rejoicing in the light of the Bible, and are determined to walk in that light. Pray for them. They are doing all they can by example and precept to show sinners the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.

Dear Brn., I am happy to announce to you that the three packages of books sent, came just in time for me to take to Duval and Nausau Co. I scattered a goodly number, and pray God they may do much good. Surely if ever there was a time for us to exert ourselves to save sinners, it is now, as the signs show us that we are almost to the close of our probation, and the whole world in wickedness. Who will refrain his tongue? who of the Lord's people will refuse anything they have or can do to send this gospel of the soon coming kingdom to the ends of the earth so that sinners may be saved in that day?

I regret that I can do no more for the cause, but I am placed in such circumstances that I cannot do as I would. I have to do as I can. The Lord has enabled me to support my large and needy family, and preach a good portion of my time, but I have to refuse many urgent calls that are coming in from every direction. I pray God that the brethren and sisters everywhere will remember the thousands of poor sinners in a dying condition all around them, east, west, north, and south, and make a greater sacrifice than ever to send the gospel to all the world, before the Lord cometh.

May God bless and prosper you in your most holy work, is the sincere prayer of your obedient humble servant in the Lord.

Olustee, Fla. Sept. 8th, 1874.

TO SISTER R. E. LADD.

Springfield Camp-grove, Aug. 7th, '74.

DEAR SR. LADD:—At a meeting of the Conference of Ministers assembled on the National Camp-ground, this day, the following was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we mutually sympathize with you, dear Sr. Ladd, in your deep affliction, caused by the death of your dear companion, whom we have ever esteemed as a dear Bro. in Christ. We all feel the heavy loss, and pray the Lord to sustain you in this trying hour, and to keep you in full preparation to meet Jesus at his coming, when we hope to be with you and your dear husband at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

In behalf of the Conference,

J. COUCH, President.

MASS. MISSION TENT.

Brn. Couch and Grant:—We closed our tent-meeting at Pepperell, Mass., last Monday, after continuing it twelve days. The result of that meeting was blessed indeed. The Lord manifested his power in converting souls as I have not seen him do for years. Some were brought to Christ that none expected to see come. Among those who came were two elderly men, formerly considered the most hardened and indifferent to religion of any in the town.

There was some opposition to the pitching of the tent from professing christians in the place, but all had to acknowledge that God was with us, and wrought wonderfully in the salvation of souls. Bro. M. A. Potter baptized in Pepperell yesterday, and regular meetings are commenced there for the promulgation of the truth and the building up of the newly-formed church of Christ in that town. God bless the dear ones there.

The tent is now pitched here, under the most favorable circumstances; and our prayer is that God will give abundantly of his Spirit, and save some in this wicked and corrupt city. Pray for us.

I. I. LESLIE.

P. S.—We want more laborers here. Who will come and help during the next ten days? Come.

I. I. L.

Keene, N. H., Sept. 21st.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. Morrill.

We have just closed the tent-meeting at Groveland, Mass. The meeting was one of interest. The Methodist brethren, together with their pastor, and two local preachers, united with us in sympathy and labor. The Methodist preacher, from Salisbury, Mass., preached once under the tent. While we extended our arms wide to all christians, yet we did not compromise the truth, but kept prominent before the people the immediate coming of Christ and the resurrection from the dead. We had a good audience every evening, and last Sunday a large crowd were at the tent. The church of Haverhill, together with their minister, Bro. Stockman, were with us to labor on Sunday, and we had a heavenly season long to be remembered, not only by the people of groveland, but from the surrounding towns. Many heard that which will make an impression, and we trust will be the means, under God, of their salvation.

People can be reached by tent-meetings that cannot be in any other way; and we desire the prayers, the sympathy and help, of all lovers of Jesus, that we may have wisdom, strength and means to go on in this mission work, and that the devil, in his attempts to drive us from the field, may not be able to succeed.

South Deerfield, Sept. 15th.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

DEAR CRISIS:—My heart is truly sad as I cast my eyes out over the world and see in what a time we are living,—strife, commotion, confusion, hatred, variance, evil speaking, trying to injure the godly and the truly good; and the strife to be the greatest seems to be in our midst; and if Jesus, when he was here upon earth, took a little child and set him in the midst and taught his disciples that unless they become as a little child, they could not inherit the kingdom,—I say, if he did then, what must be his feelings now to see one rise up against another and strive to be the greatest? Jesus taught his disciples to be child-like. What is it to be child-like? Children will have their petty strifes, but how soon and easy they forget them; how quick, after having done wrong, they will (if rightly taught) feel so sorry, and want to be forgiven, and it is all over in a moment, almost.

To illustrate: my dear little niece, Cora Belle, got a little provoked the other morning, while I was preparing her to go to school, and, in her haste to be there with the rest to play, she turned and said some naughty words to me. I looked at her with tears in my eyes, and told her Jesus heard it all, and how displeased it must make him feel when he loved her so much, kept her alive, gave her food and clothes, and everything she had. "Now you go right and ask him to forgive you." She went away into the other room, and was gone but a minute before she came running back, and closed my door saying, "Now I am sorry; will you forgive me? But," said she, "the naughty words came out before I knew it"; and then she knelt and asked God to forgive her. And as soon as she got up from her knees, she embraced and kissed me, and away she went to school singing, just as happy as though nothing had happened.

And so it ought to be with us larger ones. We ought to be more gentle, humble, childlike, teachable and mild. Truly it does seem as if the Scripture spoken to some anciently would apply down in this age of the world—"When for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye need that one teach you." It does seem that some are trying to teach others, when they need to be taught themselves. Oh this self! this feeling of wanting to be greatest. I wish it could be so fully rooted out of everybody, that it could never spring up again. How many now-a-days can adopt the language of the apostle—"In honor preferring one another"? What a sweet text! Let us all heed it. If we are true children of God, we shall not want to be above another of God's dear ones. Undoubtedly we shall all have our favorites among God's children till we are made like Jesus; but that, if we are christians, will not make us one mite better, or above the lowliest of God's children. O Lord! bless every one of thy dear ones suffering upon beds of pain, or from the tongue of slander, or evil speaking, or in whatever situation they may be called to pass through. God bless them. He knows how to succor those that are tried and tempted:

Brother, sister, we are almost home; be of good cheer; the Master will soon come and call for you. Bless the name of the Lord! Jesus is coming soon again to take his weary, waiting ones home. He will make wrongs right, and heal all sorrows. Suffering ones upon beds of pain and distress, let your hearts be uplifted now, for the morning will soon dawn, and the pains be changed to health, the tears to rejoicings; sighs be turned to singing; tears to bliss forevermore.

North Dana, Mass.

BRO. I. B. ANDREWS writes:—"Dear Crisis, thou much loved sheet, how I hail thy weekly visits laden with such precious admonitions and present truths. I feel as never before the importance of entire trust in God, and of being awake to sound the alarm, and show out in the times in which we live that now is the time to be a live christian, watching and waiting the return of the Master to claim his own and receive his Bride to himself. I rejoice that Satan's work of death will soon cease. As I write, a child of my son's lies dead in our house, soon to be laid in the enemy's land, to await the resurrection morn. O happy morn! hasten to our rescue, and drive the usurper from his power, and let Jesus rule and reign forevermore. Amen."

INFORMATION.—Sr. N. M. Henry wishes to give the following information to her friends in Mo. and Ill. She is now at 690 Main St., Cambridge, Mass., where she has had a successful surgical operation performed by Dr. O. Marcy, which she thinks has been the means of saving her life. The following is her statement: M. G.

"I came to Dr. Marcy's Sept. 1st. He made a thorough examination, and said my heart was pushed out of place some three or four inches (the beat was in the pit of my stomach); my left lung was useless; that both heart and lung were submerged in water, unless the fluid had become in a manner hardened to membrane by the long neglect of my case. He said, 'Will you submit to a surgical operation?' 'Certainly; anything you may propose'; although, at the same time, I knew my family at home would never have consented. 'It will hurt you,' said he. I looked up and laughed. What was a hurt to me. I felt no dread or fear, even at the sight of the different instruments he showed me, and explained that he should have to use.

On the next day, Sept. 2nd, accompanied by his wife—dear, brave heart—who never left me through it all, holding me in her arms with a face full of sympathy, after she had properly prepared me for the operation. Some of the sisters will remember how I complained of a 'terrible sore spot' below the shoulder blade, between the eighth and ninth ribs. Well, there in that tender place he cut through with an instrument, to which was attached a pump or syringe. 'Did you scream?' says one nervous one, 'or take ether?' Neither one; I kept my mouth shut, for I had nothing to say. It was Dr. Marcy's business, and he attended to it. Hurt! if you think it did not, try it. Let him draw out of your side and from around your heart almost five pounds of yellow fluid—seventy ounces—filling a wash-bowl as full as it could be carried, then with suction power draw that poor, abused drowned heart back to its proper locality, and feel the air rush into the closed cells of your lung, and I think you would know the meaning of suffering. They had to administer ether, to prevent spasms. She placed me in a hot bath for fifteen minutes, then in a nice bed in a great room with good care.

He will take no pay for all this. He is a Methodist brother, with the truth in his heart. I am still very weak, and confined to the house. Will Bro. Pile of the Herald please copy from this; also Advent Christian Times? I have warm, loving friends, who read all of these papers. N. M. HENRY."

Manchester (Iowa) Campmeeting.

Our campmeeting was a season of special interest. Union and harmony prevailed. The preaching was pointed and practical. The prayer-meetings were excellent, especially the young people's meeting. They were the best that I have attended in Iowa, and, as a result, the children of God were strengthened, wanderers brought back to Christ, and sinners converted. Eleven were baptized during the meeting, and others expect to be soon. One hundred sat down to the table of the Lord.

Mrs. Burnham, of Vt., an elderly lady, being West on a visit, attended the campmeeting, entered the service of the Lord, and started at the close of the meeting for her home in the East, to tell the story of Jesus and his love. J. RIDLEY.

Obituaries

BROWN. Fell asleep in Jesus, at his residence in Northville, N. Y., Sept. 10th, 1874, our dear Bro. John Brown, in the seventy-ninth year of his age.

It is the united testimony of those who knew him best that he was what Pope calls the "noblest work of God"—an honest man. In 1843 he embraced with ardor the Adventist faith, and to the close of his useful life he remained one of its most earnest and consistent advocates.

Though his peculiar religious faith was exceedingly unpopular in Northville, yet so pure and blameless was his life, and so upright was his conduct, that he was beloved by all who knew him, and respected as a true christian—an "Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile."

His last moments were peaceful and happy—a fitting close to such a life as his has been. To his beloved wife, who for nearly half a century had shared his joys and sorrows, and who for thirty years has been encouraged and sustained by the same religious faith, he said, "Do not grieve for me. Jesus will support you."

His funeral took place from the Baptist church in Northville, on Saturday, the 12th inst., and was largely attended. The sermon from the text in Rom. 4: 20-24 was a fitting memorial of one who was truly a son of Abraham. The pastor of the Baptist church, Rev. Mr. Hull, very kindly assisted in the services, and gave an eloquent and touching tribute to the christian worth of the deceased, and the choir sang with great power and sweetness the hymns beginning—

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,"

and,

"Unveil thy bosom, faithful tomb."

Consoled and sustained by the christian's hope, we laid our dear brother away in the beautiful village cemetery to rest and sweetly sleep till Jesus comes. He bequeathed to his wife and son the rich legacy of a good name, a blameless life, and a bright example of christian faith. He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God, being fully persuaded that what he had promised, he was able also to perform. J. H. WHITMORE.

PERKINS. At his residence in Fennimore, Wis., Aug. 13th, 1874, Amasa Perkins, in the eightieth year of his age.

Our aged brother was a native of Vermont. He removed from Rutland, Vt., about eight years since; was a member of the church of Christ of that place. For a season he stood connected with the Baptist denomination in this town. When the subject of the Lord's second coming and relative doctrines began to be published here, Bro. Perkins was among the first to give them countenance and support, and from the commencement to the close of his earthly career has been abundant in labor and good works. In his death the Advent Christian Church will sustain a loss, which will be felt by all. He was a christian, and respected as such by all christians.

Bro. Perkins left behind an aged companion and two sons at this place, two children residing in Vermont, and one in Iowa, who will feel deeply afflicted by this bereavement. May the providence of a kind heavenly Father sustain by his favor the aged widowed sister and the children, and guide them all by his grace in the path of christian life to meet again in his kingdom.

A large audience of sympathizing friends at his funeral listened to a discourse from the writer from John 11: 23. N. A. HITCHCOCK.

SMITH. In Danbury, N. H., Aug. 7th, 1874, Abigail, widow of the late Dea. Amos Smith, in the eighty-fourth year of her age.

Death has again entered our home, and torn from our embrace a loving, gentle mother, whose society was dear to us, and we are left to mourn our loss. Our hearts are sad and lonely, for death has left desolate the dear old home of our childhood. Yet we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for our mother lived and died a christian, and we expect soon to meet her, with dear father and sisters, on the new earth.

"We shall join thee in the morning,
Where partings never come,
Where those we've loved in Jesus
Forever are at home."

MARY A. LEAVITT.

JORDAN. At Mechanic Falls, Me., Sept. 11th, 1874, Sr. Sally M. Jordan, wife of Bro. Wm. Jordan, aged eighty-five years.

Sister J. was for many years a devoted, exemplary christian, a worthy wife, and an affectionate, faithful mother. She waited in joyful expectation to see her Savior coming in the clouds of heaven, but finally concluded that she might have to sleep a little while in the grave. Rest, dear mother in Israel, for the day of thy toils and cares has ended, and the morning of thy glory and triumph is dawning. J. COUCH.

PATTEE. Fell asleep at Sandy Hill, N. Y., Sept. 10th, 1874, of typhoid-pneumonia, Mrs. Emma L. Pattee, aged nineteen years and seven months.

The subject of this notice gave her heart to God in early life, and united with the Advent church in Sandy Hill, and continued a member until her death.

She leaves a husband, mother, brothers and sisters to mourn her departure. May God sanctify this bereavement to the good of the mourning circle. Funeral was attended by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Thomas of the M. E. Church. A. W. SIBLEY.

HUTCHINGS. In Exeter, N. H., April 18th, 1874, of lung fever, Bro. P. C. Hutchings, aged forty-five years.

He leaves a wife and six children to mourn. May the Lord sustain them by his grace. Our brother died as he lived, and came down to the grave like a shock of corn fully ripe. Funeral by the writer. Text, Psalm 88: 10. D. M. LEAVITT.

Married.

REED—DEVEREUX. In Bangor, Me., Sept. 14th, 1874, by Eld. F. A. Baker, ELD. N. G. REED and Miss AURORA DEVEREUX, of Lewiston.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

A HURRICANE.—Chicago, Sept. 19.—Special dispatches to the Tribune from Davenport and Dubuque, Iowa, and Rock Island, Illinois, give accounts of a terrible storm of rain and wind in those localities last evening, by which a great amount of property was destroyed and damaged. At all those places houses were unroofed, walls blown down and fences scattered, while the cellars and basements were filled with water. The whole surrounding country was flooded.

At Rock Island the First Presbyterian church was nearly destroyed, a portion of the roof being lifted up and dropped through into the basement, carrying with it the organ, pulpit and floor, and upon these a great portion of the walls fell. It is impossible to estimate the amount of damage, but it will be many thousands of dollars.

During the storm a freight train on the Illinois Central Railroad, when three miles west of Dunleith, ran into a break caused by the flood. The engine was completely wrecked and the engineer, Andrews, fireman Orton and a brakeman named Allison were buried beneath the ruins. They were taken out in a horribly scalded and bruised condition. Allison died soon after. The others are in a critical condition.

A MOHAMMEDAN MISSIONARY.—New York, Sept. 20. Henry L. Norman, once a Methodist preacher in London, has come to the United States as a missionary from the Mohammedan religion. After spending a week in this city he started last evening for Chicago. A reporter of a Sunday paper called upon him at the Windsor House yesterday and got from him the following recital of his errand:

I have been sent here by a wealthy Mohammedan of Constantinople, who made his fortune in trade with England and America, and so became somewhat familiar with Christian countries. He was struck with the energy of Christians in spreading their religion, and being intensely devoted to his own faith, he became convinced that counter measures ought to be taken. He formed my acquaintance in London, and much of our leisure for months was spent discussing Mohammedanism. The result was I became a convert to his views. It would not interest you or the public to follow the operation of my mind all through this radical change of belief, but I assure you that I am now a firm, conscientious follower of the Eastern religion. That religion is not understood in Christian countries. If it was it would make converts rapidly. Why, sir, you have probably no adequate estimate of the extent of Mohammedanism. Its followers number two hundred millions, spread over half a dozen Eastern countries.

WESTERN CONFERENCE.—A General Religious Conference for the promotion of piety among believers, and conversion of unbelievers, will be held in the Green Street Tabernacle, Chicago, Ill., commencing on Wednesday, Oct. 21st, at 7½ P. M., and continuing over the following Lord's day. It is expected that Elds. Miles Grant, S. G. Mathewson, and John Couch, from the East, will attend this meeting. We invite all to attend who can come, from far and near, and we hope all who come will bring with them a holy zeal for God and Jesus Christ. We specially invite brethren and sisters in the west to come up to this feast, and help in the cause of Christ. Let there be a general rally. For the church, FRANK BURR, Pastor.

A TWO DAYS MEETING will be held at Darien, Genesee Co., N. Y., commencing Friday evening, Oct. 16th, it being the twelfth Annual Meeting at that place. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend. Teams will be at Croft's Station at three o'clock P. M. to meet the cars from the east, and six o'clock P. M. from the west.
In behalf of the brethren, C. W. LOW.

THE next annual session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held with the church in Bristol, commencing Wednesday evening, Oct. 14th, to continue over the following Lord's day. We hope there will be a general gathering at this meeting.
G. L. WHITE, Secretary.

HAVING supplied the church in East Concord one half of the time during the past year, I intend closing my labors with them on the first Sunday in Nov. After which time I shall be at liberty to labor in places as the way opens.
ENOCH MORRILL, South Deerfield, N. H.

I EXPECT, if the Lord will, to visit Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Mass., and perhaps other States, the coming winter. Any one wishing an appointment, or protracted meeting for their place, please drop me a line on a postal card, with a one cent stamp on it, to Richmond, P. Q., Box 31, and I will endeavor to supply them as far as I can. Our work is almost done, and soon the Lord will cut it short in righteousness. F. M. DRAKE.

FOUND on camp-ground at Pittsfield, Me., two water-proof capes for children. One brown parasol partly worn. Left at the Albion tent, one pillow. The above can be had by addressing JER. CARR, South Albion, Me.

LOST at Pittsfield camp, Me., one woollen gray shawl, with striped border. Any one having found the same will please forward it to Mrs. ELVIRA B. NEAL, Pittsfield, Me. JER. CARR.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS. For W. Kellaway, from a Friend, $3.00.
For Sr. Tuller, from Jane Veasey, $1.00.
GEO. T. ADAMS.

DEARLY BELOVED, the Mass. Mission Tent is in the field. We have no funds in the treasury. Shall it stop, while the calls are being made upon us, for lack of means? L. BOUTELL.

CONFERENCE.—The New York State A. C. Conference will be held with the church at Yorkshire, commencing Friday evening, Sept. 25th, and hold over the following Snnday. The church at Yorkshire has never united with the conference, but desires now to do so. Although it is at one side, yet we hope all that can will make an effort and sacrifice to attend, and come praying God's blessing upon the meeting. Yorkshire is on the Buffalo, N. Y., and Philadelphia R. R., thirty-five miles from Buffalo. Stop at Arcade Station, which is about a mile from Yorkshire village. Those coming with teams will be well cared for. We hope to see a good turnout in the name of the Lord. M. R. MILES, President.
A. P. MOORE, Secretary.

N. H. ADV. CHRIS. CONFERENCE.—The Lord willing, the fourth quarterly session of the N. H. Advent Christian Conference will be held with the church at So. Sutton, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 1st, to hold over the following Sabbath. An invitation is extended to all to come to the feast. Our preaching brethren especially are requested to come—all who can labor together for the salvation of the perishing. May the Lord greatly bless.
T. W. PIPER, G. W. BROWN, D. W. DAVIS, } Committee.

THOSE wishing the New Hampshire Mission Tent to be pitched in their vicinity, will please write immediately to ENOCH MORRILL, South Deerfield, N. H., Chairman of Tent Committee.

GROVE MEETING.—There will be a meeting in a grove at Vitum Hill, in Sandwich, N. H., on Sunday, Sept. 27th, and Oct. 3d. A cordial invitation is extended to all the good people to meet with us, and assist us in the work of the Master. If the weather should be cold or rainy, the meetings will be held in the Vitum school-house.
E. S. MOULTON.

THE tent meeting at Waterloo, Warner, N. H., will continue through this week, and over Sunday, Sept. 27th. We expect Brn. Sunderland, Grant, Roby, and D. W. Davis to be with us some during the meeting. We hope our brethren and sisters in this vicinity will come out and help in this meeting. We are doing up our last work, and have but little time to work.
ENOCH MORRILL, for the Committee.

THERE will be a meeting at Wesley, Me., commencing Sept. 24th, and hold over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited. Brn. N. G. Reed and J. R. Hall are expected.
For the Brn., M. W. CORLISS.

THE first quarterly meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Traer, Tama Co., commencing Oct. 9th, to continue over the following Sunday. All of like precious faith are invited to attend, and the ministers who desire the union of christians. E. A. MARSH, Secretary.

DISCUSSION.—There will be a discussion held in Waverly, N. Y., commencing Monday evening, Oct. 12th, between Dr. J. G. Fish, affirmative, and Eld. J. W. Taylor, negative, of the following resulution: "Resolved, that the Bible teaches the immortality of man, and his continued intercourse with the inhabitants of earth after the death of the natural body." The discussion is to continue five evenings. J. W. T.

THE ADV. CHRIS. CONFERENCE of the Province of Quebec will (D. V.) hold its next annual session at the "old meeting-house" in Hatley, P. Q., on Wednesday, October 7th, and continue over the Sabbath. All of like precious faith, who are in sympathy with its objects and work, as set forth in its Constitution, will, we trust, make a special effort to attend, and unite in its business deliberations, and religious exercises of preaching, prayer, and song; which, we trust, will be so scriptural, so wisely and kindly performed, as to result in permanent good to the cause of our coming Savior. Especially we would say, let all the ministerial and lay members in the several districts, as far as is possible, arrange to attend. Come early, and come prepared to stay through the meeting. Let due reports, either written or verbal, be forthcoming from the entire field. Let isolated brethren and sisters who feel an interest, and cannot attend, write epistles to be read in conference, and direct to the President, or Secretary, at Ayres Flat. Please attend to this in good season. Christian union is strength; let us have it in action, feeling, and fact. Christian hospitality and kindness will be shown to all who come, by the resident brethren and friends, as on former occasions. Come praying for and expecting good.
CHAS. P. DOW, President.
E. C. ORCUTT, Secretary.

OHIO CONFERENCE.—The annual session of the Ohio State Conference will be held, the Lord willing, with the church in Norwalk, Huron Co., O., commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 15th, and continue over the following Sabbath. This will be an important meeting for the cause of truth in this State. Let every A. C. Church in the State appoint delegates without fail; also let all who love the appearing of our Lord in glory, and the resurrection of the dead, come. All are welcome, and will be provided for.
E. MCCULLOCH, President.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The next quarterly meeting of the first Christian Church of Wayland and Loon Lake, called the Church of God, will be held at Wallace, N. Y., commencing Oct. 3d, at one o'clock P. M., and hold over the following Sunday. A cordial invitation is extended to all to come in the fulness of the gospel of Christ.
For the church, E. C. COWLES, Pastor.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The first quarterly meeting of the A. C. Quarterly Conference of N. W. Kansas, for the second conference year, will be held, the Lord willing, with the A. C. Church of West Creek, Republic county, commencing Friday evening, Sept. 25th, and continuing over Sunday, and as long as the interest demands. Bro. J. C. Smith, State Evangelist, is expected to be present with the State Mission Tent, to assist in preaching; also Sr. M. J. Clark is expected to be present to preach the word. All of like precious faith are cordially invited to attend. E. N. BLISS, Pres.
J. S. THORP, Sec.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Northern Pa. and Southern N. Y. Conference will be held at Little Marsh, Tioga Co., Pa., commencing Sept. 24th, to hold over the following Sabbath. Those coming by R. R. will leave the cars at Middlebury, on the Corning and Wellsboro road. Trains leave Corning at 7.50 A. M. and 7.30 P. M. Teams will meet the trains at Middlebury on Thursday and Friday. E. C. COWLES, President.
J. W. TAYLOR, Secretary.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting held in Salisbury, N. H., at the Union meeting-house, commencing Friday, Nov. 27th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands.
C. H. FLETCHER.
D. F. LEAVITT.

THERE will be a meeting for prayer and conference at Bro. B. C. Crabtree's (the Tileson House), Mattapan, Friday evening, Sept. 25th. All who love to pray are invited.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The first quarterly meeting of the Advent Christian Conference of Nova Scotia will be held, the Lord willing, with the church at Scott's Bay, commencing Oct. 1st.
JOHN J. WOODWORTH.

THE Lord willing, I will commence meetings at Cowdersport, Potter Co., Pa., Oct. 1st, and continue one week. Will attend to baptism.

I may be addressed at the above place for further labor, if desired, or at Warrensville, Lycoming Co., Pa. J. T. ONGLEY.

NOTICE.—As I expect my labors in this section will soon close, I would say I shall be ready to go and preach "the gospel of the kingdom" anywhere, as the Lord may open the way, the coming fall and winter. Any wishing to correspond with me can direct for the present to A. P. MOORE, Linden, Genesee Co., N. Y.

HAVING closed my labors with the church at Clinton, Clinton Co., Iowa, I am now at liberty to go into other fields as the Lord may direct, and brethren and friends may desire. My address until further notice will be Adrian, Mich.
SILAS B. MABEY.

I HAVE resigned my pastoral charge at New Hartford, Iowa, for the present, and removed to Raymond, Iowa. J. W. BURROUGHS.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork.

Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives of Yale College. 8vo., 68 pp.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject.

We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—One copy, 25 cts.; one dozen for $2.50; sent by mail, postpaid. $17 per hundred, by express. Please order freely. A'GT.

RE-PRINTED
ELD. S. S. BREWER'S EXPOSITORY WORKS.

Several of Bro. Brewer's works, which have been out of print some time, so that we have not been able to fill orders, are now published, and we can supply as follows:—

"THE LAST DAY TOKENS."

Three volumes in one. The Signs in the Sun Moon, and Stars, with other strange phenomena illustrated with splendid cuts. 216 pp.; 50 cts.

"TREATISE ON REV. XIIITH."

Illustrated with cuts. 25 cts.

"The History of an Immortal Soul."

This is a work of the history of the origin of the dogma, with copious extracts from ancient heathen and Christian writers, to which is added a Scriptural exposition. Price 10 cts.

"THE SEVEN SEALS"

is also regarded as an important work. 15 cts. And the

"Slaying of the Witnesses."

10 cts. AG'T.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

For sale at this Office. AG'T.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.
BY HENRY CONSTABLE, A. M.

We have this valuable work in its unabridged form of 330 pages, neatly bound in cloth, for sale. Price $1.00; postage, 16 cts.

WAITING FOR CHRIST.

"Waiting for the coming of our Lord."—1 COR. 1: 7.

We wait for Thee, all-glorious One!
We look for thine appearing:
We bear thy name, and on the throne
We see thy presence cheering.
Faith even now
Uplifts its brow,
And sees the Lord descending,
And with Him bliss unending.

We wait for thee through days forlorn,
In patient self-denial;
We know that thou our guilt hath borne
Upon thy cross of trial.
And well may we
Submit with thee
To bear the cross and love it,
Until thy hand remove it.

We wait for thee; already thou
Hast all our hearts' submission;
And though the spirit sees thee now,
We long for open vision;
When ours shall be
Sweet rest with thee,
And pure unfading pleasure,
And life in endless measure.

We wait for thee with certain hope
The time will soon be over;
With childish longing we look up,
Thy glory to discover.
O bliss! to share
Thy triumph there,
When home, with joy and singing,
The Lord his saints is bringing.
—From the German of Hiller.

SELF-DENIAL.

C PIKE.

To deny self and bear the cross of Christ at all times, is really a victory which only can be achieved by divine aid. But Christ has said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Selfishness is doubtless one of the strongest foes to conquer that the human breast is heir to, yet it must be overcome or we are lost.

Christ has given us to understand that it will be unpleasant for human nature to follow him at all times, and in all places, and that selfish emotions would present themselves, which would require much prayer and patience; but he has said, "My grace shall be sufficient for you." These emotions must be overcome, or we die at last on this very field conquered by selfishness, which will be the end of every man and woman who suffers selfishness to triumph. They will suffer a fire to burn within that will finally devour them.

The mariner on the ocean, if he would go safely past all shoals and rocks, and reach the desired port in safety, must repair the smallest injuries, and often throw out his line and take observations. So the christian mariner should repair all the injuries done in the past, and take observations often, lest he find himself lodged upon some willful rock, or inbedded in some selfish shoal.

If we would know how, when, where, and of what to deny ourselves, let us take the word of God and search it frequently, diligently, and wisely, with a desire to amend. God demands that we should deny ourselves of everything that stands in opposition to the divine command, and against our own spiritual welfare. Not that we should deny being what God has made us, nor should we deny having what God has given us, nor should we ever deny being what we really are, but we should deny ourselves of those things which are detrimental to our moral, spiritual, and eternal interest. Then let our understanding be denied, for it is possible for us to have a wrong understanding. Solomon says, "Lean not unto thine own understanding." Why? Because unless God gives us understanding, it is as liable to be wrong as right.

These strong and stubborn wills of ours must be denied, so far as they oppose the will of God. Hence we shall do well to be wise and understand what the will of the Lord is, lest we find our wills have crossed his, when it will be too late.

Our inordinate affections, and the gratification of the members of the body, must be denied. "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth, fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry." "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof." Worldly gain is the most prevalent of all sins, because it is so often obtained unlawfully; but when it can be obtained no other way, it should be denied, for it stands in opposition to the religion of Jesus Christ, and our usefulness in the cause we profess to sustain.

When the fishermen were called of Christ to work in his vineyard, they denied themselves of father, ship, net and all. Though they depended upon these for their daily bread, yet they must deny themselves, or they could not be his disciples. Self could not be gratified, and Christ pleased. Self might have said, "Let us fish, or we starve." Jesus commands them to follow him. So selfishness must surrender, and Christ be glorified.

Friends must sometimes be denied, though it be with a great struggle. Lot must go out of Sodom; his dear children are unwarned; the angels give him time to warn them, but they laugh him to scorn. He must deny himself of them, and follow the angels' orders. They thrust him out by force, and commanded him not to look back. Lot's wife had self-denial in her acts, but not in heart. Her mind was on her children whom she had left behind. The Scriptures have a record of the result.

Parents, save your children if you can, but if they will not go, obey the angel and flee for refuge. Do not let your children hold you back until it is too late. Teach them self-denial, and do not foster their selfish desires, because you wish your children to go where others go, and to look as well as others look. Parents will do well to practice self-denial, and to teach their children to do the same, lest they cause their children's ruin. Life, and everything must be laid down if called for. "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for my sake, shall find it. For what is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his life? or what will a man give in exchange for his life?"

He who has conquered self, has achieved the greatest victory possible, and should be ranked among that class of beings higher than Alexander the Great, or any of the Cæsars. Man cannot get this victory without help, for it is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

Cherish this Spirit, reader; ask for divine leadership in this great conflict, and you may be sure of a complete victory through Jesus Christ; and at the last day standing on Zion's heights, crowned with eternal life, with a palm of victory in your hand, look back upon a life of war, and conflicts, sorrows, and defeats, and looking into the face of God's anointed one, with face wet with tears of gratitude, bless and adore him for his redeeming grace and dying love; then looking forward into eternity, and for a moment realizing the joys of that new world, you will join in that song of victory, which will be sung by every redeemed child of God.

Massena, N. Y.

SUBMISSION.

GEO. E. LEE.

The great secret of Christianity rests in being submissive to the divine law. It is utter fallacy to talk about "serving God," when everything we do or say is exacted from us by force, or through fear of some dreadful punishment. Our God is a merciful God, full of pity and compassion, and hence, what he requires of us is simply to submit to his guiding hand, that he may safely direct us into the port of peace. We may lay a track for ourselves upon which we may desire to run the race, but this is not submission.

If pride compels us to act in direct opposition to the will of God, he will surely withhold from us the needed grace which is requisite in the trying events of this life; for "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble." Jas. 4: 6. It is better for us, therefore, that we submit ourselves to him, and then with that humility which is a result of submission we shall rest

"Safe in the arms of Jesus,
Safe from corroding care,
Safe from the world's temptations,
Sin cannot harm us there."

O what a comforting thought! Jesus, the Intercessor for a lost world, still at the throne of mercy, saying, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." Why not come now, ye that desire "the life which is to come," and are confident that you have not yet become its heir? Why not "draw nigh to God," for then he will surely "draw nigh to you." Ye that are "rich in this world," and have become "highminded" from "trusting in uncertain riches" instead of the "living God," and have but a remnant left of the "good foundation against the time to come;" oh, "humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." Jas. 4: 10. Then, and not till then, shall you be exalted above all that is earthly, and aspire unto all that is heavenly. Then, when the "distant beams" of the Sun of Righteousness, "like floods of glory, fill the soul with glad surprise," you will not feel in the least constrained to sing,—

"Look, how we grovel here below,
Fond of these earthly toys;
Our souls, how heavily they go,
To reach eternal joys."

On the contrary, your souls will be light and buoyant in the ocean of God's boundless love, and, with a tenacious grasp for the eternal glory that is seen only by the eye of faith, you will delight to "praise God in his sanctuary," and can joyfully sing with a sincere heart,

"Sweetly I'm resting in Jesus, Trusting my Savior and Lord."

And thus, being "filled with the Spirit," you will gladly heed the exhortation of the apostle Paul, to "submit yourselves one to another in the fear of God;" then, not having the "fear of men" in pre-eminence, you can with freedom "speak to yourselves in psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord." Eph. 5: 19.

It is a privilege accorded unto those who have been once made free in Christ, to continue free in him, and "rejoice always," even though we "suffer for righteousness' sake." "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" 1 Pet. 3: 12, 13. There is nought in this world that can harm one of God's chosen people, so long as they in submission rest passively in his hands, and can truthfully exclaim,

"Here I give my all to thee,
Friends, and time, and earthly store;
Soul and body, thine to be,
Wholly thine, forevermore."

If we are his and realize that all we have is his, we are not our own, and consequently we are to have a faithful watch-care over that which is committed to our charge, and then in due time we shall hear it said, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things." Let us, then, "Sound the loud timbrel," for "Jehovah hath triumphed," and "his people are free." They are under a faithful Leader—one who will not betray them into dangerous paths, for

"By waters still, o'er troubled sea,
Still 'tis thy hand that leadeth me."

"Lord, I would clasp thy hand in mine,
Nor ever murmur nor repine:
Content, whatever lot I see,
Since 'tis my God that leadeth me."

"And when my task on earth is done,
When by thy grace the victory's won,
E'en death's cold wave, I will not flee,
Since God through Jordan leadeth me."

Biddeford, Me., Sept. 2nd.

"FRIEND, COME UP HIGHER."

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

It requires no argument to prove that there is a narrow, selfish and exclusive spirit exhibited by some who profess to be christians; but as the Lord said to Peter, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." "The Lord knoweth them that are his." And no act of excommunication, or withholding of fellowship (on the part of man) can alter the standing before God, of one whom he accepts. On the other hand, if all the bishops and churches on earth should proclaim their approval of one whom God does not approve, it would not save him, or render him one whit more acceptable in the sight of him who looks at the heart. It is not for us to judge others, but we each may judge himself.

But what is the standard? "Who is on the Lord's side?" How shall I decide the momentous question for myself? Am I on the Lord's side? Mere assurance may mislead; for sometimes men of vile habits, evidently wicked and corrupt, profess full assurance. One such case I well remember. The man held a place and name in the Methodist church, but was a hard drinker, and often seen the worse for liquor. I have often been near him in class meeting and have heard him say with a great deal of confidence that he "never had a doubt nor a fear." But others doubted for him, and when he died (very suddenly) who could hope that he would stand among the redeemed, "on the shining shore?" A false assurance is far worse than uncertainty. But how may we have the right kind of assurance? Have first a clean heart, and the assurance will follow. How shall we cleanse our heart? It is well to "take heed thereto" according to the divine word; but the blood alone—the blood of Christ—this must be applied by faith, or no one can be truly clean. But then the spirit itself will bear witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. When Jesus says, in answer to the earnest cry of the heart seeking for purity, "I will; be thou clean," then we have the true witness, the correct evidence, and the right kind of assurance.

But is it well to have an assurance of safety when we are not safe? No; for if we feel insecure, we may seek and find the true security in Christ. For my own part I would pray earnestly to be kept from having a false confidence. I would take the "lowest seat," and if the Master says "Friend, come up higher," then I may have good cause for rejoicing.

To all who are not exactly what they ought to be, or what they might be, this word now applies. "Friend, come up higher." Come nearer to Jesus. Live for him alone. Commune with him continually. "Pray without ceasing." And in order to "take heed" to our way according to the word, we must read and study that word. Do not say you have not time. That is not yet true. But soon it will be true. When the mighty angel proclaims the end of all things fully come, then indeed you will have no time for this work. But now, while it is an accepted time, now in this day of salvation, make your calling and election sure. It is high time to awake, and trim the lamp, and get on the white robe of Christ's righteousness.

"HOW BLESSED TO KNOW."

O. R. MERRILL.

How blessed to know that the time is not far distant, when Christ, the Life-giver, will come to give immortality to the pure in heart, the holy, and to all that love his appearing.

The thought how cheering! We near the time when the tabernacle of God will be with men, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. The time is drawing near when the ransomed of the Lord shall return from the land of darkness and death, and come home to their Father's house with joy, while sorrow and sighing will flee away. Bless the Lord! the days of our mourning will soon be ended, we see Jesus—the blessed Jesus—the lowly Jesus—the one who, to procure us perfect freedom, suffered, groaned, and died, but now lives forever more. This Jesus, blessed thought! we shall see, be like him, be with him forever. Our tears then will be wiped away with his own soft hand. All things causing sorrow he will remove, and we enjoy full and perfect satisfaction, for we shall have "awaked" in the likeness of Christ.

Ye weary worn pilgrims, look upward, look forward, remembering when our cup is bitterest, when our burden is heaviest, that in a very little time the days of our mourning will be ended, the long, dark night of sadness will soon be past, and the morning of joy, everlasting joy will be upon us. Thank God! there will be "no more pain," "neither sorrow nor crying."

For such a hope as this we ought to "bless the Lord at all times," "and have his praise" continually in our mouths. The apostle says—"It is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning us," that we "rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in everything give thanks." Oh, to have our loins girt, our lamps trimmed and burning, our hearts crying out, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." In this blessed state we are prepared for labor or for rest, for life or for death, no matter what our state, all is well, we are resting, being in harmony with the blessed will of God.

May we look, long, watch, and pray for the coming of our Lord and Savior. Blessed event! thrice blessed! I long to share it, when sickness, pain, and death are feared and felt no more. Thank the Lord! Amen.

REDEEM THE TIME.

We have but a few brief days in which to prepare for eternity; just a fragment from the hereafter, wherein we see enough of joy and sorrow to assist us in making our choice and preparation for the unknown future. Unknown? Nay, not wholly unknown; for our Creator has been pleased to give a revelation of his will, some realization of our responsibility. He has shown to us that without holiness no man can see God, and this he has commanded us to seek.

Shall we then let these moments pass, seeking our own pleasure in gratifying "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, the pride of life?" Let us rather lay up our treasures "where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." Turn aside from the broad way that leads through the earth's treasure-house, and seek to enter the King's highway—the narrow way that leads to the city of our God. Seek to enter: "Seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." Seek not for an hour and then turn away. Knock not till the flesh is weary, and then give o'er and turn aside to seek the things that please the natural heart. Turn not from knocking at the narrow gate to pass light words with the thoughtless throng, but let your conversation be of heaven and heavenly things. . . .

Our Father sometimes tries the faith and zeal of his children by calling forth our utmost energy; and then, to reveal our weakness and his strength, the gate swings open in an unlooked-for manner, and we enter "the way, and the truth, and the life," to walk therein with joy while we trust him for grace and strength to do his will. Having left the ways of the world—having been cleansed from all unholy tempers and desires, how careful, how watchful ought we to be lest the enemy get an advantage of us and undo the Master's work. . . .

The swift flight of time, the uncertainty of life, the old, the middle-aged, the young, who are passing away daily, all these remind us that our work must soon end. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."

Through God's grace, may our hands be strong to do his will; our feet swift to run the race he has set before us; our lips eager to speak of his goodness and mercy to a fallen race; our ears ready to catch the sound of such things, and only such, as God would have us hear; our eyes ever watchful in seeking opportunities for good, and diligent in reading the emblems of his love, as written in the volume of nature and revealed in the book of life.—Guide to Holiness.

"IS IT TRUE?"

C. MENDENHALL.

Is it true that Jesus is coming a second time? He has said—"If I go away I will come again." He has gone, therefore he must come a second time "without sin unto salvation."

What a cheering, comforting promise this has been to the saints for these long centuries which have passed; and now, Is it true, that we are upon the eve of a new era, which is about to dawn upon us, resplendent with consummated hopes and realized anticipations? Yes, fellow traveler, it is indeed true, for the Lord hath spoken it by his prophets, by signs in the past and the present, in the earth, air, sky, water, and in all created things animate and inanimate, which proclaim the truth of Scripture and the certainty of our "blessed hope."

Is it true that many are ignorant of this fact? Yes, for they say all things continue as from the beginning, some scoff, some explain away, some are willingly ignorant, some fear to think of it, a few look forward with joyful trusting hearts to the great day of God Almighty.

Reader, do you belong to the latter class, to the "little flock?" If so, use your faculties, energies, and talents, in doing the work of the Lord heartily.

Is it true that we may know all these things, may not be scoffers, may do much in His name and yet be lost? Yes, for it is not all who say "Lord, Lord," it is not all whose names are recorded in our church books, who are of Israel.

Let us see to it that our names are written in the "Lamb's book of life," that we belong to the church triumphant, that we are Christ's, that we shall be saved in that great day.

Is it true that we love Jesus, and consequently love his appearing? If so, take fresh courage, pray for more faith, knowing that nothing short of complete trust and submission to the will of God in Christ Jesus, can survive the dangers of these times.

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain."

Trust not in wisdom, in names, theories or men, but in Jesus, though the way seems dark, and the workings of God at times hard to understand. Cowper beautifully says—

God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain"

God help us to make our lives a consummation of our profession, and may we in theory and practice ever inquire—Is it true? asking God to help us by his spirit, and to guide us by his wisdom into the way of all truth, building our hopes on him who has said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life."

THE JOY OF FAITH.

SAM'L WARD in Treasure Book of Devotional Reading

Put off now thy sackcloth and ashes; put on the garments of joy and gladness. Let not white raiment be wanting, nor oil to thy head. Live, I say; live to-day, live to-morrow; live, O christian, forever. Not for one of a few days, but all the days of thy life. This thou mayest if thou wilt learn to use thy faith, not as men use wedding apparel, for a week or two after marriage, and then lay it by for high and solemn days only. This, indeed, is the fashion of believers at their first conversion, being justified, to have peace and joy in believing the remission of their sins, and for awhile to be glad of their estate; but then to neglect and terminate the use of faith, as if it had now done all it could or should; except till they relapse again into some foul sin, then to recover life again, using it as strong waters for swoons and heart-qualms only, not being acquainted with a daily improvement of it; which ought to be as constant and continual as is the use of fire and water, of salt, or bread, or wine, or whatever is more ordinary and necessary than another, such as no part of our lives many will be without. Serves faith for entrance and beginnings, and not for proceedings and increasings?

O that this did as clearly appear to the world in the matter of faith, as it does in other habits, graces, gifts, virtues, and good things whatsoever, that the principal beauty and benefit of them consist in use, fruition and action, not the bare possession; yea, the very increase and perfection of them! Use limbs and have limbs; the more thou doest the more thou mayest. The oftener the liberal man gives alms, and does good turns, the more his liberality grows and shines. Use will breed perfectness, and through disuse things perish and come to nothing; as the ploughshare, laid up, rusts and consumes; employed, it glisters, doth good, and lasts the longer. Let any man diligently and thoroughly improve, and great will be his faith, and great the joy he will bring in.

This is my sweet experience.—Com. by E. S. WILLARD.

Haddonfield, N. J., Aug. 31st, 1874.

PATIENCE.

Be patient toward all men. The cold hammer fashions the hot iron. He who would govern others, must first learn to govern himself. Passion is blind. Cool, deliberate and at the same time energetic action, makes itself felt in every department of life.

Be patient toward your brethren. Some good men are slow to see into things. They want to do right, but it takes them a good while to determine what is required of them. Every member of the body of Christ is not an eye. To get out of patience with these dull ones, will not help either them or you. Give them time, and they will do their duty. We all have our infirmities. Let us bear with each other.

Be patient toward sinners. Think how long God bore with you. We should bear with wicked men while God bears with them. Our patience under provocation may be the very means which the Spirit will use to strike them under conviction. But if we get out of patience with them, they can have no confidence in our religion. They will say they are as well off as we are, and so they will harden themselves in sin.

To be patient, you must have patience. The stream cannot flow if the fountain is dry. The fruit will not grow without the tree. Resolutions alone, against impatience will not answer. You must pray as well as resolve. Ask God, not merely to help you in your outward conduct, but to give you the inward grace. Unless you get that, you will fail as you have failed before. Be determined on victory in this respect. No matter how much money a man may make by day, he will never grow rich if he is robbed of all at night. Impatience is the thief that steals your grace, and leaves you weak and faint, notwithstanding the many times God has blessed you with the outpouring of the Spirit. The soul never permanently grows in grace, unless it is hedged about with patience. Remember that peace, and gentleness, and long-suffering, are as truly fruits of the Spirit as love and joy.—Earnest Christian.

"I WILL NOT GIVE THEE UP."

M. S. HORNE.

Give thee up, dear Savior, never!
Thou Redeemer of my soul,
I am thine, and thine forever,
While eternal ages roll.
Give thee up, who died to save me,
Loved me with undying love,
And who for me still art pleading
At his Father's throne above!

Now as memory backward wanders
O'er the way my feet have trod,
Filled with seen and unseen dangers,
I know there's none like thee, my God.
Ah! yes, I know I love thee truly,
My treasure is in heaven above;
Naught on earth can separate me
From the blessing of thy love.

Perfect love my glad heart filling,
Drives away all slavish fear;
Peace like a river ever flowing,
Fills my soul with rapture;
And in every grief or trial
His kind hand upholds me still,
While I bow in meek submission,
Resolved to do his holy will.

How blessed to know our sins forgiven,
In Jesus' blood all washed away;
In sweet content I wait the dawning
Of the long expected day,
When thou wilt to earth returning,
Gather all who for thee wait,
Safe into the heavenly garner,
Entering through the pearly gate.

Rochester, N H.

NOT THE MAN FOR ME NOW.

In my early christian life, says President Finney, I heard a Methodist Bishop report a case that made a deep impression on my mind. He said there was, in his neighborhood, a gentleman of fortune, who was a gay, agreeable man, and gave himself much to various field sports and other amusements. He used to associate much with his pastor, and often invite him to dinner, and accompany him in his sport and pleasure-seeking excursions of various kinds. The minister cheerfully complied with these requests, and a friendship grew up between the pastor and his parishioner, that grew into an intimacy which continued till the last sickness of this gay and wealthy man.

When the wife of this worldling was apprised that her husband could live but a short time, she was much alarmed for his salvation, and tenderly inquired if she should not call in their minister to converse and pray with him. He feelingly replied, "No, my dear; he is not the man for me to see now. He was my companion, as you know, in worldly sports and pleasure-seeking; he loved good dinners and a jolly time. I then enjoyed his society, and found him a pleasant companion. But I see now that I never had any real confidence in the efficacy of his prayers. I am now a dying man, and need the instruction and prayers of somebody that can prevail with God. We have been much together; but our pastor has never been in serious earnest with me about the salvation of my soul, and he is not the man to help me now."

The wife was greatly affected, and said, "What shall I do then?" He replied, "My coachman, Tom, is a pious man. I have often overheard him pray when about the barn or stables, and his prayers have always struck me as being sincere and earnest. I never heard any foolishness from him. He has always been honest and earnest as a christian man. Call him." Tom was called, and came within the door, dropping his hat, and looking tenderly and compassionately at his dying masterr The dying man put forth his hand, saying, "Come here, Tom. Take my hand. Tom, can you pray for your dying master?" Tom poured out his soul in earnest prayer.

I cannot remember the name of this bishop it was so long ago; but the story I well remember as an illustration of the mistake into which many professors and some ministers fall, supposing that we recommend religion to the unconverted by mingling with them in their pleasures and their running after amusements. I have seen many illustrations of this mistake.—Guide to Holiness.

WILL IT PAY?

Will what pay? Will it pay to serve the Lord and choose for our associates the people of God? Yes, it will, even while in the mortal state. My mind has just been called to this question by the following incident.

When at the campmeeting in Springfield, our youngest son Edward was there part of the time, and evidently felt the kind and gentle influence of God's convincing Spirit; but when others were flocking to the place for the anxious, he could not be persuaded to come out before the world, a penitent sinner desiring pardon; it cost too much; it would not pay.

He finally left the meeting and started for home; but before he left, he promised Sr. Robinson and others that he would seek Jesus, and left us, evidently with a troubled conscience. I felt that for him to return to his former associates would be like going into an iceberg. After he had started for the cars, I kneeled beside a trunk in our tent and told the Lord I wanted him saved in the kingdom; that we had done all we could, and asked the Lord to follow him by his Holy Spirit, and save him in his own way, and use just such means as would accomplish that end, and if needful disturb his peace until he found it in Jesus.

He came home, and of course mingled with his former associates, and grieved away the gentle Spirit, and to-day was brought home from a ball play in a wagon, with one leg broken, and bruised. His mother does not murmur in the least, for she feels sure it is the Lord's call after him. She tells him the Lord wants him in the kingdom. Before the surgeon came, as he lay on the bed groaning with pain, one of his companions endeavoring to console him uttered an oath. He said to him, "Oh! don't swear!"

Now, dear praying ones, who attended that campmeeting, and had such good hearts imbued with the spirit of the Master, and labored so faithfully in his cause, will you permit us to have an interest in your prayers for this youth of nineteen years, that this dispensation of Providence may be so improved by him, that the great day of the Lord may find his name written in the Lamb's book of life, and that he may meet you all in the kingdom, with your children, safe from temptation to all evil?

Our prayer still is, Lord, take from him all worldly enjoyments until he shall seek first an interest in the kingdom of God. We shall have to sit up nights to take care of him while he has the pain to bear, but if this is the way God has chosen to bring him to Jesus, we think it will richly pay. He is associated with the Good Templars, many of whom come to comfort him, for which we thank them; but this plank is too short to reach across the fearful chasm sin has made between us and God. Thanks to Jesus, he has opened up a way, and offers a passport written in his own blood.

Edward has learned that we are writing this communication, and expresses an earnest wish to be remembered in your prayers, and I know he will be. What a Life Insurance company this is! S. B. COLTON.

Bloomfield, Conn., Aug. 29th.

THE CALL TO PREACH.—From an inward purifying, and steadfast abiding under it, springs a lively operative desire for the good of others. All the faithful are not called to the public ministry; but whoever are, are called to minister of that which they have tasted and handled spiritually. The outward modes of worship are various; but wherever any are true ministers of Jesus Christ, it is from the operations of his Spirit upon their hearts, first purifying them, and thus giving them a just sense of the condition of others.

This truth was early fixed in my mind; and I was taught to watch the pure opening, and to take heed, lest while I was standing to speak, my own will should get uppermost, and cause me to utter words from worldly wisdom, and depart from the channel of the true gospel ministry.—John Woolman.

RECEIVE every inward and outward trouble, every disappointment, pain, uneasiness, darkness, temptation, and desolation, with both thy hands, as a true opportunity and blessed occasion of dying to self, and entering into a fuller fellowship with thy self-denying Savior, and then every kind of trial and distress will become the blessed day of thy prosperity.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE COLD WATER BOY.

Behold a table with boiled turkey and ham, with vegetables nicely cooked, and gravies rich and juicy. There sits a father at its head, and the mother opposite; there is no lack of good humor, and merry jests give spice to conversation. There are children too; a boy of ten, and a little girl of eight. They listen intelligently and attentively to the remarks of parents and guests, look up into the faces of one and another with interest. Behold! decanters are brought in; glasses are filled, and one and another sip the sparkling wine.

"Excellent!" exclaimed one, smacking his lips. "Fine," echoed another, with glass refilled.

"Shall I drink wine with you, my lad?" asked one of the gentlemen, bowing to the boy.

"Is not your glass filled, William?" asked the father. "John, fill William's glass," turning to the servant.

Slowly did William turn up his glass to receive the rosy liquor.

"Drink with the gentleman, my dear," whispered the mother, encouragingly.

The boy blushed and cast down his eyes, but he obeyed not. Was he frightened? Was he diffident?

"My son, did you not hear Mr. Black address you?" said the father, quickly and sternly. "Drink with him, William."

Accustomed to obey his father's slightest wish, the boy's lip quivered, but he obeyed not. In a moment, raising his eyes, and looking his father full in the face, he said manfully:

"Father, I am a soldier in the Cold Water Army, and I can't drink wine."

"Brave boy!" exclaimed one of the gentlemen, setting down his glass.

"The Cold Water Army must conquer if every soldier stands his ground as well," said anothe, regarding William with great respect.

"We will excuse you, my son," said the father, in a softened voice, and though they sat long at the table, his was not again raised to his lips. There it stood, untasted and full. Yes, the cold water ranks can boast of other soldiers as brave as William.

Stand firm, my boys; let no one beat you from your ground. Be up and doing! Intemperance is still stealing about, seeking whom it may devour. Break his weapons, destroy his engines, give him no quarter.

"COLD WATER! COLD WATER!"

Let this shout of triumph be heard all over the land, from city and hamlet, from mountain and glen. "Cold water and victory!"—Selected.

TRUE REPENTANCE.

There was a wicked boy once who would leave his father's home and go to sea. His kind father tried to persuade him not to go; but he was not to be kept away from sea. The reason was he thought that he might be wicked when he got away from his father, and there would be nobody to reprove him. His weeping father gave him a Bible as he went away, and begged him to read it.

The boy went away, and became very wicked and very profane. But God saw him. There was a great storm upon the ocean. The ship could not stand against it. She struck upon the rocks in the dark night. It was a time of great distress; and for a few moments there was the noise of the captain giving his orders, the howling of the storm, the cries of the poor sailors and passengers, who expected every moment to be drowned. Then this wicked boy wished himself at home. But he had but a few moments; for a great wave came and lifted the ship up high, and then came down upon another rock, and she was shivered in a thousand pieces. Every soul on board was drowned except this wicked boy. By the mercy of God, he was washed and carried by the waves upon a great rock, so that he could creep up, much bruised, and almost dead.

In the morning he was seen sitting on the rock, with a book in his hand. It was his Bible—the only thing, except his own life, which had been saved from the wreck. He opened it, and there, on the first leaf, was the hand-writing of his father! He thought of the goodness of that father, and of his own ingratitude, and he wept. Again he opened the book, and on every page was the hand-writing of his heavenly Father; and again he wept at the remembrance of his sins against God. His heart was broken: he was truly penitent; and from that hour to this he has lived as a christian. He is now the commander of a large ship, and seems to make it his great business to honor Jesus Christ. This was true repentance.—Exchange.

BE GOOD TO YOUR MOTHER.—If any one must wait for a favor, or for necessary comforts, do not let it be her, for she will not be with you many years. When she is dead and gone, it will be an increasing sorrow if you have neglected to give her those little loving attentions which would have smoothed her pathway and cheered her last days.—Temperance Blessing.

TOBACCO A SOLACE.

It is said by some one arguing that tobacco is a useful luxury, that "it is a solace to two hundred million men." We should like to know if men need this solace more than women. Do they not need it decidedly less? Generally, men are more occupied with business, have their own choice of professions, the largest wages, the best places, the advantages of more travel, and all the universities and colleges in which to train their minds so they may be active thinkers and intelligent citizens. Women, on the other hand, have their sphere of labor more or less cramped. Their bodies are less powerfully developed, and there are more of them on the invalid list; they go from home less, and see less of the world; they have less pay, less opportunity for school culture, less interest in business and politics, and a good deal more drudgery in housekeeping, the care of children, etc., etc.

Why would not the cigar, and the pipe, and chewing solace two hundred million women, quite as well as that number of men? Would mankind object? Would any body object? Is there any less propriety in women—ladies, mothers—going about with a cigar in their mouths than men? We believe not, for there is no propriety or decency in either case. If two hundred million women were addicted to the use of tobacco, as are this number of men, it would be a sad thing for the future of our race. The comparative absence in vices of this sort among women, is what keeps up a tolerable degree of stamina in a small portion of those born.

But, after all, is it not very humiliating to admit that two hundred million men need to be solaced daily, and almost hourly, by the use of tobacco? Is there such an amount of grief, anxiety, or distress among men as to require any solace at all, except what comes from sleep, recreation, good food, and enough to do? We believe not.—Herald of Health.

CLIMATE.—In choosing a climate for invalids and old or feeble persons, the following hints may prove useful:

1. The temperature should be mild, and not very changeable.
2. The air should be moist, but not wet, and pure; that is, free from dust, smoke, and malarias.
3. The air should not be subject to great commotions, as hurricanes, and high winds, particularly from cold regions.
4. Plenty of sunshine is important, that the invalid may spend a great deal of time in the open air.
5. If the scenery is beautiful, it is much more likely to benefit invalids than when it is the reverse.
6. Other things being equal, a dry soil is greatly to be preferred to a moist one. Moist soils are always colder than dry ones, and a cold soil chills the feet, producing colds, sore throats, and lung diseases, while a warm soil relieves these complaints.—Herald of Health.

DOSING AND DRUGGING.—There are few greater evils in the community than this; yet nothing is more common. A family of children cannot be truly healthy where the table or the medicine-chest is filled with vials of paregoric, Godfrey's cordial, soothing syrup, etc., and with papers of sulphur, epsom salts, magnesia, etc. You might as well expect to find new boots and shoes, of the best style and workmanship, in a cobbler's shop, where no business is done but to repair old ones, as to meet with children whose cheeks glow with health, where this paraphernalia and practice abound. Almost every good mother will be dabbling more or less, with these things. But they always do harm, and frequently destroy what would otherwise be a good constitution. "Touch not, taste not, handle not," should be written upon all medicines, unless you are sick, and then, as John Wesley used to say, "send for a godly physician," or the best one you know of.—Good Health.

QUIET IN A SICK ROOM.—In country places, when a neighbor is taken sick all the friends go to see him and offer to render assistance. They often do great harm by entering into conversation with the invalid, or other members of the family; no matter if they occupy another room and only whisper, the sick person is sensitive and hears it, and must suffer, no matter how slow he is to complain. The sick often need rest and quiet more than any treatment, and ought to have it. Never, when with the sick, do any thing in haste, nor appear excited and anxious, for invalids notice these things and are pained by them. Never read to a sick person when he is too ill to read himself.—Ex.

TREATMENT OF NETTLE RASH.—Children and often adults are subject to a disease of the skin, which may extend over nearly the entire body, resembling the appearance caused by nettles. The treatment is very simple, and consists in keeping the patient cool and quiet, giving but little food, and that of a cooling character, and an occasional tepid bath.—Ex.

The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

WAITING.

We are waiting for the dawning
Of the bright and blessed day,
When the darksome night of sorrow
Shall have vanished far away;
When forever with the Savior,
Far beyond the gloom of tears,
We shall swell the song of worship
Through the everlasting years.

We are looking at the brightness—
See, it shineth from afar—
Of the clear and joyous beaming
Of the "bright and morning star."
Through the dark gray mists of morning
Do we see its glorious light;
Soon shall flee the darkest shadow
Of this sad and weary night.

A PICTURE OF CHRIST'S COMING.

One leading feature of the second coming of Christ, which is particularly pressed upon our notice in holy writ, is the suddenness and unexpectedness of its occurrence to the world at large. It is to come as a thief in the night upon mankind in general, although not upon those watchful christians who "are not in darkness, that that day should overtake them unawares." It is to take the world by surprise. One cannot help often trying to conceive what a sharp, abrupt and awful shock the busy movements of the busy world shall then experience.

The day before Christ comes shall see everything going on as usual. Over one half the globe, its inhabitants shall be eating and drinking, buying and selling, marrying and giving in marriage; the merchant in the market-place calculating his gains; the scholar at his desk poring over the sacred page; the reapers in the field plying their harvest task. And in some quiet churchyard a group shall have gathered round the last grave, the coffin shall have been lowered down into it, and the sexton have grasped the shovel to cover up the dead. Over the other half of the globe, its inhabitants shall have laid themselves down to rest, and the merchant shall be dreaming of the gains that to-morrow's sales are to realize; and the politician shall be dreaming of the measure that to-morrow in the senate-house he is to propose, of the oration that to-morrow he is to deliver; and bright visions of many happy days to come shall be haunting many a youthful slumberer's fancy; and the ball-room and the banquet-room shall have hung out their glittering lights and spread their inviting tables, and the smile, and the dance, the ringing laugh, and the jovial song, shall all be there.

Just at such a time, without a herald sent, or note of warning given, further than the midnight cry of Second Advent preaching, the Son of man shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God. The trumpet-call of heaven shall span at once the globe, and be heard the same moment at either pole. At its summons the million sleepers of the earth shall start up from their tranquil repose, their dreamings of earthly to-morrows all cut short. A shivering terror, like that which filled Belshazzar's hall, shall run through the ball-room and the banquet-room, and the jest half uttered, the song half sung, they shall stare upon one another then in pale affright. In the busy market-place the buyer shall forget the price he offered—the seller the price he asked. At his desk the pen shall drop from the writer's hand. The reapers shall fling the gathered sheaves from their hands. And in that quiet churchyard the group around the grave shall be convulsed with wonder as the coffin bursts and the dead man springs to life and stands up by their sides.

For that trumpet-call of heaven shall do more than waken all the sleeping, and arrest all the living inhabitants of the globe. It shall go where sound never went before; it shall do what sound never did. It shall pierce the stony monument; it shall penetrate the grassy mound; far down through many a fathom of the ebbing waters it shall make its way; over the deep bed of ocean shall it roll; and the sea shall give up at once all the righteous dead that are in it, and earth the holy dead that are there; for only those who are blessed and holy have part in this "first resurrection" before the millennium. Rev. 20: 6. And in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, by the forthgoing of one fiat of the Omnipotent over the whole assemblage of the watchful, living saints, or wise virgins, with which the still vaster congregation of the dead saints is to mingle,—over all the bodies of these one hundred and forty-four thousand watchful, living christians, a change shall pass that shall make them like to the new bodies of the raised saints; and all shall be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air. . . . And the vast company as it rises from the earth shall meet another, perhaps vaster company, accompanying the Lord in his descent from the highest heaven into the "air," or aerial heavens. For Michael and his angels shall come at Christ's advent to fight against the devil, the prince of the power of the air, and his angels.—Signs of Our Times.

"PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD."

J. G. ORCHARD.

Dear reader, whatever be your cast or condition, or whatever your station or lot in this fleeting life of mortality, I, as an earnest disciple of my blessed Master and adorable Redeemer, whom I strive to serve in sincerity and in truth, do hereby come to you with a sweet, but solemn message, and an earnest request, calling upon you in His name, and as the most important duty that you owe to and can perform for yourself, to lay aside all worldly cares and annoyances, and come with me for a few moments,—those most precious moments that are so fast fleeting by, and hastening us to some awful crisis,—what that crisis is my faith is firmly fixed that it is the awfully momentous event for which we are warned to prepare in the heading of this article;—then come with me and let us seriously and solemnly consider the consummation of all things earthly, unto which you and I are so inevitably hastening; and soberly reflect upon what would be our condition should that awful crisis burst forth upon our astonished minds to-day, or before we should see the rising of another sun.

Oh! let us carefully and prayerfully consider these vastly important questions in private, and in the innermost depths of our hearts, and notice the evidence which we have for believing that time at hand, "even at our doors," which must forever seal our destiny.

In the first place, let us see what evidence we can find in the Scriptures of its near approach. Let us note carefully the warning given through the inspired apostle in his second letter to Timothy, 3rd chapter; and especially the 12th and 13th verses; and then look around us on all sides and see if we cannot discern a literal and complete fulfillment of these divine predictions.

See the enormous increase of crime, and all kinds of evil doing, which has been so faithfully told us is to be in these last days of peril; also the great amount of cold formality, and the multitudes of professors "who are at ease in Zion," "overcharged, and surfeited with the cares, riches, and pleasures of this life, virtually saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming." The accumulative evidence of history, together with the world "putting far away the evil day," and the signs fulfilling the prophetic periods closing, and the downfall of papal Rome, ending earth's fourth universal kingdom, which is to be succeeded by "the everlasting kingdom," all proclaim with thunder tones the day of vengeance hastens, and earth's redemption is near!

What did our blessed Redeemer tell us in regard to the visible signs of the last days that should mark this world's history? "As it was in the days of Noah . . . so shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Passing events, such as the abnormal state of too many professed christians, together with the great prevalence and increase of crime in almost every department of life; the worldly-minded following more and more after their own lusts, and the great masses of worshipers at the shrine of corruptible gold, all testify and are living witnesses of this extraordinary divine testimony.

Then, again, shall we know when that day is near? "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." Matt. 24, Luke 21. Still again, "And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke." "And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, famine, and pestilences, and fearful sights, and great signs shall there be from heaven." "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars." "The sun shall be turned into darkness, . . . before that great and notable day of the Lord come." Says the Revelator—"And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind." Rev. 6.

In the second place, what are the facts of history? On the nineteenth day of May, 1780, the sun was supernaturally darkened, aud, as stated by an eye-witness, "It was midnight darkness at noonday." The next event was the falling of the stars, which took place on the night of Nov. 13th, 1833; and, as stated, "was the greatest exhibition of celestial fireworks ever witnessed."

And now, what more in the way of evidence is required? Enough! these few facts in themselves are overwhelming, for it is said "the wise shall understand." And now, dear reader, I appeal to your head and heart, is it not a most "reasonable service' to consecrate your life to Him who gave it, much less, to "prepare to meet thy God."

Salem, Oregon.

I THINK I know some christian people who seem to have taken Christianity in small spots; it never seems to be right through them. They are quickened; the heart is quickened—let us hope so—but the head does not seem quickened much. They do not study the Scriptures, and they believe what anybody tells them. Or if their brain is quickened, they are very dull at heart. Or their tongues appear to be quickened, but they have no hand for practical work; they have never been quickened about the region of the purse. But let us have it all over. Let us have such a divine baptism—excuse my translation of baptism—that we shall be immersed in it entirely, submerged in the Divine Spirit, and altogether absorbed in the life of Christ. We must have such men, if we would have life more abundantly.—Spurgeon.

THE BEST GIFT—A PURE HEART.

The apostle said to his Corinthian brethren—"Covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet show I you a more excellent way." Without doubt this more excellent way is the way of holiness. It was love, pure and perfect love, which the apostle insisted was superior, infinitely so, to every other gift.

Speaking in another language was a great gift; so was prophesying; so, also, was the power to work miracles; but all these gifts might be received and exercised without any special spiritual advantage to the receiver; indeed, the person might not be one whit better. But not so with the gift of a pure heart. This, and this only, makes those who receive it blest. Love is of God, and they who receive it are brought into fellowship with God.

This is the universal and perpetual gift. Only a few, even in apostolic times, were distinguished with these other gifts; and even those who had them could not always exercise them. Paul could not always work miracles. But he could always have a pure heart, and have it filled with pure love. So can every disciple of Jesus. This gift makes us partakers of the divine nature; fits us fully for the trials of life; qualifies us for a home in the kingdom, and gives us a prelibation—foretaste of its joys on earth.

Dear reader, have you this great gift? If not, will you have it? Those who want it receive it. If a man wants money, will he not try to get it? So, if you strive for this great, best gift, it shall be yours. You think it beyond your reach. You are mistaken. So might have said that poor old man at the pool—"I cannot get off my bed, much less lift and carry it home"; but behold him, as the voice of Jesus bids him rise; he stands upright, and gathers up his tattered couch, puts it on his shoulder, and walks away whole and happy.

Do you say, Oh, but if Jesus would but speak to me as he did to him, I also should be made whole, and my heart be pure. He does, but you are doubting. If it were not for your doubting, the work could be done. You doubt, first, whether Christ is speaking to you; and second, whether he can make an immediate cure.

Doubt no more. Let your faith take hold of his power and willingness now. It may be that you are unwilling to take the results—the responsibilities and crosses of this great salvation. Of course, then, you cannot enjoy it. May you see the importance of being willing to "esteem the reproach of Christ," as well as the honor and glory of his kingdom. Let the words of the poet be yours—

"The world's no longer mine;
Forsaken all for thee;
Henceforth, my Lord, I'm only thine
To all eternity.

I bathe my weary breast
In love's unfathomed sea,
The storm of passion's lulled to rest
To all eternity.

All worldly happiness
Has now no charms for me,
In Christ I have the sum of bliss
To all eternity.

What glories I behold,
My risen Lord, in thee!
And still new glories shall unfold,
To all eternity."

The Lord bless you all with "the best gift"—a pure heart.—Sel. by G. E. Merrill, Worcester, Mass.

IN, BUT NOT OF THE WORLD.

As long as we are of the world there is nothing that can satisfy us. The splendors of wealth may soothe the senses, the praise of the world allay the soul's thirst for a time, but sad the failure of all these, they leave the soul naked, and poor, and miserable, and wretched. How many long for something, they know not what; how many have moments, weary and lonely beyond expression, not knowing that it is Jesus they are lonely for, and folly they are weary of. But let our poor hearts once catch the sweetness of heavenly rest, once try the blest companionship of our elder brother, Jesus; once feel the fulness of his tender love, then we realize the difference between the old creature and his longings, and the new creature in Christ and his restful satisfaction. For only his love and smile can impart that rest of soul all mankind are aiming to find. Then, though in the world but not of it, all that comes to us is satisfactory, because we know God knows best. Whatever is his will, becomes our privilege to accept. Sorrow may smite us, but knowing that a loving hand hath thus chastened us for our good, it becomes our song or thanksgiving to say, "Thy will be done."

Whatever crosses our path, whether we understand it or not, we know in whom we trust, and remembering that these lives are but our schooldays, out of whose misty problems shall be worked answers of beautiful proportions and progressions by our faithful Master, Jesus, we can, even joyfully, look up and see the rainbow of promise spanning all the clouds and darkness. For experience in the divine life teaches that to all God's creatures, whether regenerated or not, God sends nothing that is not intended for our good. His design, from the beginning of our existence to its close, is to bring us to himself and save us, and having provided a way, he further sends those means which will bring us surest and quickest to his great heart.

As he knows best the tendencies of each heart, the temptations and peculiarities of each soul, so in his wisdom he suits to each their lessons. If mankind naturally turned God-ward, easily hated sin, and loved good, think ye he would willingly deal out so much to keep over? No, verily. Our God loves us. Oh that the world would realize this more! and 'tis this very same tender, yearning love, and not an accident of time and circumstances that bears to us many a tempestuous wave, because the human heart will not seek the ark of safety until overwhelmed in the billows. But how often, in the midst of the fiercest fires, God's love to the soul beams with brighter, sweeter glory—too often. We cannot take in its fulness until we see it through the mists of sorrow. Must we, then, be sorrow-stricken and grief-laden? Yes, until the seeds, and needs, and roots of sin having caught a gale from heaven's pure atmosphere, and sickened by their own poisonous breath, shall wither away and be utterly uprooted; until the soul, swept by storm, and purified by fire shall acknowledge Christ as Lord, and King, and Master of our whole being, body, soul and spirit; until the satisfying righteousness of God shall be our armor and our aim, and if as co-workers with him, by yielding to all his judgments, and furthering all his designs, we shall daily gather from his rich inexhaustible nature, and he shall gather from ours, that which of all else is most acceptable to him—a meek, submissive spirit, emptied of self, filled with Jesus, in the world, but not of the world.

MAGNIFY THY CALLING.

J. M. BUCKLIN.

Immeasurably above and beyond earth's highest places and proudest honors, to whom the stores of her treasure houses, and the accumulations of her multitudes all stand for nought; whose ears are deaf to the trumpet-roll of arms; whose eyes are blind to the outstretched hand of worldly gain, stand the proclaimers of God's will to man. The statesman's "bays" and the warriors "laurel-wreath" soon wither and die; the gold of Ophir and the diamonds of Golconda glitter for a season and are lost; but unto them whose beautiful feet are bearers of the glad tidings of redemption and salvation to a ruined world; winners of souls unto the love of the blessed Christ, there is promised a crown of unfading lustre; aye, it shall shine as the stars forever and ever.

How far-reaching should be the knowledge, how great the wisdom, how perfect the purity of these messengers of God, these teachers and expounders of his great plan for the eternal salvation of all our race that will come unto them and be saved;—patterns of piety; ensamples of holy living; teaching by precept and example (for the christian way is not accomplished at one mighty bound, but 'tis step by step, from day to day, steadily, patiently, that the goal is gained), servants of the great Jèhovah, whose name is above all others in heaven or earth, set apart as teachers and explainers of his laws concerning us. How thorough should be the preparation; how complete the adaptation for this elevated position; the responsibilities of which are so ponderous; the influences so widely telling upon all humanity; the reward—such glory, honors and delights as earth's fairest dreams of bliss will never realize—and these for an unending eternity.

I was a listener a few days since to a conversation where one of the parties stated that he thought uneducated ministers, "college preachers" as he termed them, and also institutions of learning for the education of preachers, very unscriptural, and proved his position (evidently to his own satisfaction) from the fact that the disciples of Jesus were chosen from among rude and ignorant fishermen, arguing that God's ministsrs were taken from the field or workshop;—the more illiterate the better suited to the purpose, and shaped and fitted for the work through his immediate agency. The reason for such a choice in the case of the disciples is very evident, and that it is no precedent for ministers of modern times seems equally apparent. The divine origin of Christ, and his claim to the Messiahship, were to be maintained and proven by the signs and miracles that should accompany the doings of his chosen followers, and these ignorant men were set apart as fit instruments for this work, thus showing more fully the hand of God, and no human wisdom or device; and the very fact that the ministrations of preachers of the present day are attended by wonderful manifestations as were those of the apostles, proves conclusively that when the Bible was given to us as the complete will of God, we were to rely upon its teachings without the aid of miracles to establish our faith, and God's ministers were to avail themselves of all the ways and means in their power, to prepare and make themselves worthy guides and teachers—for, God does nothing for us that we can do for ourselves.

Why do we consider it necessary to expend so much time, money, labor both mental and physical, to prepare ourselves for any of the avocations and professions relating to temporal matters, and leave this noblest, loftiest, grandest calling of all, ordained by the great I Am; pertaining to the eternal weal or woe of all generations past or to come, open to any who may declare themselves "called?" We are all called to be servants of God in one way or another, but let us be very sure of the way. If we were to send a missionary to a foreign land where people were strangers to the teachings of the Bible, we should expect him, by careful and patient study, to acquire a knowledge of the language of that people. And why should we not expect God to give him the knowledge without any effort of his own, when we allow illiterate and uncultured men to occupy the place of teachers and preachers in the pulpits of our own country, leaving it to a Divine power to make them worthy the place?

We often hear ministers prefacing their sermons with this remark:—Since I came, the Lord has directed my mind to such a portion of his word—when the sequel clearly proves that if the Lord directed in the commencement, his aid was speedily withdrawn. There is an idea prevalent among certain people—very good christian people too—that it is the promptings of the wicked carnal heart which creates a desire to listen to the preaching of eloquent men; learned ministers; college preachers—or not—as you please; men who have thought, and studied, and labored to prove themselves workmen acknowledged by the great Head of the church (and yet no D. D.'s of the present day; no Spurgeon, Hall, or Cumming can equal in beauty, eloquence, forcefulness and elegance the writings of David, Isaiah, Paul, and the beloved John), and they urge that all such cravings be quickly stifled, and that it does not matter so much about the preaching; God is able to do the work, and convert sinners without any preacher. Certainly! we do not question his ability to accomplish this end without human aid of any sort. But God does not depart from his own appointed way, and the course marked out for the salvation of man is—saved by faith—faith the result of hearing the word—and that he would desire the most efficient agents for the promotion of this work; instruments that will glorify Him and honor His cause is no matter of question. Men know what they have learned, and if they have learned but little, it is a natural consequence that they know but little.

The Scriptural assertion that "the wisdom of this world is foolishness before God," is sometimes quoted as a reason why professed christians—and especially ministers, should confine the range of their mental powers within the narrow limits furnished by the few arbitrary doctrines which make up their idea of religion.

What is the wisdom of this world? Shall we understand this to mean that to be learned,—educated in the arts and sciences,—that geology, philosophy, astronomy; a knowledge of the means and laws by which his works are formed and governed;—to be versed in the ancient tongues in which his will is first given to man—is foolishness before Him? or, is it not the craft, hypocrisy, and policy which gains position, wealth, and honors, "making friends of the mammon of unrighteousness?"

It is a generally received idea that the converts made, the numbers added to the church are the sign of the preacher's acceptance, the seal of Divine recognition. But does not everybody know that converts have been made to doctrines which time has proven untrue, and also when the promulgators have been revealed to be indeed "wolves in sheep's clothing?" One might with equal reasonableness urge that because Brigham Young's converts are myriads, he is the accepted servant of God. Ought we not rather to judge the faithfulness of the laborer by the state of the vineyard? when the influence of the minister is such as to elevate and strengthen the church in her higher life; when the elements of society are refined and ennobled by his high-toned example; when grossness, selfishness, and worldly-mindedness are in the minority among the members of his charge, while the loftier attributes reign supreme,—shall we not know of a surety that he is an approved and accepted servant, who doeth his Master's will?

Oh! may the standard-bearer of our Prince so magnify his exalted calling that his banner shall wave in triumph from the top-most tower of fair Zion's walls,—his name be honored, his cause glorified, his Bride ready for her Lord.

THE FRUITS OF THE CARNAL MIND.

L. C. KERY.

"For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."—ROM. 8: 6.

It is very simple to understand the fruits of the carnal mind from this scripture, for the apostle says that its tendency is death and not life. Then to be carnally minded is to be sinful, and "the wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6: 23); and whoever is carnally minded is a sinner and an enemy of God. "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be."

Mr. Webster describes the word carnal thus:—"Latin, carnalis, from caro, carnis, flesh." (1) Pertaining to flesh; fleshly; sensual. (2) Given to sensual indulgence; lustful, lecherous, libidinous." This is perfectly in accordance with the teachings of Paul in the definition of the word carnal.

Carnal is the same as fleshly; and the fruits or "works of the flesh are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like." Gal. 5: 19–21. These are the fruits and characteristics of the carnal mind; and to be carnally minded is to be so mentally subjected to Satan as to cherish and practice all these vices; and when the mind is thus filled, there is not the least room in it for the works of the Spirit, which are, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Gal. 5: 22, 23.

The mind that can be thus characterized truly cannot be in any way set apart to the work of God while it is in this state. How is such a mind to love the appearing of Christ and set a near date for that event to transpire? Can such a carnally-minded person study ardently to know when the Lord Jesus will appear? Is it a carnal mind, then, that will love the Lord so as to be wholly engaged in his work and to put before an ungodly world the evidences of his immediate advent? No; we think this is not the sort of work for carnal minds to be engaged in, but the opposite, to fight against the coming of Christ, fearing that he will come to trouble them before the time; hence their object in prolonging it.

"To be spiritually minded is life and peace." Life to whom; the world? No, life to the person who has the spiritual mind, for the fruit of the Spirit is life. For whom is this peace; the world? No, for the spiritually-minded." Otherwise, if it is life and peace to the world and not to the individual (if to not produce peace to the world is specific of a carnal mind), then Christ was carnally minded, for he said in Luke 12: 51, "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you nay, but rather division."

Again. "They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit." What are the things of the flesh? are they things pertaining to the Lord and his kingdom? are these things fleshly, or are they spiritual? Is the looking for the Lord a fleshly (or carnal) expectation, or is it a spiritual desire? A sane mind would say, it is the latter. And the looking for the coming of Christ is further taught by John as a purifying hope that purifies a man.

We think that the fleshly mind would try to bolster up something to militate against the immediate coming of the Lord, rather than to favor it. No, the fleshly and carnal mind does not want to hear about the very soon coming of the Lord, but wants to prolong the time as much as possible; not to "hasten unto" it, but from it.

SCIENCE AND REVELATION.

H. S WARLEIGH.

It is a subject of the deepest regret, that science and revelation were ever put into conflict with each other. The advocates of the one have looked upon the other with suspicion and distrust; and they consequently have not reaped that mutual advantage which they might have gained, and which each is fitted to bestow upon the other. Both parties have too frequently spoken and acted as if they were unmistakably right, and others, who differed from them, were most certainly wrong. This has often had the effect of hindering that progress which otherwise might have been attained; for can we help supposing that the one party possesses something in which the other may be deficient? And if so, would it not be wise, that each, in his turn, should become the teacher and the taught? True indeed science is, in herself, perfect; and if we could but listen to her voice, we should implicitly rely on her utterances; but her admirers have not always viewed her as she is; for not only have those who lived in different ages contradicted each other, but they also have done this who have lived at the same time, aud have had access to the same alleged fact. The very progress aimed at by human investigations cannot be attained without admitting and correcting former errors; yet at each step of progress, which often has turned out a digress, our faith has been demanded; and it has been expected that we should relinquish everything said to be opposed to the alleged progress. If divines hesitated, they were deemed narrow-minded, and as opposed to advancement in scientific inquiry; whereas they refused only to give up what, to them, was certain, for what they found to vary in almost every writer, and what, though affirmed on alleged scientific grounds by one eminent man, was contradicted on the same alleged scientific grounds by another equally eminent.

When science is perfectly known and correctly taught; when no more discoveries can be made, nor further progress possible; when no other modifications, or adjustments will be required; and when there will be a likelihood that the faith demanded to-day will not have to be resigned to-morrow; then, if it should really be found that the perfected science is undoubtedly inconsistent with revelation, then, and not till then, can it be reasonably required that any should give up his faith in the divine inspiration of the Bible.

But we repeat of the Bible what we have said of science. The book is perfect in itself; but divines do not perfectly apprehend it, nor correctly teach it on many points; and much mischief is the result. For, as the teachers of science identify their utterances with science herself, so the teachers of the Bible identify their opinions with the Bible itself; as if in either case they were necessarily the same. Both are to a great extent mistaken; and thus it comes to pass, that what with imperfect views of science on the one hand, and erroneous views of the Bible on the other, the two heaven-originated sources of knowledge, are brought into conflict; or rather are supposed to be so brought. They are however in perfect harmony; and the divergence exists only in our imperfection, and the wryness of mental sight with respect to our several classes of study. Should then the advocates, on either side, be apparently eager to catch at and exaggerate any supposed weak point; forgetting that weakness on either side, is a common calamity? But should they not rather be anxious and ready to receive and reciprocate any kind office of help or correction?

If any human deductions from what is thought to be science, should stand opposed to revelation, it will surely be a wise and sober course to pause awhile, and inquire if alleged facts are facts; and if they are, then to examine whether a deduction drawn from them be just and logical; and not hurry to a conclusion that the Bible must be necessary wrong, and the deduction necessarily and absolutely right. Or, if any equally human deduction be drawn from the Bible, which seems opposed to science, let not theologians at once conclude that science must necessarily be wrong; but rather let them inquire, whether they may not have put themselves in an unsuitable stand-point; and so may have obtained erroneous views of the sacred text; or whether it may not be possible that the ancient Jewish literati were not the only ones who have been led astray by the tradition of the elders. Is it not certain that our knowledge of the Bible is as imperfect as our knowledge of science? for is it not far more frequently possessed than read? and are they not the comparative few, even among its professed teachers, who read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest it? and do not the many substitute reading about the Bible, for the study of the Bible itself? When theologians have a perfect comprehension of this book; and when they fully and correctly teach it, then will they be in a position to pronounce with certainty what scientific deduction is, and what is not, inconsistent with the divinely revealed oracles. Till then, it may be, that any particular deduction is inconsistent only with the traditional views of theologians; not in reality with the great rule of our faith, lexically and grammatically understood.

What we want to show is, that there may be a wide difference between the subjects of natural science, and our knowledge of them; and between the Bible and our knowledge of it; and that when it is alleged that the two are in conflict, it is not the subjects themselves, but our imperfect, and perhaps erroneous, apprehensions of them. One thing is certain, that words of scorn will not advance the truth on either side; and they indicate rather the inability of the speaker than the strength of his cause. Both parties are the offspring of the same Father; let them labor as brethren, in the several departments of truth which they have espoused; and make their discoveries advance the happiness and welfare of the human family.—Rainbow.

CLOSED DOORS.

C. S. BRANCH.

"Then said Jesus again unto them, I go my way, and ye shall seek me and shall die in your sins; whither I go ye cannot come." JOHN 8: 21.

These words of Jesus have been on my mind for a long time; they are words which ought to cause the most thoughtless to stop and consider. They were spoken to the Jews of old, but they are applicable to you and me to-day. "You shall die in your sins; "whither I go ye cannot come." My impenitent friends, do you ever think if you die in your sins where Jesus is you can never go?

"When I say unto the wicked, thou shalt surely die, and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life, the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand." This passage is of great import to the christian as well as to the sinner. It should awaken a lively interest in every professed follower of Jesus in behalf of the ungodly. My christian brother, do you ever warn the wicked from his wicked way to save his life? If not, know you of a surety God in judgment will require his blood at your hands.

There is a great responsibility attached to the christian life. We are not only to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling, but we are to warn the ungodly; exhort, pray, and plead with them in the name and for the sake of Jesus, who bought them with his most precious blood.

Yes, sinner, these lines are penned for you. We lift the warning voice in your ears. Except you break off your sins by righteousness, and accept of Jesus in this day of grace, you will die in your sins, and where Jesus is you can never go. What a thought! forever lost! to have your life cut off when it ought to begin! The same wicked man shall die in his iniquity. Sinner! you will realize what that means when you see the Judge sitting on the great white throne. Then you will regret with a heart of sorrow and a soul of anguish, that when you were warned from your wicked way you did not turn from your wickedness and live. Why will you choose death when life is set before you? Jesus has died and revived, that you might have life and have it more abundantly. Hear my warning voice. Turn ye from your wicked way.

"Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive." "For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God. Wherefore turn yourselves and live ye." Ezek. 18: 27, 32. O come, sinner, embrace the hope of the gospel. Accept now, proffered mercy. Come, come to Jesus. "And the Spirit and the Bride say come, and let him that heareth say come, and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely" (Rev. 22: 17), the water of life that bubbles up so freely, and runs so invitingly. Your day of grace may of a sudden cease, and you die in your sins, and where Jesus is you can never go.

Sinner, this may be the last time I may ever be permitted to raise the warning voice. "Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul." Ezek. 3: 14.

Oh, harden not your heart! grieve not the Holy Spirit that would woo you on to life and immortality, which will be a passport into the kingdom of God! Sinner, I have done my duty. I have cleaned my skirts. I have invited you with all my powers. I have raised the warning voice. Oh turn ye. Why will ye die?

May God help you for his Son's sake to make a wise choice while it is called day, for the night cometh when no man can work.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Sept. 30, 1874.

☞ Take Notice!

☞ All subscriptions for the "CRISIS," issued from this time forward, are at the rate of $2.00 a year, payable IN ADVANCE.

☞ Please Remember!

☞ All remittances to this office, in the form of Drafts, Bank Checks, and Postal Money-Orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ THOSE who send articles for the "CRISIS," should direct them to the "EDITORS OF WORLD'S CRISIS," Boston, Mass.

PLEASE READ, REMEMBER, AND ACT ACCORDINGLY.

The brethren, sisters, friends—one and all—whoever may write to this office, sending articles for insertion in the Crisis, or subscriptions for the same, notices, appointments, reports, or orders for papers, books, tracts, or anything of the kind, will confer a favor and do the right way by directing their letters in either one of the following ways:—

"EDITORS OF WORLD'S CRISIS, Boston, Mass."

"WORLD'S CRISIS, Boston, Mass.," or

GEO. T. ADAMS, Agent, Boston, Mass.

Those who send articles for the Young Pilgrim should address—

"EDITOR YOUNG PILGRIM, Boston, Mass."

In no case address letters on business connected with the papers, or office, to any of the clerks, compositors, or helps in this office.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

The provisions of the new postal law, requiring pre-payment of postage on all news papers, go into operation on the first of January next. After that date all postage (excepting on newspapers within the County in which they are published) will have to be paid at the Office from which the paper is mailed. This change relieves the subscribers from the care and trouble of postage payment, placing it upon the publishers, and making the expense, which is quite an item, to come directly upon the latter.

To meet this (in regard to the Crisis), the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society, at a late meeting, voted to add twenty-five cents to the price of our paper; so that from Jan. 1st, 1875, the World's Crisis will be $2.25 per year in advance. And hereafter, all monies received at this office for advance pay on the Crisis will be credited from Jan. forward at the rate of $2.25 per year. And if any, who have already paid for the paper in advance, are disposed to send us what they would have to pay at their Post Office, under the old law, we will thankfully receive the same; and so of those who receive the Crisis FREE.

A VISIT WEST.

We have made arrangements to visit friends and a few churches in the West this fall. Our object is to see relatives, and do a little good in the cause of Christ, if possible. We shall visit Central Illinois, and Iowa. We expect to spend Sunday, Oct. 4th, at Buchanan, Mich. Shall probably return through Philadelphia and New York. All my appointments East are withdrawn.

CHRIST'S ASCENSION.

Events are important according to their results. Some make a grand display and imposing appearance, but their end is abortive. Others would scarcely attract the attention of a child, but result in weal or woe to multitudes. The scratch of a match by an innocent person might result in the burning of a city, and the destruction of many lives and vast wealth; while the effort of millions to accomplish some national result might end in utter defeat.

Events appear radically different when viewed from different stand-points. If a man, on the common level of society, should emigrate from one part of the earth to another, his departure might cause an affectionate mother to linger and plant a last kiss upon the loved cheek, gazing with emotion unknown to others, as he disappears in the distance, while the busy multitudes would still tread the wheel of anxious toil without stopping to ask, "Has he gone?" His arrrival at his destination would be of no importance to those unaffected by it, but if some truly wedded heart was there, it would be, to that, a jubilee.

We will contemplate the historic scene of Christ's exit from earth to heaven, and his loving disciples, to whom he was dearer than fame or wealth, gazing with intense astonishment as he is borne heavenward by an invisible power.

As he slowly receded in a path that no human foot-print had marked, no earthly locomotion could carry them over the trackless way. Separation was every moment becoming wider and more distressing, and question after question whirled through their minds, and made every nerve quiver to get one more answer, one more sentence of instruction from the lips which had uttered truths more sacred and important to them than had ever sounded in mortal ears. Every eye was immovably fixed upon the face, which, of all others, had been the most lovely and expressive of true friendship and unfailing love. They gazed upon every line and feature of the human form as its distinctness faded in the increasing distance, until the last ray had been reflected from the divine personage, and he had become entirely hidden from their still wondering eyes in a never-to-be-forgotten cloud.

The wonderful scene with all its unnaturalness, the crushing thought of the mysterious and heart-rending separation, and also the thought that their leader and anticipated deliverer had left them a solitary few in the midst of strong and determined enemies, caused a dark and hopeless future to appear before them, which confused their minds and grieved their spirits.

But God had anticipated the experience of the loving disciples, and mercifully provided for the trying emergency. Two angels were dispatched and immediately appeared in heavenly livery before them, with a divine message suited to their fainting hearts, and for the encouragement and hope of Christ's afflicted, disconsolate church, through all ages. They opened their divine lips, and in the name of the mighty Jehovah said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Blessed words! expressing the brightest hope for suffering mortals. What scene, ever witnessed by human eyes, equalled this?

The movements of great men, chief captains and kings, in the transaction of important business, have been celebrated with pompous parades and high-sounding honors, and written on the page of great events; but here is a movement totally eclipsing all others. It is not a state occasion, with a sinful man bearing a sword and costly plumage, seated in a state chariot, and made honorable because he has waded through human blood and crushed the hearts of weeping widows and wailing orphans, but it is the King of kings and Lord of lords, the wonderful Counsellor, the Prince of peace. He is not journeying from one city to another, but following the angelic pathway from earth to heaven.

Look upon ascending humanity in the person of Immanuel, and see the great King's last foot-prints in the dust of Olivet, as he leaves our planet—the place of his poverty, prayers, and anguish, looking back with an undying love, which time nor separation could affect, upon his amazed and disappointed friends, giving them his last parting words—his eternal benediction.

See him as he is borne by an almighty power, through the regions of earth's atmosphere, mid its floating clouds, ascending above its thunderbolts and whirling tempests, sweeping through extended space, escorted by clustering angels shouting acclamations of praise to the mighty Conqueror, as he nears the portals of the celestial mansions. All heaven is stirred with pure delight, as the King eternal approaches the sacred doors, when the voice of the Ruler of worlds sounds the command, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye liftde up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. Who is this king of glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle."

Reader, to comprehend the magnitude of the subject before you, imagine yourself standing at some exalted point in God's creation, viewing the infinite Creator and the immensity and variety of his works, letting the eye fall upon the earth rolling out from his artistic hand, all beautiful and perfected, where in heavenly beauty stands the throne of earth, occupied by the "first man," the progenitor and appointed head of the human race. Everything seen is beautiful, every sound is harmony, every movement order, every creature happy, and upon all, all, perfection is written. But suddenly Satan appears in the midst of earthly glories; rebellion commences—a curtain is drawn, shutting out the heavenly effulgence, order is turned to confusion, harmony to discord, happiness to sorrow, life to death. All is gloom and confusion, wasting and destruction; and, without help from some other world, to be perpetuated on, on, hopelessly, forever.

But hark! rising above the jarring sounds of sin, a sweet voice is heard from heaven. Hope is found for the lost world. The mighty God, its Creator, has undertaken its redemption, and has appointed his Son, the great Immanuel, to execute the divine purpose. In due time the Redeemer appears, a babe in a stable, to the human eye unworthy of the mighty work and holy office he came to fill, but in heaven he was adored and loved, and on earth was, by faith, divinely worshiped. He walked the rugged path of earthly experience to the summit of matured manhood, when he entered his high office at his coronation baptism; from henceforth manifesting the glorious truth, that he had received all power in heaven and in earth, as its mighty Redeemer.

Satan was defeated in his temptations, evil angels were made subject to his authority, all diseases were controlled by his word and touch, the blind saw out of obscurity, the lame leaped as an hart, the winds and waves were controlled by his voice, a fish was ordered to gather tribute for Cæsar, the fig tree died by his rebuke, the dead quivered under the echo of his voice and sprang to life.

He suffered the penalty for sin in his death on the cross. He arose to become the advocate for sinners before his Father in heaven, there to remain until the work of atonement is complete, when he will return to earth (the purchased possession) and complete the work of full and perfect redemption. He will restore the fallen, ruined world to its original purity and perfection, destroying Satan, ending sin, and eradicating the curse forever.

The ascension was, therefore, a grand and important event in earth's changes and final destiny. The divine purpose required its occurrence once, and only once, in all time. "The heavens must receive" him "until the time of restitution of all things," when his glorious returning will be manifested.

Witnesses chosen of God saw the wonderful departing of the Christ whom they had handled with their hands, he having "flesh and bones," which "a spirit hath not."

That event can never be witnessed again. But this same Jesus, just as tangible, just as real, will be seen coming again, when every eye shall see him, and every knee shall bow before him, and every tongue confess to him, that he is the rightful Lord and Ruler of the restored world.

As his parting and absence produced sorrow for his church, so his returning and presence will produce joy. She is waiting for him as he that watcheth for the morning, and devoutly prays, "Oh that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence."

We sometimes, in our lonely sadness, wish for the apostolic privilege of personal association with Jesus, but that was brief, and suddenly ended with his departure, while ours is the happier lot to witness the signs of his speedy returning, and wait with expectant joy his glorious uppearing.

Yes, he is coming as truly as he went away. He is coming to receive his despised and waiting Bride to his eternal embrace. She has prayed and waited long to see humanity wrapped in the garments of divinity, descending from the heavenly seat with a voice sounding sweeter than the music of the first morning of praise, echoing through the vast vaults of earth's charnel house, calling the countless dead to life, folding up the curse and laying it down in oblivion locking up death in eternal silence, capitally executing the murderer of our race and corrupter of our earth, casting our planet into his great furnace, pouring its molten elements into a heavenly mold, bringing out a new earth filled with heavenly glory, peopling it with the saints of the Most High, perfecting the divine government, and eternally eradicating evil from the universe.

Then, Immanuel, we wait almost impatiently to see thy sweet face coming through a cloud, to save our crazy, ruined world. Come speedily, for the night grows dark, and the storm beats piteously! O come! for Satan threatens to destroy thy church by false doctrines and wicked dissensions. Come, and hush in everlasting silence these contentions and wars. Plant the tree of liberty, and let thy people enjoy the rest of thy glorious kingdom. Arise from thy Father's throne and with the angelic escort deecend with thy "heavenly banners," and light up our heavens with the glory of thy train! Roll the note of last day thunders, manifest thy godlike power in the convulsion of nature, and rebuke scoffers for their impious blasphemies and atheism.

O Jesus, Jesus, thou hast a few friends upor the earth who love thee, whose hearts are truly wedded to thine, who believe thy word and trust in thy divinity and power. But the wicked scoff at their faith in thy coming, and hope of the resurrection. Vindicate thy truth, we pray, and quickly appear, to the joy of thy waiting ones.

PURITY.

"First pure, then peaceable."

The Savior says: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Matt. 5: 8. When is a heart pure? When it is undefiled. When an object is defiled it is not pure. We read of "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father." Jas. 1: 27. What defiles a man? Jesus answers:

"And he said, That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man. For from within, out of the heart of men proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, laciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness: all these evil things come from within, and defile the man." Mark 7: 20-23.

Let each examine his heart before this gospel glass presented by the Savior, and see if there are any spots. If any are found, can they be removed? There is but one way known, expressed in the Scriptures as follows: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John 1: 9.

Can we be kept pure? We read, "Keep thyself pure." 1 Tim. 5: 21. By what power can we be kept pure? The Scriptures answer: "We are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." In what way is the keeping power administered? Through the Holy Spirit, by means of which we may become "partakers of the divine nature." This divine nature, imparted by the Holy Spirit, is the means by which the human nature is paralyzed, and the heart kept pure. No one can keep himself pure by his own strength, independent of the Lord. He may avoid outward acts of wickedness, such as swearing, lying, stealing, drunkenness, adultery and debauchery; but cannot keep his heart free from pride, hatred, variance, lasciviousness, covetousness, and such like, because they are the natural fruits of the flesh. The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." As these are the fruits of the Spirit, one must have the Spirit in order to have these fruits. They are the result of abiding in the Vine. The Holy Spirit produces no impure fruit; and where the heart is "filled with the Spirit," it is pure because of the controlling presence and power of God. It is his purity in us, and not our purity, that makes us acceptable in his sight.

Our part is to submit without reserve to him, giving him the fullest possible control of our entire being. Then Christ and the Father can come and take up their abode in us, through the agency of the Holy Spirit, they being in us to will and to do of their good pleasure, keeping the heart pure in thoughts, motives and emotions, and giving power to resist all the outward temptations from the world and Satan. One in this condition is kept in "perfect peace." He is free from all doubts and condemnation. When Satan comes he finds no place in the heart, because it is all occupied by the Spirit of the Lord. In this state, "that wicked one toucheth him not." Satan finds no response from the pure heart to any of his temptations. He may pursue the faithful christian with great earnestness, as he did the Savior forty days in the wilderness, but with no better success. Through the strength of Christ, manifested by the power of the Holy Spirit in the heart, the enemy is defeated in every conflict, and the saint stands unharmed. Glory to the Lord for ever and ever, for the christian armor. It is a complete shield from all the fiery darts of Satan. He who will consent to put on "the whole armor of God" is prepared for any attack that may be made by the powers of darkness. He is more than conqueror. The enemy is not only defeated, but he is routed, and obliged to yield the field, and retire to form new plans to try again at some other time.

When permitted, Christ is abundantly able to keep the heart pure and full of peace in the very fiercest fight from fiendish forces.

DISCUSSION AT PLAINFIELD.

We closed the Plainfield discussion Friday evening, Sept. 18th. The rain prevented a large attendance, but an increasing interest was manifested, the further we advanced in the discussion. Our opponent manifested a commendable degree of honesty, and did the best he could to show that man has a soul that exists in a conscious state between death and the resurrection, but utterly failed to sustain his points. The Bible was all against his position. Some of those who attended the discussion were led to rejoice in the light of the truth more than ever. Doubts were removed, and their minds became settled that there is no consciousness between death and the resurrection. We left Brn. H. F. Carpenter and A. A. Hoyt to continue meetings in the large tent.

M. G.

BE FIRM.

If the christian would win in his conflicts, he must be firm for the right in all cases. The christian system is the most radical one in the world. The word "compromise" is unknown in its vocabulary, when it relates to anything unholy. It makes no bows to sin in any form. As soon as its supporters begin to bend to that which is unchristian, they at the same time commence being shorn of their strength and influence for good, and thus help bring a defeat in the cause of Christ, giving the victory to the enemy. The christian is invincible till he begins to submit to what he knows is not quite right. His first step downward may be short, and all the other steps, till he reaches the lowest degree of iniquity, may be no longer than the first, but many short steps will take one from the top to the bottom of a high eminence. Beware of the first downward step.

We are pleased with the following from an exchange: M. G.

"We rejoice to have fellowship with such, and would seek by all right means, to broaden the sweep of christian sympathy, and cultivate the 'family feeling' among the children of our common Father, the servants of our common Lord. In proportion as the spirit of Christ prevails, the spirit of sectatarian strife subsides; and the nearer christians approach to God, the closer they come to each other. And instead of sacrificing principles for union, it often proves that men are thus enabled to diffuse every truthful principle that they cherish, more widely than ever before. God wills the union of all his children; Satan wills their separation; Christ prays that they may all be one; human leaders seek to divide and scatter and destroy them. But God's will shall yet be done; Christ's prayer shall yet be answered."

"D. V."—A correspondent asks the meaning of "D. V.," as often used by preachers. It is the abbreviation for the Latin Deo Volente, which means, "with God's will."

M. G.

GRASSHOPPER SCOURGE.

It is astonishing to see what can be done by grasshoppers in a short time. Before them the country may look as beautiful as Eden; behind them like a burnt field. Minnesota and Iowa have suffered terribly this year, with a fair prospect that another year may witness sadder results. The following from a western traveler will give some idea of the grasshopper scourge: M. G.

"The grasshoppers have, this year, done more damage in Minnesota than all the Indian raids of the past ten years. They have cleaned out every green thing in southwestern Minnesota and northern Iowa, and have now sent detachments south and west, while a strong reconnoitering force has been pushed as far east as St. Paul, where several hundred millions of hoppers are now busy laying eggs in the gardens, for an early start east next summer. They have about got through eating for this year, and will give the bulk of their time to hatching eggs for the rest of the season. It is estimated that the loss of wheat in Minnesota is worth a million and a quarter dollars, with as much more for other crops. Iowa has suffered about the same, and Nebraska puts her loss at two hundred thousand. Along the line of the Union Pacific railroad in the latter State, to within sixty miles of Omaha, the fields look as if they had been stripped by a terrific hailstorm. The leaves and the tassels and ears of corn have been devoured utterly, and there is left a ghastly array of bare stalks.

A correspondent who saw a descent of grasshoppers on a Nebraska town, describes it as resembling a dense snow storm, the wings of the hoppers being white. In a second after alighting, every blade of grass, shrub, tree and house was so thickly covered with them as to resemble a mass of dark green. The railroad train from which the correspondent saw the strange spectacle was stopped by the accumulation of hoppers on the tracks. As they were crushed by millions they made the rails so slippery that the wheels merely evolved without making any progress. The track had to be swept with brooms. As a general thing the inhabitants make no efforts to check the ravages of the insects. In some cases they have built fires and made smudges, but the results have not been particularly encouraging. Meanwhile the hoppers are not fastidious, and if they can't get one thing, take another, in some cases stripping trees perfectly bare of leaves. The fact that the hoppers have wings renders it more difficult to stop their progress than that of their brethren, the crickets, who are devastating Idaho. A trench dug around a farm will stop these fellows, who tumble in and can't get out.

It is to be hoped that these plagues of insects are not going to come every year. If they do, the drawbacks to the development of the far West will be very seriously increased, and the Indian will have found in the grasshopper a potent ally in resisting the westward march of the white man."

DISCUSSION ON TRINE IMMERSION.

The discussion with Bro. W. C. Thurman, now in progress (Sept. 25th), promises excellent results. This is the fourth evening, and it is to be resumed next Monday evening, 28th. Mystic Hall, in Charlestown, Mass., has been crowded every evening by persons who seem anxious to know the truth in the case. Some, who came doubting, are already satisfied that "trine immersion" is a heresy started by the Marcionites, about A. D. 130, and continued for centuries. This evening, in a very noble manner, Bro. Thurman publicly gave up one of his strongest historic proofs on which he had relied as evidence of "trine baptism," and said he was ashamed that he had used it. Our prayer is that he may be fully delivered from this heresy. When the discussion is over, we propose to give some of the reasons why we believe, without a doubt, that "trine immersion" is an unscriptural heresy.

DISTRICT MEETING REPORT.

The Bolton District Meeting convened, as per appointment in the Crisis, at the Page school-house in Bolton, P. Q., only a few rods from "the old camp-ground," now a cleared field, where the Second Advent Campmeeting was held by Eld. Josiah Litch and others, ending on the 3d of July, 1842; at which many embraced a gospel hope and faith. Only one campmeeting by our people had preceded it, held at Hatley, P. Q., the week before. Some, during our meeting, referred to that loved spot, where they first embraced the Savior and heard the welcome news of his return in glory; still professing strong faith, and joyful hope; while others, who embraced the truth there, lie entombed near, waiting the resurrection call to life eternal.

Short notice, and other causes, rendered the attendance small until Sabbath, when the congregation was good, very attentive, and serious; especially during the observance of the Lord's Supper, with which our meeting closed. All our meetings were characterized by the manifest and felt influence of God's Holy Spirit, giving liberty and effect in preaching, speaking, praise and prayer; and we felt that "our labor was not in vain in the Lord." Ministers present were Elds. John Chapman, A. Tilson, N. Stevens, and C. P. Dow, who all took part in the services of the meeting, and labored in the utmost harmony.

On Saturday afternoon, after the usual address and business—which was in part to appoint Eld. J. Chapman President of the Bolton District, and Eld. A. Tilson its Secretary, a baptismal service was performed in the waters of the beautiful lake Memphremagog, close by, where the writer of this has in years gone by baptized quite a number; and it was especially pleasant to repeat the service. Our next general meeting will be the annual meeting of "The Advent Christian Conference of the Province of Quebec," to convene at "the old meeting-house" in Hatley, P. Q., Wednesday, Oct. 7th, and continue over the Sabbath. (See notice in the Crisis.)

The New Hampshire Conference has appointed two of her best ministers as delegates to that meeting, who will aid us by preaching and brotherly counsel. Eld. E. A. Stockman, lately an eminent minister of the Free-Will Baptist church, and Eld. N. Wheeler, already well and favorably known among us, are the delegates. Let this approaching meeting be remembered in prayer, and well attended by all who can possibly come. Do not let trifles prevent. Come, and report the cause of truth favorably, and let us be co-workers.

REPORT.

As many are inquiring how I am getting along with my mission tent this season, and anxious to hear from me, I will say it has been the best summer of my life. I have been out thirteen weeks; held meetings in five places, nearly every afternoon and evening. From one to three hundred have been present nearly every evening. In every place backsliders have returned to the Lord, and sinners have been converted to the truth. Thousands have heard of Jesus' coming, and the signs that foretell the event. To God be all the glory through Jesus Christ. More particulars at some other time, the Lord willing.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 13th, 1874, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

THE CAUSE IN PHILADELPHIA, TENN.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brethren:—I have just returned from the above mentioned place, where we met Bro. A. M. B. Graham. On Saturday we held a meeting at night. Sunday morning Bro. C. B. Martin (Baptist), and Bro. Graham (Adventist), met to discuss the immortality question. The morning, afternoon and evening were spent in a spirited debate. The disputants both proved to all that they were only striking at the theory, and not the man. I have witnessed several days' debate since I embraced the truth; and I must confess that I have never seen the spirit of Jesus more manifested by the speakers, than these two brethren showed. Bro. Martin is undoubtedly the fairest and most honest debater I have ever heard on that side of the question. By his truly brotherly and christian deportment, he has endeared himself to the hearts of all our Advent friends in that village; although he is bitterly opposed to the soul-sleeping theory. Bro. Graham is a young man, of the Michigan Conference, traveling in the South. He was challenged by Bro. Martin, accepted the proposition, and displayed much zeal and earnestness during the debate.

As may be expected, I am satisfied myself that the truth lost nothing. Bro. M. failed to produce one positive passage proving the immortality of the soul; yet he kindly said he believed that victory was perched on the pole for him. Bro. G. asked repeatedly for a "thus saith the Lord," which was not produced. He then said, he did not claim victory perched anywhere for him, but would leave it to the sound judgment of the audience. He is destined to be a useful man to the cause of truth. He has fine talent, a good education, and is as well posted as any man of his age. He ably defended the truth. I feel that the Lord sent him to this field, just as my hands were filled with work. The discussion will do much good. The people will investigate their Bibles to see who is right.

I feel that many are now, and many more will be, convinced by it that we have the true light on the nature of our race. Many brought their paper and pencil, and carefully took notes, which proved they wanted truth. We have many warm-hearted friends in the village, and we hope soon to see a people here, who will come out from the fashions and follies of the world, and make ready to meet Jesus at his coming. While we have many friends, we are not without opposition among the "rulers." Pray for me.

ONE BAPTISM.

R. MORRILL.

The expression "one baptism," in Eph. 4: 5, is rendered in the Emphatic Diaglott "one immersion." So in the American Bible Union, and other translations. It is well known that the word "baptism" is not a translation, but a transcription of the Greek word baptisma. Why the word baptisma was not translated, probably, was because the translators were adherents of the practice of sprinkling, and they knew it could not be correctly translated by a word that signified sprinkling, so they dropped the final "a" and transcribed it baptism.

We are told that "baptism" in this text means dipping repeatedly. If so, one baptism means one repeated dipping, which expression appears to be a contradiction. But if it means dipping repeatedly in this text, does it not mean the same in every text in which it is found? Certainly, say you. Well, let us test this interpretation.

We read in Matt. 3: 5 and onward—"Then went out to him [John] Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan confessing their sins. But when he saw many of the Pharisess and Sadducees come to his baptism [repeated dipping], he said unto them, O generation of vipers," etc. Then in John 4: 1, 2—"When, therefore, the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized [repeatedly dipped] more disciples than John, (though Jesus himself baptized not but his disciples)." Now for the application.

We are told that all who were baptized by Jesus (for some insist that Jesus himself did baptize) were first baptized by John, when the people came from "Jerusalem, and all Judea" to his baptism, as quoted above. If so, they were dipped repeatedly thrice, according to this new definition of baptism; and if, as we are told, this dipping repeatedly means dipping three times, or "trine immersion," the disciples of Jesus were immersed six times. We are told also that these same disciples had been previously baptized in their fathers when they passed through the Red Sea. See 1 Cor. 10: 1, 2. If so, we must add three immersions more, which make, in all, nine immersions. We repeat it: If baptism means dipping repeatedly, or three times, and the disciples were baptized twice in the days of our Savior, and they had previously been baptized in their fathers when they crossed the Red Sea, we cannot see how we can avoid the conclusion that they were immersed nine times.

But as a nine-fold immersion appears entirely absurd, and as no one ever claimed it for Christian baptism, we seem to be driven back to the old position taken by the best Greek scholars and translators, that Christian baptism means simply immersion, and one baptism means one immersion. Then, if we have been immersed once "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. 28: 19), we know not why we have not received Christian baptism in full.

We will now examine the argument given in favor of the position that the disciples were baptized twice in the days of our Savior. The reasoning is something like this: John baptized all the Jews, and, as under the administration of Jesus none but Jews were baptized, therefore those baptized under Jesus must have been the same that had previously been baptized by John. For proof that John baptized all the Jews, we are referred to Luke 3: 21—"Now when all the people were baptized," etc.

But who were "all the people"? Let verse 7 answer—"Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, O generation of vipers," etc. Do not the "people" referred to mean "the multitude" that came to his baptism? It is true, we read—"Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan" (Matt. 3: 5); but we do not read that all the people of those places went. On the contrary, we learn that the Pharisees and Sadducees did not all go. "He saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism." Matt. 3: 7.

We find, then, by reading all that is said, upon the subject, that many people from Jerusalem, and from all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, came to John and were baptized, but they did not all come, therefore Jesus or his disciples did not necessarily re-baptize those whom John had baptized.

But we are told that some were re-baptized in the days of the apostles.

Well, what were the circumstances? There were certain disciples in Ephesus who were baptized unto John's baptism, but had not so much as heard that there was a Holy Ghost. Acts 19: 1-6. We do not read that John baptized them, and the evidence seems to be that he did not.

1. They were baptized unto John's baptism, but we do not read that John baptized unto his own baptism. "John baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people that they should believe on him that should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus." Acts 19: 4.

2. They had not so much as heard that there was a Holy Ghost. But John told the people that Jesus would baptize them with the Holy Ghost. Matt. 3: 11. So we should naturally suppose they never heard John preach.

We find no evidence, then, that any in the days of our Savior or the apostles, who were properly baptized, were baptized more than once; and none in this day who have not been truly and properly baptized should rest satisfied until they are.

In regard to the disciples being baptized in their fathers in the cloud and in the sea, all we have to say is this: if this was true in their case, it may also be true in our case. Then if our fathers have been baptized, have we not been baptized in them, according to this mode of reasoning? But we do not so understand God's word.

Finally, we are told that in the commission of our Savior to the apostles, in Matt. 28: 19, three immersions are implied: that if one immersion only had been intended, it would have read, "baptizing them in the names of the Father," etc. Let us see. We all understand that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are in perfect union; as much so, to say the least, as three men united in one firm. Well, suppose you are sent to New York to transact business for a firm, which we will call Smith, Allen and Webster. Upon introducing yourself, would you say, I have come to transact business in the names of Smith, Allen, and Webster? No, say you, we would use the singular number.

Very good. Why not then use the singular number in speaking of baptism according to the common form? It would seem to me as improper to say, I baptize in the names of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, as it would to use the plural form in the business transaction referred to; neither do I see any more necessity for three actions, as it is called, in baptism, than for three transactions in said business.

Let us endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, being baptized by one Spirit into one body, having one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God; then, when the Lord our Savior shall appear, he will give us the one everlasting kingdom prepared for all his dear saints.

East Concord, N. H.

BRO. L. C. RICE, Chicago, writes:—"We are having the best meetings at the 'Tabernacle' that we have ever had. The Lord is with his dear children in power, and we contemplate much good in the coming fall and winter. We are quite pleased with the idea of a Conference, which was acted upon by a unanimous vote. May the Lord direct. We are satisfied with the position we have taken on the 'holiness question.' 'Glory to God. There seems to be no feeling of discord among us. It grows more blessed to me every day I live. I never saw such beauty in the subject before as at the present time. Glory to God, Bro. Grant, you never began to tell the story, but thank God you did the best you could. Be of good cheer, and pray much. We are living in perilous times."

SPIRITUALISM NOTHING BUT WITCHCRAFT.—We suppose it will not be conceded but contended that this blessed land of ours, in this nineteenth century, stands for enlightenment and advanced intelligence at the head of the civilized world. Yet here within a few years has been revived the practice of necromancy, or evocation of the dead, to tell us the secrets of the future, a belief in women who have a familiar spirit—that is, witches, though we call them mediums, not witches—and have instituted, under the name spirit, blunderingly called spiritual, a regular system of demon-worship. This revival did not take place among the benighted foreigners settled among us, but with genuine Americans of Protestant lineage, taught to call the Pope Antichrist, or the "Man of Sin," and to denounce Catholicity as a superstition. Spiritism has flourished luxuriantly among our free and enlightened Americans as in a congenial soil, and bids fair to become the national religion.—N. Y. Tablet.

TENT MEETINGS.—The tent meeting at Warner, N. H., closed last night (Sunday, Sept. 27th); and although it was a little rainy, yet we had a good audience. The meeting has been the most peculiar one in character I ever saw. Opposing elements there met; and it needed more than the wisdom of man to know how to conduct the meeting. But glory to God, he gave wisdom to direct, and the meeting resulted in good. Wanderers sought the Lord anew, sinners were convicted of sin, and some resolved to serve the Lord, and started for the kingdom. There is time for another tent meeting this fall. Will some one answer immediately? ENOCH MORRILL.
South Deerfield, N. H.

THE TENT MEETING in Keene is to continue another week, till Sabbath Oct. 4th. The interest is excellent. L. BOUTELL.

From Bro. J. T. Ongley.

After putting up the tent, I went on to Chapmanville, Venango Co., Penn., arriving Aug. 27th. I preached fifteen discourses, and baptized two souls—one lady, that had been a Universalist for a number of years, stating that she considered it far in advance of so-called orthodoxy; but when she heard "the gospel," as the good Lord helped us to proclaim it, it seemed to break up the fountain of her heart. The result was obedience. Praise the Lord. Quite a number of others were almost persuaded to become christians. We hope yet to see them come out on the Lord's side.

Obituaries

SMITH. In Bangor, Me., Sept. 4th, 1874, Eld. Thomas Smith, aged eighty-two years and eight months.

Our dear Bro. Smith was ripe for the kingdom of God, for which he has long waited. He was a native of Cape Cod, Mass. Some sixty years ago he sailed up the Penobscot river, and visited some relatives in Orrington, Me., where he sought and found Christ as his Savior. He traveled the seas as a sailor and shipmaster for several years, then yielded to the call of his Master to become a standard bearer in gospel work. He joined the Methodist itinerant ministry in the Maine conference, and faithfully performed the duties of his office some twenty-four years; during which many hundreds of sinners were converted and united with the church. In 1842, he read Mr. Miller's lectures, and embraced the view that Christ was soon to come, and henceforth preached it. The Lord added his blessing, and ninety souls were converted on his charge in the same year. But refusing to renounce his new views, he was discharged from the church, and entered fully into the work of proclaiming the Second Advent message through Maine and Mass.; which work he did faithfully some twenty-six years, when his mental powers and physical strength were so much impaired, by incessant travel, labor and age, that he was obliged to cease from labor, and take his couch, where he has suffered much for the last three years, until death has closed his sufferings. He sleeps in Jesus a little while, until "the Lord himself shall be revealed from heaven, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God," to raise the dead in Christ. Then we expect to see our faithful brother in immortal life, with hundreds who have been brought to Christ through his ministry. He was a kind, judicious, sympathizing friend, and earnest worker.

His children, a large family, are nearly all dead. His faithful, devoted wife, who has long and patiently waited upon him, is nearly worn out, and is left lonely in old age, with one daughter, to mourn the ravages of death; but not without hope of reunion in the soon coming kingdom of their Redeemer. Eld. S. K. Partridge conducted the services of the funeral, and spoke words of comfort and instruction to the family and friends of our deceased brother. I. C. WELLCOME.

HURD. In Freedom, N. H., Sept. 5th, 1874, of inward cancer, my beloved mother, Mary Jane, wife of John Hurd, aged fifty-three years and fourteen days.

Mother suffered a great deal in her sickness of about six months; at times her distress seemed almost beyond endurance, but through it all she maintained a wonderful spirit of patience, as she remarked a short time prior to her death she was "patiently waiting for deliverance to come." She felt well about dying, and was anxious to depart and be at rest. A peaceful, patient, kind christian mother has thus been taken, and left a husband and two children and very many friends to mourn her departure from us. Our loss is very great, but her gain is beyond comparison.

"I'm sighing for home, where no ties shall be broken,
Where death cannot enter and cause us to mourn;
I sigh for the rest of which prophets have spoken,
The blest restitution,—I long to go home."

CHAS. H. HURD.

ALLEN. In Parsonfield, Me., Sept. 4th, 1874, of consumption, Sr. Mercy, wife of Samuel Allen, aged fifty-three years and one month.

Our sister gave her heart to the Savior in early life, and for the greater portion of the time since, we trust that she has known something of his power to save, although she has not at all times lived as near to Jesus as has been her duty and privileeg, but yet she never got so low in her mind as to lose all hope in Christ. In her last sickness she gave herself anew to the Lord, and felt that he owned her as his child. She left a husband and many friends to mourn her departure, and may they all as one have their trust in that God who will ere long raise the dead, and change the living saints, and give them immortality, eternal life in the world to come.

C. H. HURD.

PATTEE. Fell asleep in the blessed hope, Aug. 28th, 1874, Sr. Maria P. Pattee, aged sixty-two years.

Sr. P. lived a consistent life. She died in the triumphs of faith. She was a believer in the speedy coming of Jesus; also held to keeping the seventh-day Sabbath, until after the discussion of Bro. Grant in California; then, like a consistent christian, she gave it up, and received a great blessing. She now sleeps in Jesus. Words of comfort were spoken by Henry Eastman.

D. EASTMAN.

SMITH. In Marion, N. Y., June 21st, 1874, Sr. Sarah Smith.

She died with a steadfast hope in Jesus and the resurrection in the likeness of Christ, to a glorious immortality, at his second coming, which she had been looking and hoping for many years. She thought she should not sleep long, for he was soon coming. ORPHA ADAMS.

RUMERY. In Bonny Eagle, Me., Aug. 22nd, 1874, Elzora S., daughter of T. J. and Nancy E. Rumery, aged ten years and five months.

Elzora's genial way had won for her the confidence and love of all around; and her light step and cheerful voice will be missed in other homes beside her own. ELD. J. GAY.

HILL. In Biddeford, Me., July 7th, 1874, Willie P., son of Benjamin B. and Angelia Hill, aged five years and five months.

May the God of all comfort bless, guide, and comfort the parents, and other little ones, and bring them all to enjoy the saints' sweet home on the earth renewed. ELD. J. GAY.

CHUTE. In Saco, Me., May 17th, 1874, Nellie F., daughter of Samuel L. and Lucy J. Chute, aged five months and fourteen days.

"A blissful vision of the night
Would oft my happy senses sway,
Of the good Shepherd on the height,
Or climbing up the stony way;
Holding our little lamb asleep,
While like the burden of the sea,
Sounded his voice along the deep,
Saying "Arise, and follow me."

ELD. J. GAY.

COOLBROTH. In Biddeford, Me., July 30th, 1874, Woodbury A., son of George W. and Sarah Coolbroth, aged ten months and four days.

"There my little ones, I know
Round me shall be clinging;
There the loved ones of long ago
With me shall be singing.
Oh, that land I long to see,
Where the weary-hearted
Shall with Christ in glory be,
Never to be parted."

ELD. J. GAY.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LONDON, Sept. 28. A frightful typhoon passed over Hong Kong yesterday. The steamers Leonor and Albay, and eight other vessels were wrecked or foundered, and many are missing. A great number of houses were destroyed, and it is reported that a thousand persons were killed. The damage to property in the city and harbor and surrounding country is immense.

JAPAN. Of the eighty-seven Protestant missionaries now in the Japanese empire, the American Board has sent twenty, the American Presbyterian Board thirteen, the Reformed Church (American) eleven, the Protestant Episcopal, eleven, Methodist Episcopal, ten, and the Baptist Union, six. The missionaries report that Jeddo is the Paris of Japan, and in matters of opinion, controls the empire.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

MONDAY, Sept. 21st, was observed as the day of atonement by the Israelites, as commanded in Leviticus, 23: 26. Early in the morning they assembled in their houses of worship and remained during the whole day. The services performed are very impressive. The departed relatives and friends are vividly remembered in their devotions. At the rising of the stars the service was concluded and the Rabbi gave his blessing to the people.

THE FEAST OF THE TABERNACLES.—Last night (Sept. 25th) the Jewish festival of "Succoth," or Feast of Tabernacles, began and continues for eight days. This is the harvest feast of the Jewish calendar, and owes its origin to the festival usually celebrated by the Israelites when they mainly were an agricultural people inhabiting Palestine. In those days the feast took place after the gathering of the harvest. One of the peculiar rites attendant upon this festival is the erection of small booths adjoining the synagogues, in imitation of the booths or tents inhabited by the Children of Israel in their wanderings for forty years through the desert of Mount Sinai. The religious services in the synagogues are distinguished by the use of palm branches, which are decorated with sprigs of myrtle and willows. No other important event in the Jewish calendar occurs until the feast of "Hannka," which was instituted to commemorate the dedication of the temple at Jerusalem by Judas Maccabeus, after his signal victory over the enemies of his race. This feast commences on the 4th of December next, and continues for seven days.

ASPINWALL, Sept. 12. A serious riot, accompanied with bloodshed, took place here this afternoon between Italians in the Pacific Mail Steamer Company and troops on duty here. One of the soldiers, unarmed, was on the wharf and was chased off by some Italians, who threw stones at him. Arriving at his quarters he reported the case, when an officer and six men went at once to the wharf to arrest those who had made the assault. Reaching the gate of the wharf, the Italians fired two pistol shots at the troops without result, when a volley was fired in return, which mortally wounded one of the Italians and seriously wounded a Jamaican negro. The excitement was intense, and additional troops were sent for to keep the peace. The California passengers who arrived just after the occurrences were placed safely on board the Acapulco. That none were hurt is wonderful, as a volley was fired just outside the gate and directly upon the wharf.

MEXICO. There are now ninety-eight Protestant churches in Mexico. Five years ago, there were less than six.

Notices.

THE next Maine Central Quarterly Meeting will be held at Belgrade Mills, commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 22d, and continue over the following Sunday. A general invitation is given to brethren and sisters to unite with us in preparing a people for the coming of Jesus. Homes provided for all. Call on Charles Austin, Wm. Hersom, C. H. Kelley, Edwin J. Farnham, F. E. Blaisdell. and others. Per order, H. B. SEVEY.

THE EVANGEL TENT is pitched in Jefferson, at the head of the Pond. Meetings will continue as long as thought best. Steamboat connects with Knox and Lincoln R. R. at Bay Bridge Station. H. B. SEVEY.

CONFERENCE AT MELVIN VILLAGE, N. H.—The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Melvin Village, commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 22d, to hold over the following Sabbath. Brn. E. A. Stockman, J. Parsons, and D. Churchill are expected to preach the word. A generous invitation is extended to all. T. W. PIPER.

THE MAINE S. A. C. CONFERENCE will hold its next annual session with the church at Kennebunkport, commencing Tuesday, Oct. 13th. We hope for a good representation, from different parts of the State, at this meeting.
S. K. PARTRIDGE, President.
W. H. MITCHELL, Secretary.

DISCUSSION.—A discussion will commence at Stowe, Vt., evening, Oct. 7th, and continue as long as duty. Question: Do the Scriptures teach that man has a separate entity, called the soul, that exists in a conscious state between the physical, literal death, and resurrection of the body? Affirmative—Steven Skinner, of Mattamora, Ill. Negative—A. A. Hoyt, Plainfield, Vt. A. A. H.

HOOSICK VALLEY CONFERENCE.—The annual meeting of the Hoosick Valley Adv. Chris. Conference will be held with the church in Hoosick, N. Y., commencing Oct. 21st, 1874, and continue over the following Sunday. Particulars hereafter.
A. W. SIBLEY, President.

WESTERN CONFERENCE.—A General Religious Conference for the promotion of piety among believers, and conversion of unbelievers, will be held in the Green Street Tabernacle, Chicago, Ill., commencing on Wednesday, Oct. 21st, at 7½ P. M., and continuing over the following Lord's day. It is expected that Elds. Miles Grant, S. G. Mathewson, and John Couch, from the East, will attend this meeting. We invite all to attend who can come, from far and near, and we hope all who come will bring with them a holy zeal for God and Jesus Christ. We specially invite brethren and sisters in the west to come up to this feast, and help in the cause of Christ. Let there be a general rally. For the church, FRANK BURR, Pastor.

A TWO DAYS MEETING will be held at Darien, Genesee Co., N. Y., commencing Friday evening, Oct. 16th, it being the twelfth Annual Meeting at that place. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend. Teams will be at Croft's Station at three o'clock P. M. to meet the cars from the east, and six o'clock P. M. from the west.
In behalf of the brethren, C. W. LOW.

THE next annual session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held with the church in Bristol, commencing Wednesday evening, Oct. 14th, to continue over the following Lord's day. We hope there will be a general gathering at this meeting.
G. L. WHITE, Secretary.

HAVING supplied the church in East Concord one half of the time during the past year, I intend closing my labors with them on the first Sunday in Nov. After which time I shall be at liberty to labor in places as the way opens.
ENOCH MORRILL, South Deerfield, N. H.

I EXPECT, if the Lord will, to visit Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Mass., and perhaps other States, the coming winter. Any one wishing an appointment, or protracted meeting for their place, please drop me a line on a postal card, with a one cent stamp on it, to Richmond, P. Q., Box 31, and I will endeavor to supply them as far as I can. Our work is almost done, and soon the Lord will cut it short in righteousness. F. M. DRAKE.

WILL the preaching brethren who are passing through Newark, N. J., give us a call? Please drop a note previous, to prevent any conflict, either to Bro. G. W. Libby, 42 Pennington St., or to me, 126 Bank St. WM. SHEPHERD, Sec.

TENT MEETING.—The Mass. Advent Mission Tent will be pitched in Fall River, Mass., Friday, Oct. 9th. Meeting in the evening, at half-past seven o'clock; also afternoons and evenings, over two Sabbaths, and as much longer as duty may demand. This is a new field. Our dependence is upon the Lord and his people for help at this meeting. Come, dearly beloved in this region, do not fail to be at this meeting, with a mind to work. You can preach, pray, or sing; and each of these is wanted. Come, then, and help.

Our last two tent meetings have reached the people wonderfully. I have seen nothing like it for ten years. There is an ear to hear, and the Spirit of the Lord accompanies the word.

I would say to those who have pledges unpaid, and all who can help us now, they will aid us greatly by sending their remittances to Bro. C. Goodrich, our Treasurer, Crisis office, Boston, Mass. Do this at once if you can. The Lord bless and help now. L. BOUTELL.

DEARLY BELOVED, the Mass. Mission Tent is in the field. We have no funds in the treasury. Shall it stop, while the calls are being made upon us, for lack of means? L. BOUTELL.

N. H. ADV. CHRIS. CONFERENCE.—The Lord willing, the fourth quarterly session of the N. H. Advent Christian Conference will be held with the church at So. Sutton, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 1st, to hold over the following Sabbath. An invitation is extended to all to come to the feast. Our preaching brethren especially are requested to come—all who can labor together for the salvation of the perishing. May the Lord greatly bless.
T. W. PIPER, G. W. BROWN, D. W. DAVIS, } Committee.

THOSE wishing the New Hampshire Mission Tent to be pitched in their vicinity, will please write immediately to ENOCH MORRILL, South Deerfield, N. H., Chairman of Tent Committee.

GROVE MEETING.—There will be a meeting in a grove at Vitum Hill, in Sandwich, N. H., on Saturday, Oct. 3d. We extend a cordial invitation to all the good people, far and near, to meet with us, and assist us in the work of the Master. If the weather should be cold or rainy, the meetings will be held in the Vitum school-house.
E. S. MOULTON.

THE first quarterly meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Traer, Tama Co., commencing Oct. 9th, to continue over the following Sunday. All of like precious faith are invited to attend, and the ministers who desire the union of christians. E. A. MARSH, Secretary.

DISCUSSION.—There will be a discussion held in Waverly, N. Y., commencing Monday evening, Oct. 12th, between Dr. J. G. Fish, affirmative, and Eld. J. W. Taylor, negative, of the following resulution: "Resolved, that the Bible teaches the immortality of man, and his continued intercourse with the inhabitants of earth after the death of the natural body." The discussion is to continue five evenings. J. W. T.

THE ADV. CHRIS. CONFERENCE of the Province of Quebec will (D. V.) hold its next annual session at the "old meeting-house" in Hatley, P. Q., on Wednesday, October 7th, and continue over the Sabbath. All of like precious faith, who are in sympathy with its objects and work, as set forth in its Constitution, will, we trust, make a special effort to attend, and unite in its business deliberations, and religious exercises of preaching, prayer, and song; which, we trust, will be so scriptural, so wisely and kindly performed, as to result in permanent good to the cause of our coming Savior. Especially we would say, let all the ministerial and lay members in the several districts, as far as is possible, arrange to attend. Come early, and come prepared to stay through the meeting. Let due reports, either written or verbal, be forthcoming from the entire field. Let isolated brethren and sisters who feel an interest, and cannot attend, write epistles to be read in conference, and direct to the President, or Secretary, at Ayres Flat. Please attend to this in good season. Christian union is strength; let us have it in action, feeling, and fact. Christian hospitality and kindness will be shown to all who come, by the resident brethren and friends, as on former occasions. Come praying for and expecting good.
CHAS. P. DOW, President.
E. C. ORCUTT, Secretary.

OHIO CONFERENCE.—The annual session of the Ohio State Conference will be held, the Lord willing, with the church in Norwalk, Huron Co., O., commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 15th, and continue over the following Sabbath. This will be an important meeting for the cause of truth in this State. Let every A. C. Church in the State appoint delegates without fail; also let all who love the appearing of our Lord in glory, and the resurrection of the dead, come. All are welcome, and will be provided for.
E. MCCULLOCH, President.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The next quarterly meeting of the first Christian Church of Wayland and Loon Lake, called the Church of God, will be held at Wallace, N. Y., commencing Oct. 3d, at one o'clock P. M., and hold over the following Sunday. A cordial invitation is extended to all to come in the fulness of the gospel of Christ.
For the church, E. C. COWLES, Pastor.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting held in Salisbury, N. H., at the Union meeting-house, commencing Friday, Nov. 27th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands.
C. H. FLETCHER.
D. F. LEAVITT.

THE Second Quarterly Meeting for the Eastern District of Wisconsin A. C. Conference will be held with the church at Fairfield, Sauk Co., Wis., commencing in the evening of Oct. 23d, and holding over the Lord's day. Every church in the district is requested to send one or more delegates. We hope to see a large gathering. Come in the name of the Lord, and to work for him.
E. P. GRAVES.

THE Lord willing, I will commence meetings at Cowdersport, Potter Co., Pa., Oct. 1st, and continue one week. Will attend to baptism.

I may be addressed at the above place for further labor, if desired, or at Warrensville, Lycoming Co., Pa. J. T. ONGLEY.

NOTICE.—As I expect my labors in this section will soon close, I would say I shall be ready to go and preach "the gospel of the kingdom" anywhere, as the Lord may open the way, the coming fall and winter. Any wishing to correspond with me can direct for the present to A. P. MOORE, Linden, Genesee Co., N. Y.

HAVING closed my labors with the church at Clinton, Clinton Co., Iowa, I am now at liberty to go into other fields as the Lord may direct, and brethren and friends may desire. My address until further notice will be Adrian, Mich.
SILAS B. MABEY.

I HAVE resigned my pastoral charge at New Hartford, Iowa, for the present, and removed to Raymond, Iowa. J. W. BURROUGHS.

THE Advent Christian Church of Lewiston, Me., hold their meetings regularly every Sabbath in the Hall over First National Bank, Main St. Prayer and praise meetings at ten o'clock A. M. Preaching at half-past two and half-past six P. M. Also prayer meetings Tuesday and Friday evenings at 7½ o'clock. JARED WHITMAN, Pastor

THAT BOOK.

"History of the Second Advent Message, Doctrine and People."

This work is now ready for all. It contains the history of the rise and progress of the proclamation of the Second Advent of Christ, near at hand, from A. D. 1820 to the present time, in America, Europe, Asia, and Africa; with sketches of the great reformations accompanying it; of many of the chief pioneers associated with it; the great opposers, and their futile efforts to defeat the work. Records of its rapid progress, and of many of the remarkable manifestations of God's guiding hand in the work. Discussions, lectures, sermons, dialogues, and chief points of doctrine advocated by the various classes of believers in the Lord's soon coming.

Records and tables of the prophetic times of Daniel and John, as advocated by the chief Protestant writers, all of whom terminate the periods between 1836 and 1880. A sketch of Luther and his times, compared with ours. His portrait, and portraits of twenty Second Advent pioneers, with discourses on Daniel 2nd, 7th and 8th chapters, illustrated with fine wood cuts, with much other valuable matter.

Our subscribers will be supplied at prices agreed on when orders with cash (and 20 cts. for postage) are received. All who wish to buy the work will be supplied, postpaid, at $3.50. As our object is not to make money, but to have this message and its history go as far and as cheap as possible, we put it as low as we can. We have endeavored to make it a book that all who are really associated in this great movement will buy, and that real inquirers will think best to buy. The book contains 711 octavo pages, neatly bound in cloth, gilt side.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

"NOT AS I WILL."

Blindfolded and alone I stand,
With unknown thresholds on each hand;
The darkness deepens as I grope,
Afraid to fear, afraid to hope;
Yet this one thing I learn to know,
Each day more surely as I go,
That doors are opened, ways are made,
Burdens are lifted or are laid,
By some great law unseen and still,
Unfathomed purpose to fulfill,
"Not as I will."

Blindfolded and alone I wait;
Loss seems too bitter, gain too late;
Too heavy burdens in the load,
And too few helpers on the road;
And joy is weak and grief is strong,
And years and days so long, so long!
Yet this one thing I learn to know,
Each day more surely as I go,
That I am glad the good and ill,
By changeless law are ordered still,
"Not as I will."

"Not as I will": the sound grows sweet,
Each time my lips the words repeat.
"Not as I will": the darkness feels
More safe than light, when this thought steals
Like whispered voice to calm and bless
All unrest and all loveliness.
"Not as I will," because the One
Who loved us first and best has gone
Before us on the road, and still
For us must all his love fulfill,
"Not as we will."

BIBLE BAPTISM.---No. 4.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

Having learned the meaning of the word "baptism" in its purely classical and primary sense, as used by the old Greek writers, we now come to ask what it means when used in the Holy Scriptures? As a classical word, we could only consider it in its original form; but we have to do with it now both in its original and its modern Anglicized form. The classical sense of it is, literally, to immerse any substance in any fluid, and emerge it again; but how is it used in the Bible, and what does it mean when used there? Has it any different signification there, than in other books where anciently or modernly the original word has been used? Is its sense as general when it is found in the Bible, as it is in other works? Is its original meaning set aside for some other one, when it becomes a name of a religious rite, and pertains to the ceremonies of the Christian church? How are we to understand it as we find it in the Sacred Oracles? These are important questions and full of interest to the lovers of truth, and are therefore worthy of candid consideration, especially as there are differences of opinion and practice among the different sects of Christendom, with reference to it. In answer to them, we say that the method of applying or administering it can never be changed from its original and classical meaning. As a word, it was used because of what it meant when used. There are thousands of Greek words that are not in the New Testament,—a part of the words of our list are not there. Such of them were used as the Spirit of God had need of, and the others, as well as others of the multitude of Greek words not used, were omitted.

To take a word and twist it out of its place and away from its meaning, and put a new one to it, is absurd; better by far use some word which already means what is meant by the writer, than torture a word on the rack of human invention, or any other invention, into a confession of meaning that is entirely false to itself, and every thing else.

We have the word "baptism" formed as an English word in the manner we have described; and it is in use because the translators introduced it in that manner into our English version of the Scriptures. By common consent, it is used literally as the name of the ordinance of the church, which, with its verb "baptize," has the same consent to express the administration of that rite. They both must mean precisely what their Greek originals mean, and no one has a right to say that, while the Greek words may mean "to immerse," or "immersion," or "dip," the English words have a modified or more general meaning, or that they mean exactly contrary to the meaning of their originals. Let this, then, stand as a fact. It will be our guide as we proceed with the subject.

As to the proper subjects of baptism, we may here say that, if there is a limit in this matter in the Scriptures, more than in the common classics, then the language must indicate it. That the subjects may be limited to a particular class, and yet the proper form preserved, and the act be valid, no one will attempt to deny; and it may also be true that the action may be lifted in its meaning and importance high above a mere secular sense, and be what it never is when the thing, in form, is done outside of this particular use of it. It is, perhaps, for this reason that the translators have chosen to give us the word transferred, rather than to transfer its meaning, and translate the word. It is doubtless true that, but for them, we should never have had the word in the English language. Jesus gave the commission to "baptize," and designated the subjects and the objects of it; and whenever any immersion or dipping is performed, in conformity to these instructions, the word has its special scriptural use; and hence it has its appropriateness, as the name of that ordinance, and we do not so much blame the translators for the course they have taken with the word, in giving us an English word, which is exclusively in its literal sense the name of a particular ordinance. The greatest care, however, should be taken to understand its meaning, in the Greek and and English, and not to allow the channel of meaning to be clogged, and so stop the free flow of sense from the Greek fountain into the English stream, when the word itself is hewed out of the old stock. If Mr. Webster had taken care on this point, he would not have made such work in defining as to give us this: "BAPTISM—from baptein, to dip in water. The application of water to a person as a religious ordinance"; so changing the very front and face and soul of the word from its acknowledged root sense, to one exactly contrary, and then stoutly asserting what is evidently incorrect, that what in the Greek means the "application of the person to the water," is in the English "the application of the water to the person." If this caution were observed, too, we should not witness the spectacle of so many forms of administering the ordinance, or of claiming to administer it; and all the while claiming the scriptural name as appropriate to the act performed, whether it be by sprinkling, pouring, or immersion.

It is painful to us to know that the ordinance has been most woefully perverted, and that many of the professed churches of Christ have taken to themselves the license to practice what they choose to, and gravely call it baptism; and in the act of administration to authorize their ministers to say, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost"; and then bid the candidate go as a baptized person, with the injunction, never to allow any subjection of himself to any other form with the use of the same formula. It has been claimed that the word is so broad in its meaning that the form is not essential; that the spirit of obedience is only essential, with the satisfying of one's own conscience; but the absurdity of this is apparent; for a word which means a manner of performing, cannot be used to denote a different manner. For example: take the word "run." It can never mean "ride," nor even "walk," but must mean literally what it was intended to mean. For one therefore to say he "ran," when he "rode," would be to tell a falsehood. So to call anything else baptism than what it is really, is as false and unwarrantable.

We are in search of truth in this investigation, and therefore we must insist on the right use of terms; and if they who practice, practice wrongly, we must unqualifiedly dissent from them, even at the peril of being charged with the crime of being bigoted and restricted in our opinions, and uncharitable. The fact that some "sprinkle," and call it "baptism," is no reason why we should endorse their practice; or if they practice even immersion in an unwarranted manner, we are not bound to endorse it, and must not, even at the peril of our good name, or of our lives.

"Baptism" is a Bible theme, and that holy Book must settle the question for us unqualifiedly; and therefore to it we appeal with a fresh interest and earnestness, being content to let the case rest in the Divine testimony; therefore we turn "to the law and to the testimony." As we do so, it may be urged that we should not stir up afresh the question of the form of baptism; but as the sects of Christendom have chosen their methods and settled down to them, we should let them alone and be satisfied, and not attempt to change the practices of large and learned bodies of christians. We may be told that all we can do is to reiterate old arguments and hackneyed phrases, and prolong unnecessary controversy; and men may say, as they already do, that the great, vital doctrines of Christianity, of conversion to God, and faith in Jesus, are the only essential things; that baptism is non-essential, at least, as to its form; that it may be well enough to observe it, or what is called it, but that it should not be a matter of argument, or controversy, as to how it should be done, but all should unite as Christians on the great fundamental doctrines of Christianity on those things without which nothing of rite, or form, or ceremony, can save men, and with which men may be saved, even perhaps although they may never have observed baptism at all. The argument we admit sounds well, and has so much of plausibility about it that it has led some to settle down into the plausible, sophistical conclusion that, no matter what a man does with the ordinances of the gospel, if he is only a Christian, these non-essentials can never save; and so they are content. But we are not. We love truth, and have yet to learn that there are any non-essential truths in the word of God, or any non-essential duties that in character or manner of performance are to be disregarded. Some things may be more important than others, but those "others" may be as essential in their place, and as necessary to be done, and done correctly too in the fear of God.

It is true that the sects of Christendom are divided on this question of the method of performing baptism, but that is no reason why we should be silent. That very division is a proof that there is error in the way of a consolidated union. It is error that divides; truth never does such work, but it unites people; and the more of truth they get, and the less of error, the more united they will be, and the dearer and closer and stronger will their union be. Union on the basis of truth is desirable; on the basis of error it is corrupt and wrong, and to be avoided. Peace is good, but purity is better; and so the great apostle cries out—"First pure, then peaceable"; but as fast as we find a truth common to all christians, that truth should unite them as far as they can unite without the sacrifice of truth; and the rule should be, let the truth unite rather than error divide.

"BE STRONG."---Eph. 6: 10.

J. W. THOMAS.

Physical strength is obtained by exercise. Take a farmer boy who has been accustomed to living in the country, where he has had plenty of exercise, and continued opportunities for the development of muscular strength, and compare him with one who has lived in the city, perhaps employed in the counting room, where he has had scarcely any sunshine, or out of door exercise, and see the difference. One is weak, the other strong. One healthy, the other sickly. One cheerful and smiling, the other peevish and gloomy. One prepared to grapple with the difficulties of life, the other ready to break down under the first disappointment. One qualified for usefulness, the other disqualified for it. And why? One is weak and the other strong.

All men were once babies, weak, tender, helpless babies; but it would be a shocking sight if they were always to remain babies. And yet, there are a large class of people who seem never to get out of the state of babyhood. They are always weak, peevish and helpless.

As it was in the physical, so it is in the spiritual world. All christians were once babes in Christ. Those who have the mightiest intellects, and are qualified for the greatest usefulness, were once weak and ignorant as others; but they grew; they developed; they became strong. It is the rough voyage that makes the good sailor. It is the continued practice that makes the successful laborer.

To-day the church is burdened with spiritual invalids. It takes half the strength of the well ones to care for the sick. This ought not so to be. Go to work, my brother. Go to work, my sister. Do something for God. Exercise, exercise. Get out into the sunshine of Divine love. Working will give you an appetite, and then you can eat "strong meat," and not always need to be fed with "milk." Be strong in the Lord.

— Love all around you, and you will be happy yourself, and make other hearts glad.

EXPERIENCE OF A NATIVE CHINESE MINISTER.

[The precious, lucid experience of the Chinese convert, given in the following sketch, was furnished us by our excellent missionary, Rev. Dr. Sites, who has spent twelve years in successful labors in China. Could other than the Divine Spirit have led this Chinese native, so recently converted, into such a clear, distinct experience of entire sanctification? Would that all ministers in christian lands, who raise questionings in regard to holiness in the present life as a definite blessing, would read and ponder well the experience of this Chinese minister.—EDS.]

Translation of a letter from Rev. Li Yu Mi, presiding Elder of the Hok-Ch'iang District, in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Mission at Foochow, to teachers S. L. Baldwin and Sia Sek Ong.

From your grateful, humble servant, Li Yu Mi. I have never before obtained such complete grace and peace as I now possess. I dare not refrain from speaking; therefore, I joyfully write this letter, to tell my dearly beloved teachers, what a precious time has come to me.

EVIDENCE OF JUSTIFICATION.

Since Bishop Kingsley's visit, at all the annual meetings, we have had the presence of the Holy Spirit, spurring us on to bear witness for the Savior. From that time until now my heart has been gradually growing, and increasing in strength, and I have been enabled to labor carefully day by day, seeking the attainment of purity; but, alas! my inner heart could not obtain perfect peace and safety, because I too often trusted my own wisdom, thinking that hereafter, either by coming to a day of calamity or by being brought into circumstances of difficulty I might be enabled to glorify the Savior. Thus, although I obtained victory over temptation, yet I could not escape from heart trouble and fear, nor could I make any advance toward a holy heart, but I kept waiting for some favorable time, and causing my Savior to be grieved for me.

THE COSTLY GARMENT.

It was like a rich man saying to a poor man, "I, on a former day, gave you a very costly garment; why have you up to this time not put it on?" The poor man answers, "I am a poor man; I dare not wear so fine a garment, for fear men will laugh at me; I had better wait until I become rich before I wear it." The rich man replies, "If you had been rich, there would have been no need of my presenting you the garment, I saw that it was difficult for you to acquire riches; therefore I gave you the garment because I loved you. Why should you be afraid of men's laughing at you, because you are poor? Put on the garment. Don't delay!"

This garment symbolizes the grace of holiness proffered me by my Savior, which I dared not to come forward and exhibit, because my heart inside was deficient, and I was afraid, just like the poor man. For this reason, at all the annual meetings, although I have been profited, I could not obtain perfect joy, because I was not yet made holy, but still waiting for a favorable time.

INSTRUCTED.

At the beginning of this month. when teacher Sia Sek Ong visited us, I heard him say several times, "The way to holiness and peace is very easy;" and he gave evidence that his own heart had already obtained it. I asked him, "How can I obtain it?" He replied, "When a man is seeking the way of holiness, if he trusts to himself, by diligence of heart, to overcome evil desires, and obey the commandments, although he may succeed in rectifying his conduct somewhat, yet it is impossible for him to get rid of fear; how much more will it be so, as he realizes the length of the road which he has to travel, and the insufficiency of the human strength on which he is depending! Is it not better to settle the matter in a moment by coming to the Savior, obtaining grace from his precious fountain, hiding beneath his wings, and thus immediately being fully sanctified and at peace? Do not undervalue the Savior, as if he could not make men perfect, as though there could be that which he cannot do.

SEEKING AND CONSECRATION.

When I heard those words, my heart obtained a little comfort. From that time I prayed in secret, desiring to come to Jesus. From the 6th day, when the teacher returned to Foochow, I daily heard the Lord's voice calling to me, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." During those few days, glad sounds continually entered my ears. I daily took all my doubts and anxieties and griefs and fears and sins to Jesus. On the 11th day, which was the Sabbath, my whole heart was filled with joy, and all sadness was cast out. I am now obeying the Savior's command, and wearing the Lord's garment of holiness with gratitude inexpressible. On the night of the 12th, when Nengchiek was leading the prayer and experience meeting, I said to all the Hok-Ch'iang preachers, "My former weaknesses and griefs and sins and fears, I have brought all to Jesus, and now have obtained innocence, peace, joy, happiness, and holiness, and am sitting at the feast of grace."

HOW THE BLESSING WAS OBTAINED.

I now rejoice to tell my beloved teachers of this precious day. If men ask, "How dare you say that you can so easily obtain so great a blessing?" I at once answer, "Because that which I now can is of the Lord; that which I formerly could not was of man. My obtaining this great joy so easily when I came to the Lord, trusting him, was like the case of a certain sister in the church long ago, who had an issue of blood twelve years, who suffered much trouble and sorrow, and spent all her patrimony upon doctors, seeking peace but not obtaining it; but on a certain day and hour, she could no longer suffer her own body's weakness and deflement to keep her back, but gathering up her little remaining vital energy, she trusted to the touching of one corner of the hem of the Savior's garment with the end of one finger, and immediately was healed and at peace. How much more shall we, hiding our whole selves beneath the Savior's wings, obtain his mercy? This mercy is that which the Savior already has in waiting. Whoever is willing to seize upon a moment of time, and determined to come to Jesus, on him Jesus will certainly bestow his powerful grace, and give him the peace of holiness, beyond what I possess."

Now, there are many many men sitting at the gate of Immanuel's city, and singing "The Hymn of Perfect Holiness." (This is the title in Chinese to the hymn, "Precious Savior, thou hast saved me," etc.)

I do not look upon this grace which I have obtained lightly, reckoning it as an easily bestowed gift, but my whole purpose is to consecrate my entire body, entire soul, entire strength, entire mind, to the Lord's service. I desired my beloved teachers always to pray for me, beseeching the Lord to help me, that my ministry may have the proof of the "signs following" mentioned in the last chapter of Mark.

While the preachers were assembled, from the 12th to the 17th days, during the prayer and experience meetings held in the evenings, several preachers determined to come to the Lord, and find the rest of holiness. For all this I greatly thank the Savior's grace. LI YU MI.

THE HAPPY MAN.

All people want to be happy. But the true christian, the believer in Christ, the converted man, he is the only happy man. Such a one is in an ark. When the last fiery deluge is sweeping over all things on the earth, it shall not come nigh him. He shall be caught up, and borne securely above it all. He is in Christ. Such a one is in a hiding place. When God arises to judge the earth, and men are calling to rocks and mountains to fall upon them and cover them, the everlasting arms shall be thrown around them, and the storm shall pass over his head, he shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. He is in Christ.

Such a one is rich. He has treasures in heaven which cannot be affected by worldly changes. He need not envy the richest merchants and bankers. He has a portion that will endure when bank-notes and sovereigns are worthless things. He has Christ. Such a one is insured. He is ready for any thing that may happen. Nothing can harm him. Banks may break, and governments may be overturned. Famine and pestilence may rage around him. Sickness and sorrow may visit his own fireside. But still he is ready for all, ready for health, ready for disease, ready for tears, ready for joy, ready for poverty, ready for plenty, ready for life, ready for death. He has Christ.—Cuyler.

FAREWELL TO WINNIPESAUKEE AND ALTON CAMP-GROUND.

S. S. BREWER.

Winnipeseuk,* thou beautiful lake,
A last parting look of thee I must take;
Who from the cities delights to retire,
Thy isle-dotted surface can fail to admire.
How brilliant and grand there old Sol's parting ray,
As he lingers serene on the confines of day;
Then bidding farewell in golden twilight,
Thou art beauteous still 'neath the moon's silvery light.

Near Winnipesaukee, in Alton Bay grove,
From the sun's scorching ray I've delighted to rove,
While pensively strolling, and fanned by the breeze,
Midst the tents closed and silent, 'neath the tall shady trees;
Expecting the time, when the saints should return,
And the camp sound with praises and the altar fires burn.
The great gathering came, all was vocal with sound,
Now all have departed again, there is stillness around.

Farewell to thy bowers, thou dear sacred spot,
While memory lingers, thou canst ne'er be forgot;
Nor the loving and loved for their kindness to me;
May God's blessing attend them wherever they be.
How great the transition,—now there is silence profound;
Not a voice breaks the gloom on the old camping ground;
Neither warbling of birds, nor humming of bees,
Now falls on the ear 'neath Alton's tall trees.

The gloom of the autumn again doth appear,
Nature hangs on her mourning—the foliage sere;
Here all that is lovely death blasts with decay,
Like the beauties of nature, they quick flit away.
But faith scans the scene, and exulting doth cry,
The Bridegroom is coming, redemption is nigh;
Lord, grant me a lot on Canaan's bright shore,
With the King in his beauty, to dwell evermore.

To Winnipesaukee and Alton camp-ground,
In strong ties of love I am endearingly bound;
With the great congregation I have sat with delight,
To hear earth's last proclamation by day and by night;
Forever those meetings and warnings are past,
And the time of departure hath reached me at last;
With mingled emotions that words cannot tell,
My dear summer cot farewell, now farewell!

ACCEPTABLE SERVICE.

S. S. CHAMBERLAIN.

We would do all the good possible to all persons, and look only to God for our reward. Let us all possess and constantly manifest the spirit of kindness, gentleness and love. Our time is short, and every passing day brings us nearer to our final rest. Remember that we cannot render acceptable service; we cannot do good in the true sense, unless we are good, i. e., cleansed, and have made ourselves partakers of the blessing we recommend to others. If we are thus "made partakers with the saints," others will "take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus," and will see that we have chosen "that good part," something better than this world can give. Surely, a home in the kingdom will be far better than all that we could have of or from this present world.

How many seem to think that this world is a satisfying portion. But they are not satisfied. Oh! if such could but realize the joys of the redeemed, present and future, would they not loosen their grasp upon this world, and strive to gain an inheritance with them, a treasure in heaven?

"Eternal life we have in view,
While we on our way pursue;
March with us the heavenly road,
Go with us—the way is good.
Leave the world, and seek the Lord;
Read and meditate his word;
Take it for your constant guide;
Go with us—the way is good.
Come, ye aged; come, ye young;
Every nation learn the song;
Sound the Savior's praise abroad;
Go with us—the way is good."

BOLDNESS FOR CHRIST.

One of Frederick the Great's best generals was Hans Joachim von Zieten. He was never ashamed of his faith. Once he declined an invitation to come to his royal master's table, because on that day he wished to present himself at the table of his Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. It was sacrament day. The next time he appeared at the palace, the king, whose infidel tendencies were well known, made use of some profane expressions about the holy communion of the Lord's Supper; and the other guests laughed at the remarks made on the solemn occasion. Zieten shook his gray head solemnly, stood up, saluted the king, and then said, with a firm voice, "Your Majesty knows well that in war I have never feared any danger, and everywhere have boldly risked my life for you and my country. But there is One above us who is greater than you and me—greater than all men; he is the Savior and Redeemer, who has died also for your majesty, and has dearly bought us all with his own blood. This Holy One I can never allow to be mocked or insulted; for on him repose my faith, my comfort, and my hope in life and death. In the power of this faith, your brave army has courageously fought and conquered. If your Majesty undermines this faith, you undermine at the same time the welfare of your State. I salute your Majesty."

This open confession of his Savior by Zieten made a powerful impression on the king. He felt he had been wrong in his attack on the faith of his general, and he was not ashamed to acknowledge it. He gave his hand to Zieten—his right hand, placing the left on the old man's shoulder—and said with emotion, "O, happy Zieten! How I wish I could also believe it! I have the greatest respect for you. This shall never happen again." The king then rose from the table, dismissed his other guests, but said to Zieten, "Come with me into my cabinet."

What passed in that conference, with closed doors, between the great king and his greater general, no one has ever learned; but this we know; that the Lord's own words were verified to Zieten: "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father which is in heaven."—British Workman.

"THE PROGRESS OF SCANDAL."

"My friend advised me, if ever I took a house in a terrace a little way out of town, to be very careful that it was the center one—at least, if I had any regard for my reputation. For I must be well aware that a story never loses by telling; and, consequently, if I lived in the middle of a row of houses, it was very clear the tales which might be circulated to my prejudice would only have half the distance to travel on either side of me, and therefore could only be half as bad by the time they got down to the bottom of the terrace, as the tales that might be circulated of the wretched individuals who had the misfortune to live at either end of it; so that I should be certain to have twice as good a character in the neighborhood as they had.

For instance, I was informed of a lamentable case that actually occurred a short time since.

The servant at No. 1, told the servant at No. 2, that her master expected his old friends, the Bayleys, to pay him a visit shortly; and No. 2 told No. 3 that No. 1 expected to have the Bayleys in the house every day; and that No. 3 told No. 4 that it was all up with No. 1, for they could not keep the bailiffs out. Whereupon No. 4 told No 5 that the officers were after No. 1, and that it was as much as he could do to prevent himself being taken in execution, and that it was nearly killing his poor dear wife. And so it went on increasing and increasing, until it got to No. 32, who confidently assured the last house, No. 33, that the Bow St. officers had taken up the gentleman who lived at No. 1, for killing his poor dear wife with arsenic, and that it was confidently hoped and expected that he would be executed."—Sel. by Mary A. Loomis.

A DAY OF MIRACLES.

"Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee, or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk."—MARK 2: 9.

At the time that Jesus healed the man that was sick of the palsy, there were certain of the scribes present who were reasoning in their hearts, and even said, "Why doth this man thus speak blasphemies? "Who can forgive sins but God only?" Mark 2: 7. But Jesus, to show "that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins," said "to the sick of the palsy, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house."

Here Jesus shows us that it is the same power that forgives sins that healed the man of the palsy; and that the Father had given him this power.

For a few weeks past Jesus has been proving this power in Palmer, Mass., by forgiving the sins of some, and healing them of their wanderings. Yes, thank God, some have put on Christ; "for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." Gal. 3: 27. I have planted ten souls in the likeness of his death in the Chicopee river, and there are others, I trust, will soon go forward and fulfill this blessed commandment, that they may be also in the likeness of his resurrection.

Others are seeking the Savior's love, and the miraculous power, that they also may be children free from all disease which sin has caused. My dear brethren in the Lord, will you pray for this work here in Palmer, as you are closeted with your blessed Master, that he may continue to perform the miracle of the forgiveness of sins in this place, and not here only, but elsewhere.

H. H. TUCKER.

Gems.

— Do what is right in the daytime, and you then can trust in the Lord in the dark night season. The sins of the day give terror by night; for an offended God is terrible.

— While we bless, we cherish love in our hearts, and in doing so we are always the gainers—no matter what the provocation.

— We might beg ourselves rich, if we would but hold out our withered hands to Christ, and learn to sue and seek, ask and knock.

— Be not afraid of men; your Master can mow down his enemies, and make withered hay of fair flowers.

— Contentment makes one happy and rich as the greatest king.

— Base all your actions upon the principle of right. Preserve your integrity of character, and never reckon the cost.

— Things should not be done by halves. If it be right, do it boldly; if it be wrong, leave it undone.

— Some men are like pyramids, very broad where they touch the ground, but grow narrower as they reach the sky.

Don't tell us of to-morrow—
There is much to do to-day,
That can never be accomplished,
If we throw the hours away.
Every moment has its duty—
Who the future can foretell?
Then why put off till to-morrow
What to-day can do as well?

— The discovery of what is true, and the practice of what is good, are the two most important objects of life.

— The atmosphere of meekness mellows the unripe fruit of human pride and haughtiness.

— A man shows himself greater by being capable of owning a fault than by being incapable of committing it.

— Admit no guest into your soul that the faithful watch dog in your bosom barks at.

— What you keep by you, you can change and mend, but words once spoken you can never recall.

— Nothing good comes from error.

MISSIONARY MATTERS.

Touching the question "whether missions pay," the Christian Union points to the economy in the management of missionary societies, so great that in some cases only four per cent. of the receipts go to pay the expenses of administration; and then shows what are some of the fruits of missionary labors. All the principal heathen countries of the world, it affirms, are now penetrated by the missionaries of Christ. Outside the bounds of Christendom there are now four thousand centres of christian teaching, two thousand five hundred Christian congregations, 273,000 Christian church members, 11,000 Christian laborers, and schools in which 600,000 children are being educated into Christian truths. There have been a greater number of conversions in the missionary fields in proportion to the number of laborers, than in the home churches.

The oldest missionary society in this country is the Moravian Society for the propagation of the gospel among the heathen, which recently held its 89th anniversary at Bethlehem, Pa.

Five million dollars are annually expended by Protestant Christians in the evangelization of India.

A mission has been started among the modern Philistines, their missionaries, one a European and two native, having been stationed at Gaza. That city has a population of 16,000, and the whole district about 100,000.

The Methodist Woman's Foreign Missionary Society raised $64,309 and expended $60,836 during 1873.

On March 28, 1874, the Fourth Martyrs' Memorial Church was dedicated in Madagascar. The church is built on the rock Ampamaripana, from which fourteen confessors were thrown, while four were being burnt to death elsewhere on that very day twenty-five years before. About two thousand persons, among them some who had suffered in the persecution, united in this dedication.

THE GREAT REVIVAL IN SCOTLAND.—The remarkable religious revival which has prevailed for some months past in Scotland, continues to extend. During the winter and spring its chief manifestations were in the great cities in which the American evangelists, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, were laboring, particularly Edinburgh and Glasgow. During the summer these gentlemen have been at work in the more northern towns, penetrating as far as the edge of the Highlands, and have been well received. At Edinburgh and Glasgow, in the meantime, the influence of the revival has continued to be felt in a marked degree; the daily mid-day prayer-meeting maintains its interest and continues to attract large numbers, while the meetings for inquirers are also well attended. One hundred young men in Edinburgh and fifty in Glasgow have offered themselves for active service in the cause of religion; some of these are being used in evangelistic work, while others are being trained for labors in one branch or another of the service of the church. Even in places where the American evangelists have not been, the revival has been powerfully felt. A single district in Aberdeenshire reports a thousand converts; and in many of the mining districts a strong impression has been created, and laymen are volunteering from among the miners themselves to carry the good tidings of the gospel among their fellows.

"WELL, sir, it is very hard, but I hope there are better times coming for us." "Well, my friend," I said, "I am afraid you cannot hope for much better times, unless the Lord Jesus comes a second time." "That is just what we hope for," said he. "We do not see there is any chance of deliverance, unless the Lord Jesus comes to establish his kingdom upon earth; and then he will judge the oppressed, and break the oppressors in pieces with an iron rod, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." I was glad my friend had got a song in the night, and was singing about the morning that was coming.—Spurgeon.

HOME AND HEALTH.

WHAT TO DO WITH DAUGHTERS.

Give them a good, substantial, common education. Teach them to cook a good meal of victuals. Teach them how to darn stockings and sew on buttons. Teach them how to make shirts. Teach them how to make bread. Teach them all the mysteries of the kitchen, the dining-room, and the parlor. Teach them that the more one lives within his income the more he will save. Teach them that the further one lives beyond his income the nearer he gets to the poor-house. Teach them to wear calico dresses—and to do it like queens. Teach them that a rosy romp is worth fifty delicate consumptives. Teach them to wear thick, warm shoes. Teach them to foot up store bills. Teach them that God made them in his own image, and that no amount of tight lacing will improve the model. Teach them every day, hard, practical common sense. Teach them self-reliance. Teach them that a good, steady mechanic, without a cent, is worth a dozen oily-pated loafers in broadcloth. Teach them not to have anything to do with intemperate and dissolute young men. Teach them accomplishments—music, painting, drawing—if you have the time and money to do it with. Teach them not to paint and powder. Teach them to say no, and stick to it; yes, and stick to it. Teach them to regard the morals, not the money, of their beaux. Teach them to attend to the essential requisites of a useful life—truth, honesty, uprightness—then at a suitable time to marry. Rely upon it, that upon your teaching depends in great measure the weal or woe of their after-life.—Sel.

SWAPPING TESTAMENTS.

Mr. B—— and his old white mare traveled round the country selling and giving away Bibles; selling to people who could pay, and giving them to those who had nothing to pay with.

One July day Mr. B—— was on his way to one of the poorest neighborhoods in northern New Hampshire, when he looked up and saw a boy coming down the road.

"A ragged-looking fellow that," he thought, "and most likely he cannot read, never was at school, and of course has no Bible, nor ever a penny towards paying for one."

But first impressions are not always correct. The man and the boy met. The man stopped his horse, and politely said "Good day."

"Good day, sir," answered the boy.

A short talk took place. Mr. B—— found the boy had been to school and could read.

"And have you a Testament?" asked the Bible-man.

"The boy put his hand into his old trousers' pocket and drew out half of a worn, torn, dingy Testament. Mr. B—— was taken by glad surprise; for it was about the last thing he was looking for.

"I read it every day, and prize it very much," said the boy.

"Would you not like to swap it for a new one?"

"I should like a whole new one above all things," said the boy; "but yours is worth most, and I have no money to pay the boot."

The gentleman gladly gave him one; indeed, he gave him two, one for school, and one to carry in his pocket for daily use. Never was a boy more surprised and grateful.

"That boy is beginning life right," said the Bible-man as he rode away, thanking God for the pleasant meeting.

Eighteen years after, he happened to pass again that way; and having occasion to speak in the Sabbath school, he told the story, and asked what had become of the lad.

The answer was just what would be expected; for "the boy is father of the man." A thoughtful, earnest, noble boy generally becomes a thoughtfnl, earnest, noble man. What the boy had been among the woods of New Hampshire, he was as a young man in the mills of Massachusetts, and as an older man on the prairie of a western state. He was a man honored and influential wherever he went; and the world was better for his living in it.—Child's Paper.

CAN YOU FIND HIM?

"What book is that?" inquired a merchant of a youth from the country, who, while searching his bag for a letter of rceommendation had let a book fall on the floor.

"My Bible, sir."

"Your Bible! What are you going to do with your Bible here in the city?"

"Read it, sir. I promised my mother I would read it every day; and I shall do it, sir."

The firm tone and flashing eye told the merchant that a boy who loved his Bible after this fashion could be trusted. He was right. Mark the point, and tell me if you can find a Bible-hating boy who can be trusted. Isn't it a fact that boys who hate the Bible are not trustworthy? If, therefore, you wish to be true, trusty and trusted, you must love your Bible. With the Bible as the rule and guide of your life, every duty will be performed in a manner well pleasing to God, and of necessity well pleasing to men.—S. S. Messenger.

NEGLECTED CELLARS.—It is not probable that the amount of sickness bred in cellars can ever be accurately estimated, but there is no doubt that many mysterious cases of typhoid and scarlet fevers, rheumatism or ague, may be correctly traced to the malarious effluvia emanating from these neglected corners. Old boxes, bins, and barrels, which have contained vegetable matter, meat, fish, etc., need thorough overhauling, because when standing in a dark corner, they look empty, and there may be enough poison left, sticking on the sides and bottom to affect the health of the household. The work of cleansing is often left to the women and boys of the family. A man had much better leave his work a day, to make a thorough examination and purification of the cellar, than to be unduly anxious about getting in his crops in extra season. After all garbage is carried out, let the ceiling and wall be faithfully brushed with an old broom; and if this is done once a month, the atmosphere will be all the sweeter. Use plenty of lime, and in dry weather keep the doors and windows open a part of every day. Old tin and wooden ware should not be allowed to stand year after year upon the cellar shelves. If it is not fit to be used throw it away.—Manufacturer and Builder.

TRICHINA.—All intelligent lovers of ham and sausage must soon be convinced that there is some more profitable and economical use to which the hog, the great domestic scavenger and scrofula producer, may be put. The most reckless individual must experience a slight twinge of discomfort while tickling his palate with a savory slice of sausage, and at the same time conning the morning newspaper, and finding upon every page new and horrifying accounts of the ravages of that indomitable persecutor of pork and pork-eaters—the trichina.

Reports of the continued and increasing ravages of the trichina worm reach us from all parts of the country; and it must be evident, to all but the most obtuse, that total abstinence is the only safe and rational course to pursue with reference to pork, as well as whiskey.

WHAT AMERICAN CHILDREN EAT.—A correspondent writes: "While visiting a school in Montreal I asked the teacher 'If there were any American children there?' She said, 'Yes, and she could tell them by their pale faces, bright eyes, and nervousness. They learned quickly, but lost so many days during the term that they did not get on as fast as those who were able to be at school regularly.' He also took occasion to examine their luncheon baskets, and found the American fare to consist of a piece of mince pie, a piece of pound cake, two doughnuts, a pickle, and a cold sausage; while the English, Irish, and Scotch children had either two days' old bread, with meat, or bread and butter, or bread and apple with nothing else."—Herald of Health.

SHOULD MAN DRINK WATER?—He should drink nothing else. As a rule, he should drink water when thirsty; not otherwise. The quantity needed depends upon the conditions and habits of life. A person can live so as not to need a drop of water, except what he gets in his food. The more fruit and the less meat, salt, spices, liquors, tobacco, ete., a man uses, the less water will he require to drink. If a person uses these articles he must drink.—Herald of Health.

PLEASANT WORDS.—Pleasant words and little acts of kindness and attention are very important agents in the restoration of health, and in some cases are of more benefit than any or all other kinds of treatment. In health or disease they are never lost, always do good and never do harm. Use them freely, one and all, and especially those who have the care of the sick. An indispensable qualification far a good nurse is that she be kind, pleasant, and attentive.

LEAD ME.

Teach me, no human mind
Can counsel me aright;
Thou art my God, O make
Me perfect in thy sight.
A perfect christian, Lord, and to thy will Conform, and bid mine own be still.

Thy Spirit, Lord, is good;
By it I would be led;
Its teachings be my law,
Its peaceful paths I'd tread.
Yea, Father, lead me, 'tis no matter where,
Only that I may know that thou art there.

O Lord, there is a land
Of uprightness I seek;
Thou only canst direct,
Thy voice alone can speak,
And tell me where thy hand alone can stay,
And keep me in that holy, narrow way.

I will sing a new song unto the Lord,
Yea, praises let me sing;
He answered when I sought,
And from the bonds of fear
My fainting soul has brought.
My boat is lauched, no storm can overwhelm,
No fears assail, for God is at the helm.

THE PURIFYING HOPE.

"We are saved by hope." The Bible teaches us us what this hope is; and also the nature of the salvation of which it is the instrument. The second coming of Jesus to raise the dead is the prominent event of New Testament revelation, and is the hope of the church. How plain are these passages: "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time unto salvation." "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit, and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven."

When Paul was before Agrippa, the christian hope of a coming Jesus to redeem from the power of the grave, was presented with apostolic ardor and fidelity: "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers; unto which promise our twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews." What was this hope so prominent in the preaching, writing and experience of the apostle? He tells us in this defence before Agrippa; for immediately after the utterance of the words quoted, he says, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?"

St. John, speaking of the gospel hope, says, "When he shall appear, we shall be like him." The Bridegroom, looking down from the right hand of the Majesty on high, says to his loving, persecuted bride, "Surely I come quickly," and looking up, she responds, "Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus;" and if the Holy Spirit had not desired to pronounce a blessing on the hoping, waiting church, her cry for her coming Lord would have been the last words of the Bible.

Such is the hope by which we are saved; and now what is the salvation of which it is the instrument? The Bible is as clear here as it is on the nature of the hope. "Every man that hath this hope in him—the hope that when he shall appear we shall be like him—purifieth himself even as he is pure." Gospel salvation is purity. "He shall save his people from their sins. "Who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity." Salvation is not transportation from one place to another; for it would change us no more to be in paradise, than to be in the planet Mars. It should teach us a very important lesson that "Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God, amongst the trees of the garden." They were not out of Eden, but they were lost. Let us then cease to look at any place for salvation, but see that we are saved from sin. We believe in a real localty for the redeemed. We will get paradise again with its trees and streams. We will enter through the gates into the city, and have cherubim to welcome us, instead of having their flaming swords; but we must be saved in order to enter. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." The bride will have a palace; for He has gone to prepare a place for her; but she must "be clothed in fine linen, clean and white;" for the fine linen is not filthy rags of Antinomian piety, but "the righteousness of the saints." We must be saints in this life. Woe to us if we are not saints when Jesus comes; for holiness is the garment "without which no man shall see the Lord."

May we not see from this hope that purity is related to the regeneration of the sinner as effect to cause? Purity cannot begin—cannot of course be brought to full gospel sanctification, without this hope of seeing a coming Jesus, and being made like him. The sinner unpardoned has no such hope; he must be received through the blood of Jesus as a justified believer, before this hope can faintly dawn upon his heart. The hope is the purifying instrument, consequently it must be in the heart before that heart can be purified. "Every man that hath this hope in him purifyeth himself."

How natural is it for such a hope to purify the soul of one who has it; of one who, looking to the grand revelation of salvation at the last time, "rejoices in the hope of the glory of God." Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God," what manner of persons should we be "in all holy conversation and godliness." "Seeing that we look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless." St. Peter knew that looking for such things, having such a hope, would lead to holiness. What a glorious hope! Jesus is coming—we shall see him. The night of death has stars shining in it, which "declare the glory of God," and a firmament beaming with promises bends over our graves, which shows the handiwork of Him whose nights give promise of mornings.

If we would be pure, let us feed upon this manna, this hope of a coming Jesus to put death under his feet. As we bow around the sacramental board, and show the Lord's death till he come, thus manifesting our faith in his death and hope of his coming, let this "blessed hope" burn and glow in our souls. O think of this! Let this song be with us in the night of sorrow and death, it is His song. He gave it to us that we might sing it when the sun goes down; sing it under starlight, and even under clouds. Sweet song! Angels catch the music, and fling it from their harps. "I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." In the night time His song shall be with me." Such music running through the soul will purify; it is a stream from the river that makes glad the Lord's city of "Man-soul," and keeps it pure within.

O how we shall appreciate the all-cleansing blood of our Jesus, if we look for him, wait for him, and really believe he will come. The wise virgins have the gospel oil of desire, as well as the lamp of expectation, when they go to meet the bridegroom, and thus they "are saved by hope."—Christian Standard.

ACTS 7: 60.

J. P. MARQUAND.

"And when he had said this, he fell asleep."

In the Crisis of Sept. 2nd is the obituary of Samuel Hancock. Among his last words were, "Precious Jesus! precious Jesus!" and so saying he fell asleep. Perhaps no stone or monument will mark the place where our brother is laid, but his honest, christian walk and life, his stern integrity and triumphant departure, are among the happy evidences left to his friends for their consolation and comfort. Our brother sleeps, but a mighty power has the control and charge of him, and will bring him again in the morning. 1 Thess. 4: 14. Let us, therefore, not sorrow as those who have no hope. A brighter day is in store for all the suffering, tried and tempted ones, who have laid down their lives for the truth, and have fallen asleep in Christ. O! it is blessed to love Jesus, serve him nobly, and battle for the right. We get good pay (a good conscience) as we go along, and at the end everlasting life. Hold up your head, dear suffering one, and show your colors, and stand fast in the liberty of the gospel. "Who are these arrayed in white robes, and whence came they?" O Lord, thou knowest. "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Rev. 7: 13, 14.

It is a comforting doctrine, that God will take care of those who have fallen asleep, and in due time they shall awake and arise to beauty, honor, glory, and majesty. They shall come forth in eternal bloom, never knowing hunger nor thirst, heat nor cold, sorrow nor pain. The highest and most exalted pleasures that this world can give dwindle into shadows compared with the joys of the redeemed. There are no earthly signs, language or symbols, that can express the purity, chastity and ecstasy of the washed and sanctified ones. God has prepared for them a kingdom of such magnificence and boundless variety (far beyond mortal conceptions), in which he will preside himself, and fill our utmost capacity. There will be no lack of friendship, nor of love. Never more shall discordant notes or murmuring suspicions intrude, but forever sweet harmony and perfect rectitude. Music, birds, flowers, landscapes, hills, mountains, lakes, rivers, dales, valleys, fruits, shall be there to gladden and refresh. By no possible contingency can there be any failure of God's love and favor throughout eternity. "My sheep hear my voice, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life."

Now, dear christian, be faithful over a few things. I cannot close this subject without giving a few thoughts of the punishment of those who neglect God and their souls. They will lose all those joys which are the birthright of the righteous,—lose all the sympathies of heaven; have no more delightful friendships; goodness and truth forever depart from them, and desolation covers their spirits. All the fancied good which they enjoyed here in this life will be gone, and in its place remorse, sorrow, and anguish. They have hated instruction, and despised knowledge, turning away from the voice of mercy and love, and now there remains shame and contempt. There can be no deeper penalty to a human soul than the utter negation of all good, the personification or embodiment of evil, utter blackness and darkness forever. O, fellow mortal, where are you? Are you on the pathway of holiness, with your face towards the heavenly country, with Christ for your friend and guide; or are you in the bonds of sin and iniquity, living on the husks of this world, and exposed to death? Choose the right and the good, and reject the evil. Be manly. Be noble. Be honest to yourself, and seek the Lord while he may be found. Call upon him while he is near, lest darkness overtake and night gather around you, and it be too late.

BIBLE BAPTISM.---No. 5.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

The truth on the subject of baptism is as uniting as that relating to any other subject, and should be known and practised. There is nothing in God's great Book to be left unsearched for and hidden, because his people are unwilling to know it. Jesus said—"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." There is true liberty in having a knowledge of the truth, and we would have it on this subject of baptism. We do not hope or expect to turn ecclesiastical synods or councils to one method of practice, although we should be glad to help even in a small way to unsettle the foundations of error, and demolish the whole structure, and bring God's people to see and practice eye to eye on this subject. And there is no earthly reason why they may not come to this. The problem is not an intricate one; the truth is not undiscoverable; it is not beyond the reach of the humblest. Prejudice is more in the way than anything else. If all would yield their one-sidedness to the lenient charitableness of truth (and they might, and suffer no real loss, but gain inestimable good), then all would be well. We address ourselves to the task of examining the Bible, especially the New Testament, which is the authority on the subject, to know what Bible baptism is; praying God to bless us in the work, and lead thereby some doubting, perplexed, inquiring soul to see the truth and obey it; even though we may not succeed in turning those who practice wrongfully out of their course.

We start with the conviction that the word baptism, as a word, must have in the New Testament the meaning it had when the inspired writers chose it, or God chose it for them; and as that meaning was "to immerse," or "to dip," it must be retained, because it must be what they who used it meant, or else they would never have chosen it. Men have sought to make God mean exclusively, even in the use of the same words others have used, something that no one else ever meant; but, alas! they have made in so doing a sad mistake. One thing is evident; it is that if baptism means otherwise, in the Bible, than it does elsewhere in the classics, the manner in which it is used will betray the fact, and teach us what it really does mean. We shall consider it as—

1. LITERAL BAPTISM, as to its manner of administration, and the object of it.

2. A metaphor.

In considering it as to its literal meaning, we shall notice how it is to be administered, to whom and by whom, and for what purpose; and so the qualifications of the subject, and the administrator, and the point in the history of the subject when it is proper to attend to it. We propose to notice the terms employed, how they are employed, and why; and so progress toward the final conclusion of the whole matter, as to find the truth, which we may do without egotism, or the claim that we know more or are better than others; for all may have the light, we are glad to know, as well as we.

Of the words of the list which we gave our readers, only the following are found in the New Testament, in the original Greek: bapto, baptizo, baptisma, baptismos, and baptistes. The others; to wit, baptisterios, and baptisterion, are not found there at all, but are found in the classic writings. We will give the list, with the definitions which properly belong to them, and then proceed to pass to the consideration of the texts where the words which occur in the Bible are found, and learn their use and significance there. We give in this list only the words which belong to baptism, and those in their English form. It will deeply interest our readers to note these definitions, and those which are not found in the New Testament will have a novelty to them, and a significance, because they stand in their original sense, without having suffered from being handled with theological hands for the purpose of subserving them to favorite opinion. The words are as follows:

BAPTIZE (from baptein—to dip in water), to dip in water, to immerse, to submerge and emerge, to dip in and draw out, to apply a person to the water as a religious ceremony, in obedience to the command of Christ.

BAPTISM (from baptisma—immersion; a dipping), immersion, the act of submerging or dipping. In the Scriptures, the immersion of a candidate in water.

BAPTIST (from baptistes—one who immerses or dips), one who practices immersion. The name of the forerunner of Christ.

BAPTISTERITE (from baptisterios—what is subject to immersion), a candidate for immersion; passively, one who has just been immersed, and is still wet with the waters of immersion; an immersed person.

BAPTISTERY (from baptisterion—a place for immersion), any place where one may be scripturally baptized or immersed. Any river, or lake, or other body of water, or place, where the ordinance can be properly attended to. In modern usage, a place in a church, under the pulpit, constructed for the purpose of administering the ordinance.

We are conscious that in giving these definitions we have been true to the original meaning of the words, and that they are substantially correct, although not in accordance with Mr. Webster. The last two of the words cannot be found in his "best dictionary in the world" at all. But when we come to consider "rantism," we shall have yet many more of which he gives us no meaning; but as he only professes to define words which have already come into the English language, we are not surprised, and only wait patiently for them to appear in the next edition which the editor of the dictionary shall present to the public.

In turning to the New Testament for the first occurrence of a word of the list, we find it in Matt. 3: 1, where we read—"In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea." We have it here in the form of the name of the administrator, a title which simply reveals his peculiar business, and discloses to us the fact that his mission was to baptize. His name (see Luke 1: 13, 60, 63) was originally only John; but he became "the Baptist" because he baptized, just as a man may be "the carpenter," or "the blacksmith," or "the wheelwright," from his occupation. Originally, men were without what are known as surnames, and were thus designated by their occupation, until at length John the carpenter, became John Carpenter; and John the blacksmith, or coppersmith, became, by contracting the word, John Smith; and John the wheelwright became, by contraction, John Wright; and thus we have many of our modern names. So that to-day, John the Baptist might be known as John Baptist; and his name no more have any reference to his occupation, than those of modern names usually do to the original sense and use; being entirely lost sight of, just as the original sense of "baptism" has been lost in the modern perversion of it.

We learn from Matt. 3: 5, 6, that to John the Baptist "came all Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." There was then good reason for calling him "the Baptist," for his name and his occupation were in perfect harmony. Suppose that instead of calling him "John the Baptist," he had been called "John the Rantist"; then, whatever "Rantist" may mean, his name and his occupation would not have been in harmony; for to call him "the Rantist," when he "baptized" the people, would certainly have been out of place. If he were properly called thus, then the word "baptized" should have been "rantized," and we should read of the multitudes, that they were "rantized of him in Jordan"; but neither words are used; and hence we conclude that there was harmony between the name by which John was called, and his practice of baptism, in whatever form he administered it. We find evidence, we think, that he administered the ordinance according to the meaning of the term "baptism—to immerse." In the statement that he baptized the people "in" Jordan, the word "in" is from the preposition "en," rendered "in" in verse six; but in verse eleven it is rendered with; and John is made to say, "I indeed baptize you with water"; and it is urged that this is proof that the word does not always mean "to immerse." It is an acknowledged fact that primarily "en" means "in," but it is thought that it may mean with, and the translators evidently thought that they were justified in rendering it "with" in verse eleven, because there is a reference to the "baptism of the Holy Ghost" in the text, and that was supposed to be accomplished by an effusion upon the person; and it was supposed that "with" and not in, must be the word to represent that sort of baptism.

We do not propose just now to consider "the baptism of the Holy Ghost," as we think that it comes under the head of "baptism as a metaphor"; and we leave it to be considered in its place. We shall, however, find that what we have to say now about the preposition, and what we may say then, will be in harmony; and we now say that the word is properly rendered in verse six, where we are told that the people were "baptized in Jordan." Indeed, it would read like an absurdity were we gravely told that they were "baptized with Jordan." The natural inference now is, that it is more reasonable to believe that the people were immersed in the river, than it would be that the whole river was poured or sprinkled upon them, which we see no reason for believing. There are other Greek prepositions better suited to the place for the word "with," than the one used there, and we are not prepared to accept any use of it which is far-fetched and out of place. There is, in fact, not a reason why the word should be rendered otherwise than "in" in all the passages in the New Testament where it occurs, and especially in Matt. 3: 11. It occurs in Matt. 7: 2, where we read—"With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

Now if we substitute the word "in" for "with," it will be readily seen that the expression has an increased forcibleness. "In what measure ye mete [or measure], it shall be measured to you again," gives us the idea of more complete exactness, and teaches that the measure that men put their goods into is to be the guage of the judgment of God in their case at last.

THE GREAT CONFERENCE AT OXFORD FOR THE PROMOTION OF HOLINESS.

"Such a conference has never been held in this country before"—has justly been remarked in reference to the circular convening it. A meeting of christian men and women, called together for the express purpose of converse and prayer about entire sanctification, and to continue for ten days, is certainly a novelty in England. This was no ecclesiastical gathering; for noblemen, members of Parliament, and other laymen have their names placed side by side on the circular with ministers of religion; and a layman convenes it. It is not a Methodist gathering, though the truly Wesleyan phrase, "Scriptural Holiness" is employed in defining its object, and among the forty published names we find only one Methodist—the Rev. W. Arthur. And while the Rev. W. E Boardman and Mr. R. P. Smith are American, France, Germany, and Switzerland send representatives in well-known Protestant pastors. Oxford was selected as the place of meeting, partly because of the fact that during the vacation there is lodging accommodation for nearly two thousand persons, and partly, doubtless, because of the Rev. A. M. W. Christopherson, vicar of St. Aldates, who has taken a prominent position in connection with the "higher life" movement in the Church of England.

As a sign of the times it should be noted that a series of sermons on sanctification were preached this week in the parish church of St. Aldates. The town-hall was secured for the large assemblies, and meetings for conversation were held in smaller rooms. Evidently great interest was excited, and who can tell what will be the result of so many being gathered to consecrate themselves fully to Christ, and to hear how they may receive him as their full Savior.

We shall perhaps best describe these meetings by giving an account of one day's services—Tuesday's. The day begins with a gathering for prayer in the large room of the town-hall at seven o'clock. Quite a number of people are seen just before the hour, moving towards the place, many of them carrying Bibles in their hands. There must be altogether six or seven hundred in the room. The presiding minister, the Rev. E. Hopkins, of Richmond, suggests that a short time be spent in silent prayer; and presently opens the meeting with the reading of a chapter and a prayer, beautifully simple, and full of restful confidence in Christ. Then a hymn is sung from "Faith Hymns"—a selection prepared expressly for consecration meetings—

"Safe in the arms of Jesus,
Safe on his gentle breast;
There by his love o'ershadowed.
Sweetly my soul shall rest."

We sit to sing, and softly and in harmony everybody sings. Then some requests for prayer are read—a mother for her backsliding son, a minister for his people; for an invalid lady, who is traveling to-day the whole distance from Dublin to be present. There is a pause after each announcement. It is most solemn. Yes, we feel it—everybody is praying! Then a clergyman prays audibly, and at the close of his prayer the sound of a subdued but earnest response passes like a wave across the room. Thus the meeting moves on, the greatest quiet, but an intensely devotional element. We have never been in a prayer meeting where the solemn interest is so all pervading. It was touching at one point of the meeting when a pale, intellectual-looking French minister kneeled down, and in beautiful English prayed, asking that God would bless "that unhappy land of mine, where the Bible is reviled, and which can only know rest by coming to Christ." The minister was the Rev. Theodore Monod.

At half-past nine o'clock he conducted a conversational Bible-meeting in the same room. The subject was Ephesians 6: 13—"The whole armor of God," and a beautiful applicatory exposition of the various parts was given. The conversation which followed was led by the Rev. A Jukes, and several persons—some of them in the body of the hall—took part. A French gentleman, who spoke with great animation, interested the meeting greatly by his illustrations of the words, "Stand, therefore," and the Rev. Dr. Mahan, of America—a noble-looking old man—gave a strong, homely address, on receiving the Holy Ghost as the source of victory.

After a brief interval, the general meeting was held, opened by R. Pearsall Smith, whose happy, open countenance, prepares you to receive anything he may say. The devotional exercises were peculiarly simple and impressive, and Mr. Smith's address on Romans 12: 1 was listened to with great attention. The points of the text were well brought out, and we were told that the presenting of ourselves as a holy sacrifice was not "finality," but the commencement of a life of full sanctification. He was followed by Dr. Mahan, whose manner is the reverse of his own. Mr. Smith speaks like an English clergyman, Dr. M. like a sturdy old Methodist. His point was that by the surrender of all, and reception of Christ, we get the Holy Ghost to dwell in us and make us Christ-like. Now we sang—

"My body, soul, and spirit,
Jesus, I give to thee,
A consecrated offering,
Thine evermore to be."

The singing was led by the Rev. Mr. Mayers, a Baptist minister, who has an evident call to sing the gospel. By request he sang the chorus as a solo, the whole assembly joining him only in the verses. It was very effective; and many might be noticed with closed eyes, deeply moved as Mr. Mayers slowly sang—

"Waiting, waiting, waiting;
I'm waiting for the fire."

A Mr. Shipley next gave a very ingenious address, in which the story of Ruth was spiritualized in application to a soul choosing Christ as its sanctification. After more silent prayer, the morning meeting broke up. Here we may say that we have noticed a peculiarity. In some of the prayers offered, we were reminded in some instances of what is called in "Claude's Essay," discussing Scripture "in a strain of perpetual application." One brother in prayer ran through the whole narrative of Christ's appearance to his disciples by the seaside, turning the incidents into illustrations of our need.

At three o'clock the Rev. W. E. Boardman held a conversational meeting on consecration in the schoolroom at St. Aldates. He sat alone on the platform as the people entered, with his Bible beside him. What a pleasant face he has! His prayer was very simple and familiar, almost conversational in tone; but it carried us toward God, and seemed to bring God very near. His address was based on some verses in Romans 12th, and he was led out at some length, evidently without pre-arrangement, in speaking of the consecration of the Aaronic priesthood, and the tabernacle of Moses. As a whole, the address was telling, and accompanied with blessed influence. When Mr. Boardman had concluded, Lord Radstock offered some earnest remarks.

Next came the "general meeting" at the town-hall. So full was the hall that some had to stand the whole time. The Rev. W. A. Chapman, of London, was the first speaker. He read Eph. 1, and taking full consecration for granted, enlarged on complete trust and its results. Rest of the soul was to be found not in reliance on our feelings, but on the promises of God. A most practical and experimental address. The speaker made a singularly clear and decisive confession of having "obtained the blessing." He said it was the one thing of all others the devil was trying to cheat God's people out of.

At the close of this address Mr. Mayers sang "Whiter than snow," and the Rev. E. W. Moore, of London, next rose to speak. A very young looking man, but how boldly he spoke. His subject was Hebrews 12: 1, especially dwelling on "the sin which doth so easily beset us"—which he said was unbelief. He also told his own experience, and in a way that stirred many hearts. "When I came up square to God's promises, I found I was an unbelieving believer. I had dared to live, making God a liar." He told how, on making the full surrender and seeking assurance, he received it in connection with 1 John 5: 14—"This is the confidence we have in him," etc.—laying great emphasis on "we have the petitions we desired of him." "Dare to believe God!" were the words he concluded with.

The Rev. C. B. Sawday next spoke. His address was most impressive, very clear on the question of consecration, and attended with great power. The speaker narrated the story of his own struggles, and the rest in Christ he had found, and how in times of bereavement, members of his church had been upheld by the grace of God. It is impossible to describe the eager, hungry attention with which these statements of personal experience were listened to.

From six o'clock to half-past seven a ministerial conference was held. There was a large attendance, not only of ministers but of the laity, and the service was second to none for sustained interest and real spiritual power. Mr. R. P. Smith opened with an address, and the ministers who spoke were Messrs. Monro, Thornton, C. B. Sawday, and J. Mayers. We have seldom heard anything more genuinely interesting than Mr. Sawday's account of the work of holiness in his church, or more tenderly pathetic than Mr. Mayer's allusion to the recent removal of his wife. Many strong men wept, and the ministers especially will not soon forget that "conference."

In the evening Lord Radstock preached to the unsaved in the Congregational chapel; open-air services were also conducted; the Rev. F. F. Tracy preached on the "higher life" in a church close by; and the town-hall and Corn Exchange were each full to overflowing with persons anxious to hear more of this consecration and full trust.

The question of holiness is evidently taking fast hold of God's people. If Ritualists are earnest, and men of science daring in speculation, and vice growing bolder in our streets, God himself is raising up a power against the might of evil. "It is time for thee, Lord, to work!" He is working, and beginning just where wise men have long seen the great revival must begin—among his own people. Thus while Spiritualism is spreading, the war of Armageddon is rapidly approaching, an outpouring of the Holy Spirit is beginning to descend upon the church to prepare her for the troubles through which she has soon to pass.—Signs of Our Times.

MY WANTS.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

I want full salvation. I will not try to dodge the point, but meet it fairly and squarely. I feel sure that I have given all to Christ. I know that I choose Him for my portion, even if by this choice I lose all things else. Yes, yes, give me Jesus, and I am rich, for I possess "all things" in Him. Now I want every root of bitterness removed entirely away from me. I ask all who now enjoy the fulness of the blessing to pray for me. I have long been a believer in holiness, and sometimes (for a brief season) thought I had received the blessing; but to-day I know that I am not yet perfect.

I have a definite object in view. I do not ask nor expect to feel or to be just like any other person on earth. I just want to be like Jesus. For a short time past, I have seemed to see a great reservoir just above me, filled with the cleansing waters that flow from the throne of God and the Lamb. O let the flood-gates be thrown wide open, that the cleansing wave may come in all its power, and remove every vestige of sin and uncleanness from my whole being. Let the blood, the precious blood, avail to the uttermost, for me, even me. Why do I want this blessing? It is for the glory of God and the good of his people. If I am thus blest, others must share the blessing, or at least, have a chance to do so. If God gives me perfect light, I will strive by all means to let it shine.

HUMILITY.

It is recorded in James 4: 6, "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble." Jesus says (Matt. 23: 12) "Whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased, and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted." The wise man avers that "Before honor is humility." Humility is a modest estimate of one's own worth or advantages. It is freedom from pride and arrogance. It is an unmistakable characteristic of a true christian. It is said that heathen philosophers were so little acquainted with this virtue, that they had no name for it; regarding the name which we employ, as signifying meanness and baseness of mind.

Humility does not oblige persons to say what is not true of themselves, nor entertain meaner views of their character and virtues than is just and proper. It does not require them to say of themselves, what would offend them to have others say of them. This is voluntary humility. This heaven-born virtue does not consist in attributing to ourselves excellences which we do not possess, overrating our performances, and taking immoderate delight in them; but it is an inward sense of our many imperfections, attributing all we have and are to Divine grace.

Humility will be manifest in the modesty of our appearance. We shall act in accordance with our age, ability, character, and functions. We shall ever prefer a good to a great name. It lays the axe at the root of unholy ambition, puts a curb on obstinate self-will, breaks the teeth of envy, and hushes all the notes of discontent into perpetual harmony.

Lavater says, "The most eloquent speaker the most ingenious writer, and the most accomplished statesman, cannot effect so much as the mere presence of the man who tempers his wisdom and his vigor with humility."

But any thing assumed is not humility. Cecil says, "The assumption of the garb of humility, in all its shades, is generally but an expression of a proud mind."

No mere superficial piety can exhibit this grace. "It is a flower," says Dr. Fuller, "that prospers not in lean and barren soils; but in a ground that is rich, it flourishes and is beautiful." An example of this is found in the great Sir Isaac Newton. He says, "I do not know what I may appear to the world; but to myself, I seem to have been only a boy playing on the seashore, and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me."

Humility will not suffer self-praise. Dr. Cummings truthfully says, "The moment humility is spoken of by him that has it, that moment it is gone. It is like those delicate things which dissolve the instant they are touched. The moment humility tells you 'I am here,' there is an end to it." It does not seek to be praised, but pleads to be let alone, whilst the great Giver of all virtue is crowned and worshiped. "A lady," says Bowes, "applied to a celebrated philanthropist, on behalf of an orphan child. When he had bidden her draw on him for any amount, she said, 'As soon as the child is old enough, I will teach him to thank you.' 'Stop,' said the good man, 'you are mistaken. We do not thank the clouds for rain. Teach the child to look higher, and to thank Him who gives both the clouds and the rain.'"

Jesus is our great example. He never arrogated to himself any peculiar excellences, but was ever ready to confess his origin, whether it be the Son of a carpenter, or the Son of God. He never placed himself above the masses, to commune with the refined and wealthy alone; he could eat with publicans and sinners, visit the humble home of a christian family at Bethany, heal lepers, bless little children, and pardon an adulteress. This was Jesus.

There is no one virtue more difficult for human nature to practice. If we are reviled, we are naturally inclined to revile again; if we are smitten on the one cheek, instead of turning the other, we judge that manhood demands that we smite back again. Give him as good as he sends, is the dictate of unsanctified human nature. But how unlike the God-man! When they smote him, he did not retaliate. When they crowned him a king in mockery, no blush of anger or shame was on his cheek. When they gave him vinegar and gall, only words of sweetness fell from his lips. When they nailed him to the cross, he prayed, "Lay not this sin to their charge."

Dear reader, if you desire to secure the greatest possible good, follow the example of your great Leader. If you desire to be lifted up, humble yourself, and you shall be exalted.—Advocate of Christian Holiness.

IT is said of Pope Pius V. that when he was dying, he cried out in despair: "When I was in low condition I had some hopes of salvation; when I advanced to be a cardinal I greatly doubted it; but since I came to the popedom, I have had no hope at all."

HOLY longing for God is the plainest proof that we possess God.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

The provisions of the new postal law, requiring pre-payment of postage on all newspapers, go into operation on the first of January next. After that date all postage (excepting on newspapers within the County in which they are published) will have to be paid at the Office from which the paper is mailed. This change relieves the subscribers from the care and trouble of postage payment, placing it upon the publishers, and making the expense, which is quite an item, to come directly upon the latter.

To meet this (in regard to the Crisis), the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society, at a late meeting, voted to add twenty-five cents to the price of our paper; so that from Jan. 1st, 1875, the World's Crisis will be $2.25 per year in advance. And hereafter, all monies received at this office for advance pay on the Crisis will be credited from Jan. forward at the rate of $2.25 per year. And if any, who have already paid for the paper in advance, are disposed to send us what they would have to pay at their Post Office, under the old law, we will thankfully receive the same; and so of those who receive the Crisis FREE.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN THE LAST PERIOD OF THE GOSPEL AGE.

We mean by the church of Christ the true followers of Christ; those who walk with God, and who are in harmony with his word and Spirit. We do not mean any denominational class to the exclusion of others, but we refer to all individuals, of whatever school or associations, who walk the path marked in the word of God for his church in that period. How can the church of Christ be identified unless she is described so that she can be known by that description? Do all men belong to that church? Certainly not; for Christ's sheep hear his voice and follow him. All men do not follow him as a leader by profession. Do all who profess faith in Christ follow him? No; for the Mother of Harlots is an apostatized christian church, having had "indignation against the holy covenant." Then a profession of faith in Christ does not prove communion with him. The Roman church is called a "mother," consequently she must have children who bear her characteristics. None of this apostate family can belong to the true church, for they all have indignation against the holy covenant, or gospel. A covenant is a contract or bargain made between two parties. The holy covenant is the gospel contract made between Christ and his church. Christ, on his part, agrees to produce reconciliation between repenting, believing sinners and God; those who yield hearty obedience to the conditions of the gospel. The church on her part covenants to receive Jesus as a Savior, and to be led in all things by his gospel. The true church of God, of any period, embraces all persons then living, who have, in their hearts submitted to the conditions of the holy covenant then in force. Those conditions are nowhere authoritatively presented, only in the sacred Scriptures; and become the only church creed to which men are amenable.

The church is required to advance in her faith and work, as truth develops itself in its fulfillment, which requires new obedience. The mystery of the gospel is not finished until the seventh angel sounds; that is, new truths will continue to be unfolded and made practical until the end of the gospel age. Christians are required to walk with God as Enoch did. To walk with God is to advance in faith and obedience to God's revealed purposes connected with unfolding events; the faith and acts always corresponding to the varying circumstances around us. Christian progression from faith to faith, is like the advancement of a scholar in his studies. He is reckoned a perfect scholar if he thoroughly learns and comprehends the subjects his class is required to study. But when he fails to advance in the studies according to the rules of the school, notwithstanding his position in the past, he loses his degree of perfection in scholarship. This has been the great difficulty with God's people in all the history of the past, and the Scriptures teach that it will be emphatically so at the ending of the gospel age.

Those who preach the gospel of the kingdom will be smitten by fellow servants. The faithful servants will make the vision plain upon tables, although they will be "reproved," because it will tarry, Christ will not come as soon as they anticipated. Scoffers will arise, who, at that time, will use geological arguments, attempting to prove that God did not create the earth according to the Bible record, and therefore its predicted ending and the coming of Christ cannot be proven by it. The last-day church will also have to contend with religious teachers who will teach fables for gospel truth; mystically interpreting the Scriptures just as the Jews did at the first advent; thus invalidating the signs of Christ's coming, bringing the event upon them as a snare.

The church of this age is represented as being surrounded with great perils; not only false teachers but false spirits, which, combined, will deceive "if it were possible the very elect." It is an age of great spiritual declension, heartless devotions, worldly conformity, corrupted theology, spiritualistic fanaticism of many shades, hatred of government ecclesiastical and political, disintegration of all grades of society, great moral depravity, increase and bold blasphemies of infidelity and atheism challenging the coming of Christ, the general uprising and outburst of all the elements of wickedness and satanic malice threatening the demolition of truth and virtue with all that is God-like and heavenly. These appalling and threatening circumstances constitute the period, the hour of temptation which should come upon all the world to try them. Every christian grace and element and virtue is to be strained to its utmost tension to receive an absolute test of its genuineness and the divinity of its authorship. The world is to be unmasked, and the real status of its different classes revealed. It is doubtless now in its incipient stages of unfolding its hidden corruptions. The covering with which ignorance and superstition has vailed the true characters of popes and kings, counsellors and priests, lords and peasants will be rent by the hand of a mighty God, and no arguments or combinations can finally shield the guilty or condemn the innocent. The prestige of ancestry, qualifications, previous professions or standing, cannot withstand the mighty currents which are rending the covering from corrupt rulers, debauched prelates, godless demagogues, defalcating financiers and satanic libertines. The tide of these demoralizing elements is setting in so strong that every class and person who can be moved from the old positions of faith, purity, and holiness, will be swept away. The conflict must be fearful during the last days of christian trial. The true church of the last days must be sifted down to those who shall so separate themselves from all these contaminating influences of false professors and infidels, scholastic theology and mesmerism, worldly speculations and politics, that they may be sanctified through the truth and stand complete in Christ, enjoying the fulness of the divine blessing, and the sinless perfection possessed by the apostolic church.

Dear brethren in Christ, of whatever class or name, for Jesus' sake accept our earnest appeal, and do not sleep a moment during this fearful night. The thief is approaching; the snare is about to be drawn; see that your feet are not within the fatal coil, or that your christian principles are not stolen away. Come not down from the watch-tower, but constantly look in all directions for the subtle foe. We feel under as positive obligation to warn you of these dangers as we should to arouse you from unconscious slumbers in the midst of a burning building. We do not fear to be called an alarmist, or a disturber of those who wish to rest undisturbed from fears of coming dangers. We feel called of God to warn the people of this generation of swiftly approaching judgments, pointing out the way and means by which they can find shelter from their fatal results; and we are fully determined to be faithful to our high calling, whether we rise or fall in the estimation of friends or foes. We firmly believe that this is the specific and great work Christ has called his servants to do during the present period, and that faithfulness in doing this duty is as necessary for acceptance with God as any other christian duty.

Then, ye servants of Christ, put the trumpet to your lips fearlessly once more, and give it the certain sound, that all the church may prepare for the battle. Waver not because the conflict waxes fearful, but with sword in hand press to the front, and stand ready to receive the victor's wreath when the glorious triumph shall be achieved. O, ye church of the living God, let your feet now track the summit of the prophet's mountain, and lift up your voice mightily in distinct tones, and say to the people, "Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold his reward is with him, and his work before him." Be not fearful to echo this wonderful sentence of divine truth, for the Lord anticipated your trial of faith in proclaiming it, and said, "Lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid." We feel the divine approval when we faithfully follow these instructions, and teach confidently the soon coming of Him who will "reward" his people with eternal life. It seems to us that the signs are so far advanced, and the world is so ripe for the harvest, that we are only safe to be fully prepared every moment for the last trumpet to sound, and our final destiny to be eternally fixed. Solemn moment! Awful suspense! Waiting for the final sentence fixing the eternal doom of humanity. Precious moments of delay to some unprepared, repenting sinner. Golden opportunity to pluck some dear one as a brand from the burning. Our Father, deeply impress us with the situation, position, and work of thy church, during the last hours of her toils and sorrows. J. C.

SCATTER TRACTS.

It is to be feared that our brethren are not sufficiently awake to the importance of scattering tracts. These silent preachers are doing a great work. Bro. J. J. Smith writes from Alabama: "I have just heard of four Baptist preachers, in Cherokee county, Alabama, who are preaching the coming of the Lord soon; all the result of reading some of our tracts, that found their way over there." Bro. C. says: "I am out of tracts again. Hope you will send me more soon."

Who will help on this important work of tract distribution? We have some faithful men in the field, who are ready to scatter tracts judiciously, as they travel from house to house in the Southern States. Shall they be supplied? Let us have liberal donations for this object. Now is the time to work. Let those who love to labor and sacrifice for Jesus, lend a helping hand in this blessed work. Do not delay. Time is short. Let us do all in our power to save people while mercy lingers.

The results from the labors of those four preachers in Alabama will pay for all the tracts we have ever given away. Now let them have a supply to scatter still further. As a general rule, the people in the South, are in very straitened circumstances, and are not able to pay for tracts nor preaching. Let us act the part of "neighbor" to them; be like the good Samaritan. Read Bro. J. J. Smith's letter in this paper, addressed to the A. A. Miss. Board, and then send a donation for mission work. M. G.

SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH.

It is well known that there are quite a number who believe that Saturday should be the Christian's rest day, instead of the Lord's day, which has been generally observed by the disciples of Jesus during the entire Christian dispensation. It is claimed by those who keep the seventh day, that the time is at hand when the keeping of the first day will constitute "the mark of the beast"; hence they must be finally condemned and destroyed. As this doctrine is made a test of fellowship, thus dividing christian families and churches, it seems important that the truth should be made plain, and widely scattered among the people. Looking at the subject from this stand-point, the love we have for the welfare of the church of Christ prompts us to say what follows.

Circumstances have required us to give this subject our special attention. We do not wish to uphold error, nor oppose truth. All we desire is to please the Lord. We shall condense our thoughts into as small a compass as possible, believing it will be most acceptable to the reader. We will first notice the two covenants or testaments—the old and the new—the first and the second. Under which are we now living? If the old, then all its requirements are still binding; if under the new, then the old is ended. The first covenant was made with the children of Israel at Mt. Sinai, when Moses acted as mediator between the Lord and the people.

The following are some of the plain Scriptures which show that the ten commandments constituted the first, or old covenant: "And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments, and he wrote them upon two tables of stone." Deut. 4: 13. Again Moses says: "When I was gone up into the mount to receive the tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant which the Lord made with you, then I abode in the mount forty days and forty nights. . . . And it came to pass, at the end of forty days and forty nights, that the Lord gave me the two tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant. . . . So I turned and came down from the mount, . . . and the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands." Deut. 9: 9, 11, 15. "He was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights. . . . And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments." Ex. 34: 28.

This covenant, made with the children of Israel, at Mt. Sinai, after they came out of Egypt, was national, and to be kept by all the people. It was for their temporal welfare as a nation, and had no reference to their final salvation in the world to come. It has no command to love God, or our neighbor. It merely speaks of the consequences of love and hatred. One could keep the old covenant and be destitute of love to God or man, just as a boy may keep his father's commandments through fear of a whipping if he disobeys. Read over with care the old covenant, as follows:—

"And God spake all these words, saying, I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them; for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; and shewing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain. Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it. Honor thy father and mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbor's." Ex. 20: 1–17.

The whole force of the covenant consists in the phrase, "THOU SHALT NOT." This covenant was addressed to a disobedient, rebellious people, and was composed of some of the common moral precepts necessary for their social welfare in this world. No such commands as these will be needed by the saved in the world to come; and had those Jews loved the Lord with all their hearts, there would have been no occasion for such a covenant to secure their temporal welfare; but they did not keep even this; hence were destroyed as a nation, and brought into subjection to other governments. The memorial day, contained in the fourth commandment, was placed in the heart of the old covenant, that they might be continually reminded of their wonderful deliverance from Egyptian bondage, by the mighty hand of the Lord. In Deut. 5: 15, when speaking of the reason for choosing this as their rest day, the Lord says: "Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand, and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." No other nation but the Jewish could keep this memorial day, because no other one was thus delivered from Egyptian bondage. Servants and proselytes, in Jewish families and communities, were required to observe the same memorial day in order that they might worship harmoniously. This was their leading feast day. The Jewish festival days were commemorative days, and they were required to keep them holy, and assemble in holy convocations. They were all called "feast days." In Lev. 23: 1–8, we read:—

"And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, concerning the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, even these are my feasts. Six days shall work be done; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of rest, a holy convocation; ye shall do no work therein; it is the Sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings. These are the feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons. In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord; seven days ye must eat unleavened bread. In the first day ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein. But ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord seven days; in the seventh day is a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein."

These and other feast days were their sacred days, and they were required to keep their Sabbath, or rest day, prominent, because it commemorated the most important event in their history,—their deliverance from the heavy yoke of Egyptian bondage.

We find no evidence that the rest day of the Jews corresponded with the seventh day of the original week.

The Lord instructed them to work six days, and rest the seventh. It appears that this special arrangement began when they came out of Egypt. Their first rest day in the wilderness must be so arranged that there would be six days of labor between it and the time they left their state of bondage. At Mount Sinai, this memorial day was incorporated into the first or old covenant, where it was to remain as a sacred day so long as that covenant was in force, and no longer.

Paul says, "The first covenant had also ordinances of divine service." Heb. 9: 1. Then if we are right, we shall find ordinances connected with the ten-commandment covenant, given on Mt. Sinai. We find this is emphatically true of the "old covenant," as recorded in Exodus 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23d and 24th chapters, and that after the covenant was made, it was surrounded by ordinances, and enforced by "statutes and judgments" regulating the sacrificial worship of the children of Israel. The covenant was of no force without these surroundings. Like the Constitution of the United States, it would be powerless but for the statutes and judgments which are its strength and support. Should the Legislative and Executive power be abolished, the constitution would be like a law with no penalty. The moral principles in the Constitution would not be abolished, because they exist independently; but if this government should be changed, and become kingly, we should not expect that our great memorial day, the 4th of July, would be kept up under the new government. While the constitution of the new might contain all the moral principles of the old, and many more, it would be entirely out of place to retain the memorial day that was given to commemorate the adoption of those principles by the old one.

This was precisely the case with the Jewish memorial rest day, in the heart of the old covenant. When the covenant was abolished, that particular memorial day, that commemorated their deliverance from the bondage of cruel taskmasters, ran out by limitation. When the new constitution, or covenant, was adopted, that very act made the old one null and void. The moral principles contained in the old did not begin with the Jews, nor end with them; they are co-extensive with the human race, and ever binding. The rest day of the Jews was not given to other nations, for the obvious reason that they were not delivered from Egyptian bondage; hence, under the new covenant, confirmed by Christ, neither Gentiles nor Jews are required to rest on the seventh day of the old covenant.

While the old covenant was in force, previous to the resurrection of Christ, all the "statutes," "judgments" and "ordinances," including all feast days, sacrifices, oblations, circumcision, passover, etc., etc., were just as binding as the Sabbath day. They could not omit any part of these without condemnation. The whole was a complete system, and all ended at the Cross. If one feast day, the Sabbath, was perpetual, so were all the rest by the same law. All the Jewish feast days were commemorative of events in the history of that people. They had their origin and end with their dispensation. They were "perpetual" during the continuance of the Jewish polity, but continued no further.

No point can be more plainly expressed than the fact that the "ten commandments," "written and engraven on stones" (2 Cor. 3: 7), was the "old" or "first covenant." As we are now living under the "new covenant," the old must of necessity be "abolished." 2 Cor. 3: 13. If the two were just alike, there would have been no occasion for the second; or, as Paul says—"If that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second." Heb. 8: 7. M. G.

KEENE TENT MEETING.

The interest in the tent-meeting at Keene, N. H., is such, that it is decided to continue it another week, until Oct. 11th. It is said the prospect in Keene has never been so encouraging before as at the present time. Members of the Methodist, Baptist, and Congregational churches come in and take an active part, and the spirit of true christian union is rapidly increasing. Quite a number have made a full consecration to Christ, and are richly blest. The audiences are large, intelligent and attentive. They are interested in the evidences of Christ's speedy coming, and holiness as a necessary preparation. Bro. M. A. Potter, the pastor of the Keene church, is a true man, who loves to defend the subject of holiness, in connection with the coming of the dear Savior. Brn. L. Boutell and I. I. Leslie have labored faithfully and with good success in the meetings. Greater things are expected as the meeting progresses.

Keene is a very pleasant city, on a plain, surrounded by sheltering hills. It contains about 8,000 inhabitants, many of whom have the luxuries of life, and do not devote any special attention to the work of preparation for the world to come. M. G.

IT is our purpose to be at the Conference in Chicago, commencing at the Green St. Tabernacle, Wednesday evening, Oct. 21st. M. G.

The Bible Echo is a religious weekly, published by Kellaway and Co., 10 Warwick Lane, Paternoster Row, London, Eng. It is filled with such articles as will interest and instruct our readers. Bro. Kellaway is struggling hard to scatter the light and truth in England. Price of the Echo $3.00 a year. If any wish to subscribe, they can send their address and money to the Crisis Office, and we will forward it to them. We can supply the numbers for June, bound together, for 25 cts. Send and get them, and thus help Bro. Kellaway. M. G.

THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD, edited by Bro. A. Lowrey, D. D., and published at No. 14 North Seventh St., Phila., by the National Campmeeting Association, for the promotion of holiness, is a superior religious weekly, and worthy of the extensive patronage it is receiving. In another column will be found the first article in the issue for Sept. 26th, headed—"The Purifying Hope." M. G.

"THE POWER OF GRACE" is the title of a new book 16 mo., of about 200 pp., from the pen of Bro. S. H. Platt, containing valuable facts in christian experience, and points in the philosophy of holiness, that cannot fail to interest every one who wishes to live a christian life. It is neatly bound in muslin, and will be sent post paid for $1.00. For sale at this office, and by the publisher, S. Harrison and Co., Brooklyn, N. Y. We fully endorse the following from another pen:—

"The well known reputation of the author is a sufficient guarantee that this important and yet novel subject is ably and profitably handled. The tobacco, opium, rum and sexual appetites, and the habits of irritability and gluttony are viewed with philosophic calmness and scientific accuracy, from the stand-point of the highest spirituality.

Ministers may find in this book facts and illustrative examples of great value to them in their ministrations, and christians will find their faith stimulated by its recitals of wonderful cures by spiritual means.

Its details of marvelous triumphs over appetite, seemingly almost miraculous, will prove full of inspiration to special workers in various spheres of christian effort, such as Crusaders' Praying Bands, Young Men's Christian Associations, and others.

It inspires hope in bosoms that have long ceased to hope.

Every victim of perverse appetite or evil habit, and every friend of such victim, should read this book." M. G.

CHRISTIAN AXIOMS.

We are much pleased with the following eight propositions, sent us by Bro. W. Wendell, Orange, Mass. We heartily endorse them as true, and in harmony with the spirit of christianity: M. G.

1. Christ and his apostles instituted one and only one Christian church.
2. All christians are members of that one church.
3. To become a christian is to become a member of that one church.
4. There is no salvation out of that one church.
5. That church is divided only into local branches; as the church at Jerusalem, the church at Antioch, etc.
6. That church has visible and invisible features.
7. Among its visible features are ministers, members, ordinances, preaching, exhortation, audible prayer, praise and singing, and all the necessary outward acts and legitimate forms used in the worship of God.
8. Among its invisible features are faith, repentance, remission, justification and all the inward graces that adorn the truly converted soul.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 13th, 1874, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

A LITTLE MORE CHEERING NEWS.

To THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brethren:—At our last meeting at "Shilo" church, I baptized two, received two into fellowship, and one to be baptized next meeting. Last Saturday held our first regular meeting with the new church, formed last month, called "Nazareth." Bro. J. J. Smith was with us, and gave us one of his best efforts on holy living; after which, we received one into the little church. At night, Bro. Stewart and Bro. Smith both preached. We trust good was done.

I learned that the Baptists and Methodists at that place had given us a few theological hot shot, and the people expected us to reply; but to the disappointment of some, and pleasure of others, we tried to speak from Gal. 5: 1—"Stand fast therefore in the liberty," etc. We had a good season, after which Bro. Smith made a talk on the subject of ordination. Then Bro. Jeremiah Stewart was duly ordained to the work of the ministry by us. We recommend Brn. D. B. Waldrop and Jere. Stewart to the lovers of Jesus, wherever their lots may be cast.

Monday morning, I met the M. E. Bro.—a good christian Bro., too—and told him I learned he had challenged any man to prove the destruction of the wicked; and if he had, I was ready for the effort. He said he did not throw it out as a challenge for debate, and wanted no debate;—that if I could refute his position to do so. He said he would defend the doctrines of the Methodist church any how. Yours in the Lord,

J. A. CARGILE.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Received July 12th, from B. R. Fellows, $5; M. George, $2. July 30th, Israel Andrew, No. Sutton, $5. These sums finished paying the expenses of my spring term of school, and contributed to the needs of two old ones, and was received as a God-send indeed. Sept. 8th, from the A. A. M. Society, $20; Sr. Veasey, $1.

To the friends of the freed people I would say, that the past summer has been one of great trial to the poor in this region, caused by terrible drouth, such as I never remember, and scarcity of labor, and that poorly paid. I feel in a measure the rest and sweetness of trusting in God, and try to teach it to others; but it takes many and many a severe lesson to get to that rest, without some murmurings and misgivings, which we who have been favored with so much light well understand. My own sad experience in unbelief and wanderings gives me deep sympathy for the ignorant and poorly instructed. This poor people, who cannot read, cannot advance much, for the want of proper guides. There are many who think they must preach, when they can scarce read a verse correctly. They may have a few good ideas, but cannot instruct. A loud tone and a good voice for singing take, and I often get discouraged. My greatest hope is with the young, and it seems as though Providence still directs my stay.

We had expected money for a free school this fall, but it turns out that 50 cts. per scholar is all that the poor colored children over six and under sixteen years of age can draw; which gives but $15 for this district, and $30 at the Point. The white children over six and under twenty, of whatever grade or nationality, can draw $1.90. This looks as though reconstruction on Christian principles is desirable. P. H. Jackman, of whom I have made mention, and who has been a helper, has gone into a large school, where he can support his family, and where he will be useful, I trust. I thought I too would have to go, but a voice within said, "If you can do good anywhere, you can here; so trust in God." I decided to go to the Point for a term, and then return and gather these scattered ones again. But the way looked dark, as there were some needed expenses to be met. Just then the gift from the Society came, which made the way clear to meet present needs, and gave me another proof that here is my field of labor. At the end of the term, I can draw $30. I was required to be examined by the Commissioner, who gave me a certificate, marked "First Class," "First Grade," for four years, which will allow me to go into any school in the county. I thought this wonderful, as he knew whom I was teaching.

These are small items, and none but friends of the poor will be interested in them. I speak of them to show how I am led along step by step. I always consider education secondary to the great gospel work for these days. But one cannot search the Scriptures if they cannot read, much less reason therefrom.

I want more of the wisdom that cometh from God, that while I am training mind, I may give here a little, and there a little, of the knowledge of God's will. There is no work so inviting as that needed in the vineyard of the Master. In that is variety of labor and variety of skill required, but all should be exerted to produce a rich harvest of fruit. Were time to continue a thousand years, there are just as many motives to labor for the good of the world as there are while believing it near to an end. Oh, it seems to me that the church universally needs an extension of consecrated sympathies, that stops not with its own, but that can extend down to the lowest depths of fallen humanity. Brethren and sisters, may God help each of us to work for Jesus. A word fitly spoken, a tract modestly given, a paper crowded with rich truth, mailed to some minister or acquaintance, may prove as rich seed.

I greatly desire the prayers of the faithful that, above all things else, wisdom may be given me to accomplish more in life's harvest field. With many of us the infirmities of age are coming o'er us unawares almost; and if Jesus comes not soon, "life's fitful fever" will be over. Oh, shall we meet beyond the river? Shall life, blessed immortal life, be ours?

Will all the friends who have so kindly thought of me, and those with whom I have held sweet intercourse in former years, accept of my heart's love. I would gladly write to each, but weakness of my eyes prevents me from using them at night, which is the most leisure time I can command. But oft does memory recall their loving smiles and faithful words and prayers.

JOTTINGS BY THE WAY WITH TENT.

Bro. Grant:—As many are interested in our mission with the Evangel Tent this season, with your consent I will make a short report. We pitched tent in Wiscasset, July 7th, a new place for our faith, with some four thousand inhabitants. Our tent was pitched on the main street, in the wickedest part of the place, near the wharves and rum shops. Great was the curiosity to know what we expected to do in such a place. Our meeting commenced, and they soon saw we were their friends and preached the Bible to them in its literal fulfillment.

We continued meetings nearly every afternoon and evening for five weeks, with the best of attendance and interest. The congregation would vary from one hundred to seven hundred all through the evening meetings. We found several were with us in faith in the place, who had kept their light hid, not knowing each other. Our meetings brought them out, and they identified themselves with the truth and were blest. Others embraced the truth. One man said he had received more light from the Bible in a few weeks than in all his life before. An Episcopal sister said she never could see anything that had reality in it before.

Several were reclaimed, and a number were hopefully converted to God. About thirty confessed they believed that we had preached the truth. People came to our meeting who had not attended meeting before from ten to twenty years. They showed us much kindness and respect. Many heard for the first time of Jesus' coming at hand and those signs that should precede the event, and in all probability the last.

The judgment only will reveal the result of our effort in Wiscasset. The brethren and sisters joined together to hold prayer-meetings twice a week. Some who were interested lived in other States and places. But He who will soon send his angels to gather those that have made covenant with him by sacrifice, will gather all his children into his everlasting kingdom. We will be there by his grace. Lord, help, is my prayer.

Mt. Vernon, Me. H. B. SEVEY.

AN APPEAL

To the Brethren in the State of Ohio, who are looking for the appearing of Jesus, Greeting:

Dear Brethren:—At a meeting of the conference at Nevada, Ohio, last spring, it was voted that an appeal be made through the papers to call your earnest attention to the interests of the cause of Bible truth throughout the State. It is very evident that the time remaining for us to work for Jesus is but a brief period. Our Lord standeth at the door. As we look over the State and see how little is being done to herald the tidings of the coming judgment, we feel that we need a new awakening, and a spirit of arousing among us, that we may not be condemned of the Master when he comes.

There is work to be done in spreading the glorious truths of the Bible in the towns of this State, and that work is for you. Do you say, "The work is great, and we are but few"? So much the more necessity that you should do something to spread the truth. It was said of one of old, "She hath done what she could." Can it be said thus of you? If the preachers are few, and the brethren are scattered, so much the more does each one need the assurance and encouragement of his brother. Come up to Norwalk, Huron Co., Oct. 15th, and confer on what can be done.

Do you wish to obtain preachers to work among you, and sow the seed of truth that God has given this generation? Then awake to the work, and manifest your willingness to use the little means God has given you in that direction, and God will surely bless the work. Come up to Norwalk Oct. 15th.

Do you not feel as though there is need of more active and earnest effort on the part of those who love God's word, to make known the light of its sacred pages among the people? Surely this is the truth, and every brother and sister has a responsibility in the matter. We do not propose to do great things in the eyes of men, but we want to do what we can, and we want the cooperation of every one in the ranks. Come up to Norwalk, Oct. 15th, sure.

We are few in number, and scattered over this great and populous State, and we are not doing half what we should do. We are too indifferent to Christ's work. We do not need organization so much as we need energy. Let there be a general rally to this annual conference, and let us obtain a baptism of power and zeal that shall enable us to be "faithful in that which is least," so that we may have it said of us, "Well done." Do not fail to come up to Norwalk, Huron Co., Oct. 15th, and come to consecrate yourself to the work of Jesus Christ in all things.

FRANK BURR,

Correspondence.

From Bro. Geo. Thomson.

Dear Bro. Grant and Couch, and beloved readers of the Crisis:—As many are anxious to know of my condition I will try to make a brief report. Since my last letter I have been sometimes better, and then at times worse. I have lately had a very severe spell which brought me down very low, but the dear Savior is bringing me up some again. Praise his dear name!

It is now over two years since I stood on my feet, and I am not able to leave my bed except when lifted out. My sufferings are much, but I have great peace. By the material aid received from kind friends in the Western states and Burnes Valley camp-meetings. I have been sustained through the summer. I pray that the Lord may reward them. I wish also to acknowledge the receipt of $5 from kind friends in Edinboro, Penn., through Bro. M. Clure. God bless the kind donors. I have had a very comfortable and pleasant home in the kind family of Bro. and Sr. Carter. I do feel that the Lord will bless them for their christian kindness to me in a time of need. But it seems in the order of Providence that I am to be homeless again, as Bro. Carter's family are about emigrating to a comparatively unsettled portion in the northern part of the State, where he may find employment for their large family of boys. The prospect for me at present is that I shall have to hire a small house, and have my eldest daughter to keep house, besides my daughter Sarah, who takes care of me, and has to be with me most of the time.

I am in the hands of the Lord. "He doeth all things well." I am but a poor waiting pilgrim. O come! dear Savior, come! Still remember me in your prayers. Yours waiting for Jesus.

Prairie du Sac, Wis.

From W. Deverell.

Dear Brethren:—I am still trying to finish the work that my heavenly Father has called me to do. Are we really in the winding up of this dispensation? If so, what a solemn thought—all to be over soon; our work to be closed up; a day of settlement. Yes, the scrutinizing eye of the Judge will then be turned upon us. Our past history of faithfulness or unfaithfulness will then reappear, to approve or condemn us. Our hearts, filled with heavenly zeal, or chilling lukewarmness, will then decide our claims to the felicities of a celestial paradise; for we shall then continue "holy still," or "filthy still."

Are we indeed nearing a day of such magnitude? Are we truly living in the closing hours of the last generations of the Gentile times? Thus it appears to me. We cannot evade the conclusion that such is the case. Then what is our duty? If the Master is about to return, how should we improve these closing hours? If we have been remiss in duty in days gone by, should we not begin now to do the will of Christ? I can assure you that believing in a correct doctrine will not save you; you must develop character. Let us go to work for God, and pluck men as brands from the burning. The hours fly; will we improve them? The closing hours of this age are upon us; shall we squander them in idleness? Oh, sound out the cry—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" and do it with devoted hearts and earnest minds.

I believe that the evil around us will end in a fearful apostasy and in terrible judgments. We should stand apart from all which God has doomed, renouncing all principles that are not of God. We should diligently make known the special truth which the times require. Let the invitation to come to the water of life be clear and earnest, and the warning of the coming woes be faithful and tender; then we may hope through God's blessing by all means to save some, who shall be owned by the Lord in the day of his glorious appearing.

Obituaries

ALLEN. In New York City, July 18th, 1874, Sr. Mary, aged thirty-three years, wife of Bro. Edward Allen, and eldest daughter of Bro. Eli and Sr. Sarah Kenyon, of Woodstock, Ct.

The subject of this notice was an earnest christian lady, having been a member of the Baptist church for many years. She was possessed of those noble traits of character which endeared her to all who knew her, and won for her a large circle of friends, both at home and abroad. But "her sun has gone down whilst it is yet day." She has fallen in the triumphs of faith. Death had no terrors for her, yet to live for the comfort and joy of her dear family was her choice; nevertheless, sustained by the blessed hope of living again, when Jesus comes, she yielded without a murmur. May God, by his Spirit and grace, comfort and sustain the hearts of the dear husband, children, parents, brothers and sisters, in this deep affliction; and may they each be so prepared, that when Christ shall swallow up death in victory, and bring again the dear one from the dead, they may live on an unbroken family, forever in that world, "where adieus are sounds unknown." P. S. BUTLER.

MAYHEW. In Savoy, Mass., March 8th, 1874, at her mother's house, Mrs. Mary Mayhew, of dropsy, after long weeks of pain, aged about fifty-six.

Sister Mayhew had spent much of her time from the age of fifteen years in nursing the sick, often taking long walks through storm and snow when it was thought unfit for horses to travel the road. After a very hard day's work, watching by the sick bed many nights in succession, receiving little or no compensation for her faithful attendance; while her housework at home lay undone and running to waste, has she often took her hands from the bread-dish or wash-tub, when called for, taking a handful of roots and herbs, with syrups and pills, and be absent for days together, and on returning could hardly get her work begun again, when another call took her away to the sick, who were ever eager to behold her pilgrim face, or listen to her prayers, which were mixed well with the roots she gave for their relief. Sister Mayhew had lived a very devoted christian life from girlhood. With the poet we can exclaim:

"Peaceful be thy silent slumbers, Peaceful in the grave so low."

TAYLOR. Drowned, in Woodstock, Ct., Aug. 22nd, 1874, Bertie A., only son of John E. and Emma L. Taylor, of Watertown, Mass., aged five years.

"They shall come again from the land of the enemy." H. DAVIS.

GLOVER. In Exeter, N. H., Aug. 25th, 1874, Sr. Abby A. Glover, wife of Andrew J. Glover, aged thirty-eight years.

Sr. Glover met with a sad death, while trying to save her children from their burning house, on the night of the 25th of August. She and her husband had succeeded in rescuing them all, yet she, supposing there was one more, went back into the house for it, and the smoke overcame her, and she was consumed with the house.

Sr. Glover was a true christian, a kind wife, and a devoted mother; suddenly she has been snatched from among us, but we trust she safely sleeps in Jesus, and will come forth in the morning of the resurrection, clothed with immortality and eternal life. She leaves a husband and six children to mourn her loss. May much grace be given them in this deep affliction. WM. C. STEWART.

DAVIDSON. In Winterport, Maine, Aug. 10th, 1874, Betsey, wife of Sewell Davidson, aged sixty-three years.

A humble christian and a faithful and beloved wife, she fell asleep in Jesus, and leaves our brother feeble in health, and broken in spirit, but hoping in Jesus, and waiting for the resurrection. Funeral sermon by the writer, from Rev. 21: 14. F. A. BAKER.

TIBBETS.—In Hermon, Maine, Sept. 20th, 1874, John H. Tibbets, aged seventeen years and two months.

He was an excellent and promising young man. His sudden death is a terrible affliction to the fond parents, and brothers and sisters. Funeral sermon by the writer, from Lam. 3: 27. F. A. BAKER.

EASTMAN. In Sunapee, N. H., Sept. 24th, Ezra S. Eastman, aged fifty-three years and nine months.

He believed death to be a sleep from which he should be awakened to dwell with Christ forever when sin and death are no more. Sermon by Eld. Moody, of North Sutton, from the text found in 2 Tim. 4: 7.

WHEELER. In Acworth, N. H., Sept. 17th, 1874, of consumption, Sr. Marion, wife of Bro. Warren D. Wheeler, and daughter of Bro. John S. Simonds, aged twenty-seven years and four months.

Our sister sleeps in Jesus. Funeral services attended by W. W. SUTHERLAND.

AN IMITATOR OF FATHER HYACINTHE.—An old Catholic priest in Switzerland is about to follow Father Hyacinthe's example, abandoning celibacy.—St. Ange Lievre of Biel, in announcing his betrothal to a Protestant lady, says: "I marry because I wish to remain an honorable man. In the sixteenth century it was a proverbial expression to say as 'corrupt as a priest,' and this might be said to-day. I marry, therefore, because I wish to get out of the Ultramontane slough."

During the last two years, sixty-seven Roman Catholic priests have been convicted of immorality in France and Switzerland. In view of such facts, he says it is right time to restore by marriage the good name of the Romish priesthood which the misconduct of too many of its members have covered with infamy.

Notices.

THE next Maine Central Quarterly Meeting will be held at Belgrade Mills, commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 22d, and continue over the following Sunday. A general invitation is given to brethren and sisters to unite with us in preparing a people for the coming of Jesus. Homes provided for all. Call on Charles Austin, Wm. Hersom, C. H. Kelley, Edwin J. Farnham, F. E. Blaisdell, and others. Per order, H. B. SEVEY.

HOOSICK VALLEY CONFERENCE.—The annual meeting of the Hoosick Valley Adv. Chris. Conference will be held with the church in Hoosick, N. Y., commencing Oct. 21st, 1874, and continue over the following Sunday. Particulars hereafter. A. W. SIBLEY, President.

WESTERN CONFERENCE.—A General Religious Conference for the promotion of piety among believers, and conversion of unbelievers, will be held in the Green Street Tabernacle, Chicago, Ill., commencing on Wednesday, Oct. 21st, at 7½ P. M., and continuing over the following Lord's day. It is expected that Elds. Miles Grant, S. G. Mathewson, and John Couch, from the East, will attend this meeting. We invite all to attend who can come, from far and near, and we hope all who come will bring with them a holy zeal for God and Jesus Christ. We specially invite brethren and sisters in the west to come up to this feast, and help in the cause of Christ. Let there be a general rally. For the church, FRANK BURR, Pastor.

THE EVANGEL TENT is pitched in Jefferson, at the head of the Pond. Meetings will continue as long as thought best. Steamboat connects with Knox and Lincoln R. R. at Bay Bridge Station. H. B. SEVEY.

CONFERENCE AT MELVIN VILLAGE, N. H.—The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Melvin Village, commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 22d, to hold over the following Sabbath. Brn. E. A. Stockman, J. Parsons, and D. Churchill are expected to preach the word. A generous invitation is extended to all. T. W. PIPER.

THE MAINE S. A. C. CONFERENCE will hold its next annual session with the church at Kennebunkport, commencing Tuesday, Oct. 13th. We hope for a good representation, from different parts of the State, at this meeting.
S. K. PARTRIDGE, President.
W. H. MITCHELL, Secretary.

A TWO DAYS MEETING will be held at Darien, Genesee Co., N. Y., commencing Friday evening, Oct. 16th, it being the twelfth Annual Meeting at that place. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend. Teams will be at Croft's Station at three o'clock P. M. to meet the cars from the east, and six o'clock P. M. from the west.
In behalf of the brethren, C. W. LOW.

THE next annual session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held with the church in Bristol, commencing Wednesday evening, Oct. 14th, to continue over the following Lord's day. We hope there will be a general gathering at this meeting. G. L. WHITE, Secretary.

HAVING supplied the church in East Concord one half of the time during the past year, I intend closing my labors with them on the first Sunday in Nov. After which time I shall be at liberty to labor in places as the way opens.
ENOCH MORRILL, South Deerfield, N. H.

I EXPECT, if the Lord will, to visit Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Mass., and perhaps other States, the coming winter. Any one wishing an appointment, or protracted meeting for their place, please drop me a line on a postal card, with a one cent stamp on it, to Richmond, P. Q., Box 31, and I will endeavor to supply them as far as I can. Our work is almost done, and soon the Lord will cut it short in righteousness. F. M. DRAKE.

TO THE BRETHREN IN KANSAS.—I would respectfully call your attention to the following proposition.

Resolved, That the churches throughout this State of Kansas call a special conference to meet on or about the 23d of Oct., 1874 to be held where there is a body of believers, and as near central among the churches now organized as circumstances will admit of. That the meeting be composed of ministers of the Kansas Advent Christian Conference, and delegates from the different churches; also that all lovers of the cause throughout the State be invited to attend.

The object of this meeting to be for the special benefit, and cheering up of all those interested in the proclamation of Bible truths, and to devise plans for a more vigorous fall and winter campaign. That the meeting commence on Friday, and continue over the following Sabbath.

Now I simply make the above proposition as one among the many interested in the cause of truth and its general prosperity. And I desire that all who read this that are interested, immediately write to me, giving their opinion in full, Also that the churches who desire the meeting to be held with them, and are willing to feed the hungry ones during the meeting, mention it in their letter. Respectfully, V. F. HUNT, Box 104, Wellington, Sumner Co., Kansas.

NOTICE.—As I expect my labors in this section will soon close, I would say I shall be ready to go and preach "the gospel of the kingdom" anywhere, as the Lord may open the way, the coming fall and winter. Any wishing to correspond with me can direct for the present to A. F. MOORE, Linden, Genesee Co., N. Y.

I HAVE resigned my pastoral charge at New Hartford, Iowa, for the present, and removed to Raymond, Iowa. J. W. BURROUGHS.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—For Eld. Geo. Thomson, from a Friend (by Eld. J. S. White) $5.00. A Friend—(R.)—$10.00.
For Eld. W. Kellaway—A Friend, $3.00.
GEO. T. ADAMS.

TENT MEETING.—The Mass. Advent Mission Tent will be pitched in Fall River, Mass., Friday, Oct. 9th. Meeting in the evening, at half-past seven o'clock; also afternoons and evenings, over two Sabbaths, and as much longer as duty may demand. This is a new field. Our dependence is upon the Lord and his people for help at this meeting. Come, dearly beloved in this region, do not fail to be at this meeting, with a mind to work. You can preach, pray, or sing; and each of these is wanted. Come, then, and help.

Our last two tent meetings have reached the people wonderfully. I have seen nothing like it for ten years. There is an ear to hear, and the Spirit of the Lord accompanies the word.

I would say to those who have pledges unpaid, and all who can help us now, they will aid us greatly by sending their remittances to Bro. C. Goodrich, our Treasurer, Crisis office, Boston, Mass. Do this at once if you can. The Lord bless and help now. L. BOUTELL.

DEARLY BELOVED, the Mass. Mission Tent is in the field. We have no funds in the treasury. Shall it stop, while the calls are being made upon us, for lack of means? L. BOUTELL.

TENT MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a tent meeting at or near Elliott Depot, Me., commencing Saturday evening, Oct. 17th, and hold over Sunday, Oct. 18th, and onward as interest may demand. We expect this will be our last for the season, and we hope it may be the best. Come and help in this meeting.
ENOCH MORRILL.

TO VERMONTERS.—At our annual conference at Bethel, the State Committee were urged to carry the gospel of the kingdom into every new field which opened a door, and especially to offer a week of labor for any five dollars pledged by an isolated brother or sister living in a new field. This was to encourage individual effort and sacrifice on the part of the isolated. We want to hear immediately from those places where labors are desired, that we may make due arrangements to meet the demands. If you are too poor to raise five dollars, and yet the door is open for a meeting, write us just the same as though you raised the money. Write to me at Waterbury, Vt., or to A. A. Hoyt, Plainfield, Vt. Write full particulars of circumstances, people, time, and place. Write soon.
H. F. CARPENTER, President of Conference.

DISCUSSION.—There will be a discussion held in Waverly, N. Y., commencing Monday evening, Oct. 12th, between Dr. J. G. Fish, affirmative, and Eld. J. W. Taylor, negative, of the following resolution: "Resolved, that the Bible teaches the immortality of man, and his continued intercourse with the inhabitants of earth after the death of the natural body." The discussion is to continue five evenings. J. W. T.

OHIO CONFERENCE.—The annual session of the Ohio State Conference will be held, the Lord willing, with the church in Norwalk, Huron Co., O., commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 15th, and continue over the following Sabbath. This will be an important meeting for the cause of truth in this State. Let every A. C. Church in the State appoint delegates without fail; also let all who love the appearing of our Lord in glory, and the resurrection of the dead, come. All are welcome, and will be provided for.
E. MCCULLOCH, President.

THE DELAWARE DISTRICT A. C. CONFERENCE is hereby called to meet and hold its second semi-annual session at the Second Advent Christian Hall, on Seventh street, below Poplar, Philadelphia, Pa., commencing Friday evening, Nov. 13th, and continue over the Sabbath. This conference embraces the District of Columbia, Delaware, New Jersey, and Eastern Pennsylvania. It is earnestly hoped that every church sympathizing with us will be represented, either by letter or delegates. Every church or religious body co-operating with this conference, is entitled to one delegate, and an additional delegate for every ten members. All letters of correspondence for the conference can be addressed to Edwin King, 1716 Francis Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
A. G. JAYNE, President.
EDWIN KING, Secretary.

DEDICATION.—There will be a dedication of the Advent and Univeesalist Union meeting-house in Milo, Me., Oct. 16th and 17th. J. R. Hall and other preachers are expected. We extend a cordial invitation to all to attend.
For the church, W. T. LIVERMORE.

THE first session of the Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will meet with the church at Brunswick (Gardiner school-house), Thursday, Oct. 22d, to hold over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, to work for the Lord and to save sinners.
H. D. REED, President.
H. S. MITCHELL, Secretary.

THE Ministerial Committee having been called to investigate difficulties at Rochester Village, N. H., hereby recommend that all ministers who are members of the New Hampshire Conference decline to minister to either party until a full investigation can be had, or until the next session of the conference. E. A. STOCKMAN.

THE Lord willing, we will commence a meeting at Woodhull, Steuben Co., N. Y., Oct. 29th, and continue over the following Sunday. Hope the brethren and sisters will pray for us, that good may be done in the name of the Lord. A general invitation is given to attend.
JOHN T. ONGLEY.
E. H. EGGLESTON.

J. G. SMITH and J. W. WHITE will preach in Farmington, N. H., two Sundays in each month, as long as it seems duty. J. G. Smith the first, and J. W. White the third.

P. S. As there is an appointment for the first Sunday in Nov., J. G. Smith will be there the second. Will preachers coming to Farmington please notice this arrangement. J. G. SMITH.

THE Second Advent Church of Philadelphia, of which Eld. G. A. Brown is pastor, has removed from the hall at the corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, to their new hall on Seventh St., below Poplar.

THE first quarterly meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Traer, Tama Co., commencing Oct. 9th, to continue over the following Sunday. All of like precious faith are invited to attend, and the ministers who desire the union of christians. E. A. MARSH, Secretary.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting held in Salisbury, N. H., at the Union meeting-house, commencing Friday, Nov. 27th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands.
C. H. FLETCHER.
D. F. LEAVITT.

THE Second Quarterly Meeting for the Eastern District of Wisconsin A. C. Conference will be held with the church at Fairfield, Sauk Co., Wis., commencing in the evening of Oct. 23d, and holding over the Lord's day. Every church in the district is requested to send one or more delegates. We hope to see a large gathering. Come in the name of the Lord, and to work for him.

THAT BOOK.

"History of the Second Advent Message, Doctrine and People."

This work is now ready for all. It contains the history of the rise and progress of the proclamation of the Second Advent of Christ, near at hand, from A. D. 1820 to the present time, in America, Europe, Asia, and Africa; with sketches of the great reformations accompanying it; of many of the chief pioneers associated with it; the great opposers, and their futile efforts to defeat the work. Records of its rapid progress, and of many of the remarkable manifestations of God's guiding hand in the work. Discussions, lectures, sermons, dialogues, and chief points of doctrine advocated by the various classes of believers in the Lord's soon coming.

Records and tables of the prophetic times of Daniel and John, as advocated by the chief Protestant writers, all of whom terminate the periods between 1836 and 1880. A sketch of Luther and his times, compared with ours. His portrait, and portraits of twenty Second Advent pioneers, with discourses on Daniel 2nd, 7th and 8th chapters, illustrated with fine wood cuts, with much other valuable matter.

Our subscribers will be supplied at prices agreed on when orders with cash (and 20 cts. for postage) are received. All who wish to buy the work will be supplied, postpaid, at $3.50. As our object is not to make money, but to have this message and its history go as far and as cheap as possible, we put it as low as we can. We have endeavored to make it a book that all who are really associated in this great movement will buy, and that real inquirers will think best to buy. The book contains 711 octavo pages, neatly bound in cloth, gilt side.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject.

Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express. AG'T.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

For sale at this Office. AG'T.

JUDGE NOT.

S. S.

How do we know what hearts have vilest sin?
How do we know?
Many, like sepulchres, are foul within,
Whose outward garb is spotless as the snow,
And many may be pure we think not so.
How near to God the souls of such have been,
What mercy secret penitence may win—
How do we know?

How can we tell who sinned more than we?
How can we tell?
We think our brother walked guiltily,
Judging him in self-righteousness. Ah, well!
Perhaps had we been driven through the hell
Of his untold temptations, we might be Less upright in our daily walk than he—
How can we tell?

Dare we condemn the ills that others do?
Dare we condemn?
Their strength is small, their trials not a few,
The tide of wrong is difficult to stem,
And if to us more clearly than to them
Is given knowledge of the good and true,
More do they need our help and pity too—
Dare we condemn?

God help us all, and lead us day by day,
God help us all!
We cannot walk alone the perfect way,
Evil allures us, tempts us, and we fall;
We are but human, and our power is small;
Not one of us may boast, and not a day
Rolls o'er our heads, but each hath need to say—
God bless us all!

Salem. June 4th, 1874.

TO THE A. A. MISSION BOARD.

Since I wrote you last, the Lord has been with me in adversity, and in the light of better days. Our little band at Bethesda is striving for the kingdom, and, thank the Lord, is getting from under the cloud that had for some time overshadowed them. We have had several additions since my last report, and love abounds, and prejudice is now dying out there.

Bro. Cargile and myself united eight brethren and sisters into an organization at Oak Grove, about four miles south of Stephenson. A minister of the Primitive Baptists (and who, I am told, voted for Bro. Cargile's exclusion), was among the number. He preached several times with us, and with a happy effect. He felt *un*shackled. We hope he (Bro. J. M. Stewart) will be useful among us. He is tender, persuasive and impressive in his preaching; in a word, he gets hold of the people, and holds on to them. Brn. Stewart, Cargile, and myself continued the meeting several days, and left a good impression; so good, that a Methodist minister, who has been cool toward Bro. Cargile, invited him to join him in a protracted meeting at the same place, a few days afterward, which he did. I am told that they had one of the most precious revivals. How many professed hope in Christ, I have not yet learned.

From this meeting I went home and rested one day. On Aug. 22nd, I gathered together all the tracts I had, with my fill of the World's Crisis, and A. C. Times, and with a luggage of about forty pounds, I set out on foot across the mountains, for a journey over a new field, about thirty miles.

First, to my monthly meeting at Bethesda. While trudging up a mountain with my load, all dripping with perspiration, I was overtaken by a heavy rain storm, without any shelter. The lightning played before me with awful grandeur, while heaven's artillery made the earth to bound beneath my feet. How impressive the scene! Wet in every thread, and shoes full of water, I proceeded till I reached my appointment. Had meetings twice a day for three weeks. Bro. Cargile was with me a part of the time. Bro. Waldrop and two Methodist ministers labored with us in the true spirit of love.

During this meeting, by request of the church, we set apart to the work of the ministry our young Bro., David B. Waldrop, whom we hope the Lord has chosen to bear the message of the gospel to many.

On the night of the 24th, Bro. Stewart preached for us, and proposed to join me in the burden of my contemplated labor on this trip. We set out for Sulphur Spring, where I had preached four times a few weeks ago. Learned that a Baptist minister, lately from college, made quite a display of his powers in exposing Adventism to scorn and ridicule. In 1868, when I was preaching with but few to cheer me and bid me a Godspeed, this same man was one of the few who did cheer me by seeming to receive the the truth gladly. He had not been to college then. We fouud but a small congregation out. Tried to preach the truth in love, with no reference to the recent display. At the conclusion, the people left us in the house without an invitation to dinner, or to rest with them, we having announced to preach again at the same place at night. We came back on our route three and a half miles to an acquaintance, and had a dinner, for which by this time our appetites was keen. Night brought us a larger assembly, who seemed interested in our discourse on the signs of Jesus' coming soon. Had a cordial invitation home with a brother, who gave us true hospitality.

26th. It is from ten to twelve miles to our appointment at twelve o'clock to-day. Without a guide or sunshine, amid the showers and murky heavens, we thread our way through a wild desert of unbroken forest, across deep ravines and rocky bluffs, and winding to every point of the compass, (as it proved), we got bewildered, out of the way, and delayed. Reached our place an hour behind time, all wet and exhausted. The people had met and gone, except a few to whom an office-seeker was holding forth. Wet, warm, and then chilled, and prostrate in mind and body, I only hung up my prophetic chart, discoursed a short time, and promised to meet with them at night. They dispersed without inviting me to dinner or lodging; but a very poor man seeing the situation, offered such as he had; and feeling grateful for his kindness, we accepted, and enjoyed it too. At night we had a small assembly, but all was attention, while we illustrated by the "Great Image." After furnishing them with tracts, they left us again to look out for ourselves, but the poor brother proposed to divide his scanty portion with us. We accepted his very humble fare.

27th. Cloudy, with prospect of rain soon. Our next appointment was some eight or ten miles away. We had a mountain to ascend again. As we reached the top of the mountain, the rain poured in heavy torrents. Our clothes were saturated, and shoes brimfull of water. We saw no signs of human habitation. A small trail overhung with brush led us to an old dilapidated vacant house. We stopped and kindled a fire, and waited for hours on account of the rain; got dry, and set out only to get wet again.

We reached the place for our appointment, and learned that there was opposition to our "heresy" being preached in the house. Can't stay with Mr.—,Bro. (?) A. He has heard of the "old heretic," and "hates him as he does the devil." Bro. B. once wanted to hear me, but since he had heard so much of what I had preached, did not care about it, but ordered dinner for us. Then questioned us for about two hours, and concluded he would like to hear us. He proposed to go with us to a Methodist meeting in the vicinity at night, and see if the Methodist minister would let us preach. It turned out that he was the same who had labored with me last Sunday night, and I with him at his meeting last Monday. We lectured from the prophetic chart, Dan. 2nd chap. When I finished, Mr. B. rose and stated thnt he was "glad that he had come out to hear for himself." "That these people had been grossly misrepresented in this section." "That he wanted us to come again and preach several days there." The minister present volunteered a statement that he had often heard me seven years ago, and that my views as expressed tonight were about the very same as seven years ago.

28th. Rained last night almost without ceasing. This morning it pours in unceasing torrents. Failed to meet our appointment. In the afternoon we started for the next appointment, some twelve or fifteen miles off. Had not made two miles when the rain resumed. For a few miles we took the rain, and waded the flooded streams, till we found a comfortable lodging with a kind-hearted stranger. May the Lord reward him.

29th. We are now behind time, too far to fulfill our appointment to-day at Goose Pond beyond the Tenn. river; but we must keep moving. Our tracts and papers are much diminished, and our burden is lighter. We arrived just in time to get out a little congregation for a night meeting. Oh, what a greeting! What smiling faces! What hearty shaking of the hand! It fills me with joy, and Bro. Stewart too is happy at the contrast.

How have these stood the storm since we left them in June? Alas! the enemy had assailed them, and some have turned back; some hesitate, and some of the precious ones have become alienated by feuds of the devil's creation, producing discord and jarring dissension. This clearly indicates the importance of following up our labors.

Since our series of meetings with this people in June, the Orthodox preachers have told the people of our awful heresy. Many have decided never to hear us again. Some suppose, from the many attacks made upon our teaching, that we are by this time stirred up to the fighting point, and come out to hear that; but we found a better work in trying to persuade them to love Jesus, and they will love his people. They were surprised. They told others, and the congregation increases from day to day. At first, many church members took their seats near the remotest entrance; next time a little nearer, and so on, until like drops of water coming in contact, they finally mingled into one.

We continued to labor day and night, the Lord blessing Bro. Stewart's labors, and filling our hearts with love and zeal, until we killed the feud, and brought both parties to confess their faults, and forgive one another, as brethren should do. O! I felt, and so did Bro. Stewart, that we were more than compensated for all the toils of this trip. We labored nine days and nights. At the close, there was one hopeful conversion, and about thirty or more persons, who, with a deep sense of their need of a Savior, gave us their hand as a pledge that henceforth they would seek the kingdom, and desired to have a place in our prayers. May they never look back is our earnest prayer. Amen. Bro. Stewart promises to be useful in the cause. We now have four ministers identified with us in Alabama, and others are struggling into the light. For about five years I stood alone, the Lord only being my helper.

I have just heard of four Baptist ministers in Cherokee county, Ala., who are preaching the coming of the Lord soon, all the result of reading some of our tracts that found their way over there. I am out of tracts again, but hope you will send me more soon. Bro. R. H. Gresham is expecting me to visit Ashville, N. C., soon. I am willing to go, but it is too far for me to walk, as I have been doing. I would risk a few weeks there, and in Anderson, S. C., my native place, and where I began to preach more than forty years ago, if I had ten dollars to start on by R. R. This amount would put me through to friends, who, I think, would help me on without expense. Then I shall be pleased to answer Bro. Geo. M. Prime's call to El Dorado, Ark., during the winter, if the Lord opens the way.

Finally, dear brethren, I wish to say that though I write so much, it is not to appear in print, but that you may have the information before you. I am hard up for food and raiment of the plainest style, and make heavy sacrifices of family comforts for the cause I love; but I do not wish to appear before the public as a beggar. For the last nine months I have received from the people among whom I have labored nine dollars and ten cents; and have spent more than that in railroad travel and other expenses. I counted all the cost before I left old orthodoxy. My affections are on things above the transitory pleasures and comforts of this life. Soon I hope to meet you all in the "sun-bright clime," where we will rest from our labors. Amen. J. J. SMITH.

Long Island, Ala.

READER, do you ever try to be good to others? If you do, remember to tell them about Christ. Tell the young, tell the poor, tell the aged, tell the ignorant, tell the sick, tell the dying—tell them all about Christ. Tell them of his power, and tell them of his love. Tell them of his doings, and tell them of his feelings. Tell them of what he has done for the chief of sinners. Tell them what he is willing to do to the last day of time. Tell it them over and over again. Never be tired of speaking of Christ. Say to them broadly and fully, freely and unconditionally, unreservedly, and undoubtingly, "Come unto Christ as the penitent thief did—come unto Christ, and you shall be saved."—Ryle.

THE vast ocean overflows the lowest sands and the highest rocks. So does pardoning grace cover every transgression of the penitent believer.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Our National Campmeeting was appointed one week earlier, on account of wood worms that have appeared in all that section of country for two years past. One week earlier shunned part of this curse, as they were small, and did not come down from the trees; but two weeks later, they took possession of the grove; so while this curse lasts, we shall have our meeting the first part of August. The oldest people never saw the like before. Our meeting was good, better than ever before, in many respects. We had no rowdyism, and no one tried to ride a hobby into the desk; and the social and prayer-meetings were seasoned up well with grace and power, which the colored people call "the gravy of the meeting."

After gathering up payments as usual, and settling up, I started for Alton Bay meeting, which has outgrown all of its relatives in size and number of wooden houses. There are some three hundred. Some are 30x40, and stand very near together; and if the devil does not cause them to be burned down before he is burned up, it will be a miracle. The meeting is well managed by some of our best business brethren, and was going well when I left. I hope it will not get the dropsy, for it is quite too big now.

Saturday, I went up to Portland, as usual, to get rid of the great throng brought by cars and steamboat for a Sabbath ride only, as all the worshipers were there before. I am getting skeptical about holding our campmeetings over two Sabbaths, for a number of reasons. (1) The meetings are small at first, knowing it holds over two Sabbaths. (2) It is too long to keep up a religious interest, when people are tired out. (3) The congregations the last Sabbath do not come to worship, and but few preachers want to preach, and few want to hear. Suppose we commence Tuesday evening, and go over till the next Thursday morning. It would give time enough, and save such a rush and confusion on the last day. It is a noted fact, that all large campmeetings are assuming a form of a picnic, and should be avoided among us as much as possible, especially the running of cars on Sunday, which we have stopped at the Springfield meeting, and saved a lot of flood-wood from drifting in upon us. More time and money spent in smaller meetings would do more good. To have twenty to forty preachers idle two Sabbaths is not economy for God's cause in these days. Think of it, brethren, and act wisely.

Monday, I went to Brunswick. Found Bro. Storer's home free as usual. I saw the the old eagle's nest I have spoken of years before. It is an ancient affair, and there are many very interesting incidents connected with these great scriptural birds. If one gets killed, the other gets a mate in a very short time. But two deaths have occurred for eighty years in this family of eagles. They are kings of the air, as the lion is of the forest. One of them attacked a flock of geese, and an old grandfather gander, belonging to a Mr. Tibbets, attacked the eagle, and a hard battle ensued, when the eagle got the victory, but lost his game, which fled while the battle was going on, which a number of witnesses saw with great interest.

Tuesday, to Bath, Me. Here I found a report had come from Richmond that I was worth twenty thousand dollars, and they did not want me to come there. This was got up by the enemy. I will say, I thank God that in his providence, and unexpected good luck in the rise of property, and finding a quarry of stone, I have a little property in my old age; not one-fourth the above sum, besides my liabilities; and as a steward of God, I pledge myself to give one-tenth to the poor and God's cause. I did not get it by speculating, or by preaching. It was a God-send, all of a sudden, and I am glad of it; and if every Advent preacher had a home, no man would refuse to hear him preach on that account. Most of them had a home before. I had, and I never coveted it. These are the facts, and I will pass on, doing my duty by going into some destitute places, as I have, and paying my own expenses, which I could not have done a short time ago. Some others know I have given back a part of the collection to the poor within six months. I mention these facts of my temporal affairs to keep nothing hid that God has done for me.

At Bath, I had a hard time. The meeting had been transferred from a good meeting-house to a tent among the rabble, and near a music stand. When the band played, we had to stop preaching. Next to Sabbattisville. Good attention. The truth had a good effect. Next to Lewiston. Here they appreciate an evening's preach from an old evangelist, as in most other places. Many strangers were out, and were interested in the truth they heard. The church is struggling against opposition and inconsistencies, but a few mean to live eternally.

Sabbath, Sept. 6th, at Portland. Had a good time all day. An old sea captain said he had got hold of something that held him to God's promise, like a rope attached to the ship when he was overboard in the storms. This illustration gave life to the meeting, and there were some fifteen exhortations after preaching.

Next to South Windham, in the Baptist house, and a goodly number for the place. The truth took well with the church, and outsiders; but ignorant sectarians found fault, which was a good sign.

Next to South Casco. House full, good liberty, and attention. As usual, I went fishing, and caught a good string to carry to Mechanic Falls campmeeting. They were cooked for the preachers. As a body, they appreciated them, judging by their actions. Some was left, after twelve or fifteen had eaten, there being fifteen to twenty pounds.

An incident took place, while catching these pickerel, that will illustrate fishing for men. I hooked a good-sized one, and started him for the boat, when he run into some weeds or brush, and took off my line with the hook I valued very highly for its good service for five years. The little boy with me, with his little hook, threw in near where I had lost my hook, and he succeeded in getting him into the boat. I saw he was a large one, and asked the boy to look in his mouth, which he did, and said, "Elder, I have got the fellow with your hook in him." Sure enough. He took it out, bait and all, and I caught the rest with it. Many times, thought I, when fishing for men, some little fellow will catch a great sinner, that has got loose from an Elder's hook, and save him. So little hooks will sometimes do great good.

Next, from the campmeeting at Mechanic Falls, which was very good, to Biddeford, Me. We had three good meetings Sabbath, with good attention and good results, as outsiders acknowledged the truth. One preacher happened in, and said he felt the good Spirit as soon as he got in.

Next to Bonny Eagle and Steep Falls. Very good attendance, especially of outsiders. Most of the people are poor, and work for a living. The land is very poor.

Next to Hollis Centre, fifteen miles, which finished up my wagon riding, which has been over one hundred miles in ten days. I have caught over one hundred pounds of fish in the different streams. I preached the last evening. But few out, on account of rain. One man got offended with me for disappointing them a year ago. The trains did not make connection. I was not to blame. I was told he has held a grudge ever since against me.

Next to East Rochester, and heard the old-fashioned singing and tunes. We had a good time with them, talking over our past mercies, and viewing the reward near. Next to Portsmouth, Sabbath. There was a full house, and good attention. This is one of the old, tried places, but most of the old stock of warriors are getting disabled; yet the truth stands, and has an effect on the outsiders. Also at Elliot, there was a good attendance. Monday evening over one hundred were out and gave the best of attention. Also at Rye Tuesday evening. Wednesday evening at Seabrook. I looked at a location for a local campmeeting, if the Lord does not come before next July is out. This is within fifty rods of the depot, about twenty from the chapel, and about seventy-five rods from the salt water. It is a good grove, on the Eastern R. R., six miles east of Newburyport. We had an excellent meeting with them in the evening. Some came five miles, and got doubly paid, so they said.

Next to Haverhill. Found a good state of religious interest. All united in one thing; i. e., getting ready for the coming of the Lord. The work is going well through the country. Thank the Lord. Let us all do what we can. HIRAM MUNGER.

WAITING FOR MORNING.

Waiting for morning! O weary soul,
Shout to be glad! it will soon be light!
Nothing can conquer the onward roll,
Morning must follow the gloomiest night.

Waiting for morning! Thy will be done,
Merciful Father. To wake or sleep,
Patient I'll wait till the victory's won,—
"Lord, I pray thee my soul to keep."

WHICH IS WORTH THE MOST?

J. W. THOMAS.

"Save a soul from death." JAMES 5:20.

Which is worth the most, a man, or a woodchuck? I think it was Daniel Webster, the great statesman, who made one of his most eloquent and successful speeches, when a boy, pleading for the life of a woodchuck. The poor creature had been caught alive and brought home. A number of boys were discussing what it was best to do with him. The father was to act as judge. All except Daniel said, "Kill the woodchuck,—put him to death." But Daniel was tender-hearted, and could not bear the thought of seeing the poor dumb animal killed. He pleaded earnestly and tenderly that they might not take his life. His arguments and entreaties prevailed. The father with tears and great emotion said, "Boys, let that woodchuck go; he shall not be killed."

Now there are men and women all around us in a condition similar to that of the poor woodchuck. They have been caught, caught perhaps in a snare of the devil. They are not dead, but terribly wounded. They have been overcome by temptation, their reputation is being assailed. Perhaps they have repented, and God has forgiven them; or, perhaps they have never been condemned, only the tongue of slander has been at work. Men are gathered to sit in judgment. Without due consideration, and with almost unanimous voice, they say, "away with him, crucify him; he is not fit to live." If it were a dog, or a horse, or a woodchuck with a sore foot, a broken leg, or dislocated joint, they might say, "Do not torture the poor creature; heal up his wound; be merciful; let him live." But a man who has been wounded, whose heart is broken, who needs help and sympathy, frequently meets with censure, coldness, and condemnation. Think of the many who have no home, no friends, whose circumstances are such that it is almost impossible to escape evil companions, or to avoid falling into temptation. Think of the poor, bruised, sorrowful ones, who throng the road to death. Many of them are saying inwardly, "We would see Jesus," but nobody cares for us, nobody comes to speak an encouraging word, to tell us that they love us, and that Jesus is willing to save us."

Now I contend, that a man or woman is worth more than a woodchuck. If a boy could plead with tears for mercy in behalf of such a creature, how ought christians to plead for mercy in behalf of sinners. "Let him know that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Who can estimate the value of one soul eternally saved? "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault," what will you do? kill him? cast him out? trample him in the dust? shun him as you would a viper? No; "restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted." I would not excuse sin, nor tolerate evil; but I would seek to save the sinner.

If you want to melt a man all down, take the pride, self-will, and animosity out of his heart, forgive him. Speak to him kindly, treat him tenderly. Tell him you are sorry that he has sinned, and you would do all in your power to save him. Tell him that Jesus came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; that he saved Peter, and Mary Magdalene, and Saul of Tarsus, and will save all who come to him with penitent hearts. Point poor sinners to the Lamb of God. Pity the fallen. Rescue the perishing. Tell them of heaven. Tell them there is a better life to lead here, and an eternal life hereafter. O despise not the poor. Crush not the wounded heart. Think of the value of men. In whose image are they created? Who died to save them? What is their destiny? "Little children, love one another."

FRETTING secretly is fretting against God, and fretting openly is fretting against our friends. Human nature is a fretful thing, and the sweet will of God can only keep us right.

REPORT OF THE WAYNE CO. TENT.

DEAR BRETHREN:—We commenced meeting at Williamson, N. Y., Thursday evening, Aug. 20th. This village is on what is called the "Bridge Road," which sometime, undoubtedly, was the shore of Lake Ontario. We found, on our arrival at this place, much opposition to our coming, that had been created by the Methodist minister. He advised his congregation not to attend the meeting, for we were infidels, and wherever we went, we left a withering blight. One man offered us a place in his orchard to set our tent. He was waited on by this minister, when he said to this man, he would give every feather in his beds to escort us out of town. While our meeting was in progress, he preached a number of funeral sermons, or rather, as some said, he delivered a tirade against us, thus manifesting the spirit that was in his heart.

It is strange that there is so much superstition, bigotry, and prejudice, especially among ministers of the gospel. Even when we gave our lecture on Spiritism, he advised the people not to go, when he knew that Spiritism was gaining ground rapidly in this section. He said to a Bro. Hine (who was a Spiritist when we went to Ontario, but had seen the truth, with all his household, and now are serving the Lord), that he had backslid from Methodism into Spiritism, then down to Adventism. Well, what has been the result of all this opposition and our meetings? We can say, far better than we anticipated.

In the first place, we were successful in overcoming the vast amount of prejudice so that we had the ears of the people. Then the Lord blessed the preaching of the word, so that a majority of those present were thoroughly convinced that the immortality of the soul, as taught by the world, is an error, and that the Bible teaches that only one class will ever obtain immortality; and that they will not attain it until the resurrection of the just occurs.

Again, a large number of men and women who were investigating Spiritism, embraced the doctrine of no immortality out of Christ. They had about decided that Spiritism was true, and that their friends could and did communicate after death. But now, they cannot find words to express their feelings of joy that the tent ever came among them. The Spiritists held their meetings about midway between Ontario and Williamson, so they had a large number from both places; but the truth has got such a hold of the hearts of the people, that these Spirit meetings are sparsely attended; and I hear they are soon to be given up. The commonplace remark of all is, "There is more Bible reading in Williamson and Ontario now than ever before."

When we pitched out tent at Williamson, we found only three persons who loved the truth, Sr. Weaver, and Bro. and Srs. W. H. Roger. Bro. Roger has taken the Crisis for a number of years; has been a member of the State Legislature, but when he saw the truth, he had no more interest in political matters. He had been waiting a long time for an opportunity to go forward in baptism, and with a joyful heart did he obey the command of our divine Lord.

While at Williamson, we had the pleasure of baptizing eighteen in the likeness of Jesus' death and resurrection. Between twenty-five and thirty made a start at this place. A number will be baptized at our next place of meeting, which will be at Walworth, six miles north of Palmyra. We have more calls than we possibly can attend to this season. I wish there were two or more tents in the field. There is plenty of work in Western New York.

Brethren of Western New York, I hope you will make a strong effort to get this glorious proclamation before the people. If the Lord does not come this year, secure churches and school-houses in your neighborhood, and then send for some one who will preach the gospel of the kingdom. Encourage him by your presence, prayers, and literal support, and the work will go on under the guidance of the "Spirit" and the blessing of God.

Our work is short, and we shall need wisdom and love until the end. Be sure and keep the "head light" where it belongs, right in front. Unfurl your colors to the breeze, at the masthead. In the name of Immanuel, let us go on. Victory will surely be ours in a little while. Earth's legions are gathering, and clouds are thickening like a dark pall over them, and their cup is full. The periods are ending, and the dial on the clock of time is pointing with precision to the closing struggle of earth's mad strife. We shall all stand at the judgment seat of Christ, very, VERY SOON. The coming of Christ is our great message. It is the harbinger of peace, of joy, and of happy immortality. Let us be loyal to God and his truth. If we are the people that God has called out to make this proclamation, let us hold the sacred trust inviolate. Let no syren voice sway us in the pathway of duty. I beg of you, my preaching brethren, to make the coming of Christ practically prominent.

Our meeting has been postponed at Walworth, until Saturday evening, Sept. 19th, on account of our health. Bro. Wm. E. Brown was taken with hemorrhage of the lungs, Sept. 2nd, and hence has been unable to attend meeting since, and will not be able to help us farther this year, if ever. Pray for him! Bro. R. C. Brown has been with us preaching the word with divine success. On the 12th inst., he was taken very ill, and has been removed to his home at South Butler. We hope it is not serious. I am fearful that I have contracted a throat difficulty, that will compel me to give up preaching every night. The Lord willing, I hope to be able to preach every Sabbath at least. Bro. Benjamine, our tent manager, is now at Walworth arranging (alone) the tent for the next meeting. Bro. B. is a young man, and he has given up all for Christ. He has left a good business to go with the tent, not wishing any remuneration for his services. He loves the doctrine of the immediate coming of Christ. As a whole, we have an encouraging report. The Lord has been with us, and we hope for his continued presence. We earnestly desire the prayers of the brethren and sisters. Yours in hope. JAS. E. WELLS.

Rochester, Sept. 16th, 1874.

IN PRAYER, be sure you get a consciousness of the divine presence, and retain this power by expecting it at every approach to the mercy-seat.

WEST HAWLEY TENT-MEETING.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—The meeting held under the large Hoosac Valley Mississippi tent, at Fullerville, West Hawley, Mass., commenced Saturday, Aug. 29th, and closed Sunday, Sept. 6th. I arrived on the ground Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 2nd, just in season to hear the last part of Bro. Flagg's discourse, which was right to the point, and did my soul much good. The preaching during the rest of the week was excellent, and just such as we need in these last days of time. The prayer and conference meetings were held twice a day, and were well attended, and much enjoyed by myself, as was also the case with many others.

Thursday and Friday evenings, about eight arose to be prayed for, and Saturday evening twelve came forward to the anxious seat, where I trust they all found Jesus, and accepted him as their Savior.

Sunday, at 9 o'clock, we had a love feast; after which Bro. Tefft, of Becket, spoke from the word; and at noon we all went to the mill-pond to witness the ordinance of baptism. Two were baptized, and went on their way rejoicing. Immediately after the baptism, we repaired again to the tent, where we partook of the Lord's supper. And oh, what a blessed moment it was! Such a solemn scene! How vividly it carried my mind back to the time when Jesus hung upon the cruel cross, his body broken, and his precious life-blood shed for the remission of our sins. Oh, let us love him more and more each day we live; for we cannot half repay the love he felt for us when he suffered and died upon the tree for us.

Sunday evening, we had one of the best prayer and conference meetings that I ever attended in my life. The Spirit of God ran from heart to heart, and a deep peace rested upon every believer's soul; peace that floweth like a deep, silent river. The meetings closed with remarks from Bro. C. W. Baker, of Savoy, upon "the signs of the times," showing our close proximity to the great day of judgment, when Christ shall come to give rest to his saints, and to punish the wicked with eternal death.

These meetings have left an impression upon the minds of the people, which will not be forgotten very soon, and I hope will result in much good. During the week, no disturbances of any amount were made by outsiders, and the cause of Christ has prospered in that section greatly, for which we ought all to praise the Lord.

WM. D. TUCKER.

P. S. Sr. J. Benson preached during the week, and so exerted herself that the next week she was taken with bleeding at the lungs, and is now at Sr. Mirick's in Savoy. I went there and saw her Saturday. She was feeling quite unwell, and said her lungs were very sore. Dear Brn. and Srs., pray for her that she may soon recover from her illness, and be spared, if it be God's will, to sound the gospel trumpet till Jesus shall be revealed in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. From your Bro. in Christ. W. D. T.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE TOBACCO PLAGUE.

We are happy to extract the following article from the National Temperance Advocate, a most efficient worker in the temperance cause, as it evinces an insight into the real cause and cure of that terrible curse, unnatural stimulation. There is no essential difference as to the agent employed—stimulation is the great crime.

The twin of rum is tobacco. Both are poisons which, in doses large and powerful enough, cause stupefaction and death. Against the former the crusade is active and powerful. Opposition to the latter is feeble; many, even among temperance men, make none at all, but prostitute themselves and annoy others by using large quantities of the abominable stuff. The nuisance is becoming very general, amounting to a well-nigh universal tobacco-plague.

We regard the use of tobacco as inimical to the progress and consummation of a true temperance reformation. It would be too much to affirm that all tobacco-users are or will be dram-drinkers or drunkards. But it is not too much to say that it is very rare to find a confirmed drinker of alcoholic liquors who did not precede or who does not accompany the drinking habit with tobacco. What the track is to the railway train, that is tobacco to alcoholic inebriety. The use of tobacco not only leads thousands to strong drink and to inebriety by inducing an inflamed, diseased condition of the nerves of taste, an unnatural craving, to appease which alcohol is resorted to, but it greatly hinders the reformation of many who, seeing their danger, would gladly abandon their drinking habits. A careful investigation would show conclusively that a very large percentage of the failures to keep the temperance pledge, and of relapses on the part of those who have sought aid in inebriate asylums, are due, primarily, to tobacco.

It is the deliberate testimony of so eminent a physician as Dr. Willard Parker, of this city, that the death-victims of tobacco are even more numerous than those of alcohol. Especially should there be an earnest endeavor to save children from the contamination. It is not uncommon in our metropolitan streets to see boys six or eight years old with cigars in their mouths. Who can doubt the increased risk of an immoral tendency and an unhappy future for such youths? The clergyman who chews or smokes, the church member or the temperance man who cultivates or deals in tobacco, hinders by his practice and example the prevalence and progress of true temperance. The valleys of Connecticut and Virginia, alike, which are given up to the cultivation of the tobacco-plant, are misappropriated, and should be put to better use.

We invoke the help of thoughtful and conscientious men and women everywhere to inaugurate some more effective effort to stay the ravages and stop the progress of the tobacco-plague.—Ex.

PROGRESS OF HYGIENE.

The increase of hygienic and decrease of drug medication during the past few years has been very great. Physicians, year by year, place less dependence upon drugs and more upon hygiene. A great many give no drugs at all, but amuse their patients with bread pills and colored water, and give nature a chance to effect a cure. The teachers in our medical schools and many of the medical journals are becoming more enlightened upon the subject, and the people themselves are beginning to think that disease may possibly be cured without filling the system with poisonous drugs.

The following remarks from the Philadelphia "Medical and Surgical Reporter," will serve to show which way the wind blows. "Year by year the belief in specifics, or any doctrine of signatures, has been diminishing, until now we may consider it extinct. We trust in the natural power more, in the individual capacity more, less and less in foreign impulses communicated to the system. This is true in prophylaxis as well as treatment. Thorough, careful, systematic hygienic remedies are better than any drugs or preventive agent.

It is one of the signs of the times that the care of the body in health has been attracting the attention of medical men of late years, as much as the care of it in disease. Personal hygiene should occupy quite as prominent a place in medical discussions as public hygiene. For every valid effort in this as in political life, must start from the individual.

We should, therefore, as a body, encourage the dissemination of correct views on anatomy and physiology; we should strive to introduce such studies into schools, and we should give more attention to the education of adults in these matters."—Herald of Health.

MAKE THE HOUSE COMFORTABLE.

We have no patience with a man who allows the windows to rattle in the casements, while with a hammer, a few nails, a lath or two, and a little putty, he could in an hour or two make the house snug and comfortable. We believe in thorough ventilation, but it should be under our control. There are thousands of homes where the inmates spend a wretched winter simply for want of a little attention to such matters. See that the outside doors fit snug. A storm house enclosing the door most exposed, or where the family are going in and out frequently, is a great comfort. A damper in the stove-pipe prevents the heat from going up the chimney, and saves fuel. See that the wood-house is well supplied with dry wood ready for the stove, and that there is some kindling always prepared ready for use. Where coal is used, and in the absence of charcoal, have a barrel of dry corn cobs ready for starting fires.

Let the family home be well lighted, and make home attractive to the young people. Let there be no lack of good books and useful papers. Pleasant winter evenings at home constitute one of the greatest charms of country life. It is here that character is formed, and the future usefulness of our children in a good degree determined.

A comfortable family room, warm beds, nutritious food, and plenty of sleep, will enable a farmer and his family to spend the winter pleasantly and profitably. There is plenty of work to be done, and the cold, instead of benumbing the faculties, will stimulate exertion. Do not spend your winter days by the stove, or in complaining of hard times.—American Agriculturist.

"I ATE THE SUGAR MYSELF."

A little girl named Caroline had a very lovely little canary bird. It sang from early morning until evening, and was of a beautiful golden yellow, with a black tuft upon his head. Caroline gave it seeds and cooling herbs to eat; sometimes, also, a lump of white sugar, and fresh water daily to drink. But suddenly the little bird began to droop, and one morning as Caroline brought it some fresh water, it lay dead in the cage.

Caroline loudly lamented the loss of her darling pet, and cried for a long time. Her mother went and bought another that was just as sweet of song and yet more beautiful of plumage than the former, and put it in the same cage. But the maiden wept still louder when she saw this new songster.

Her mother wondered much at this and said: "My dear child, why are you so much troubled, and wherefore do you continue to weep? Your tears cannot call back your dead canary to life, and here you have another that is just as good and as pretty as the first."

Then the child said: "Oh, dear mother, I have done wrong to my canary, and did not treat it as I ought."

"Dear Lina," returned the mother, "you tended it very carefully."

"Oh, no," said the little girl, "a short time before it died I did not bring it a piece of sugar, which you gave me for it; I ate the sweet white lump myself."

So spoke the little girl, much afflicted. The mother did not laugh at her daughter's affliction, for she recognized and honored the holy voice of conscience in the heart of her child.—Crusader.

NEVER PUT OFF.

Whene'er a duty waits for thee,
With sober judgment view it,
And never idly wish it done;
Begin at once and do it.

For sloth says falsely, "By-and-by"
Is just as well to do it;
But present strength is surest strength;
Begin at once and do it.

And find not lions in the way,
Nor faint if thorns bestrew it;
But bravely try, and strength will come,
For God will help thee do it.

THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

Two little girls, named Annie and Bessie, six years of age, were one day walking along a road in the country, when they espied at some distance off, coming down the same road, a number of cows.

"Annie, I'm afraid of cows," said Bessie.

"So am I," said Annie, "but if we ask our heavenly father to keep the cows from hurting us, he won't let them hurt us, and we needn't be afraid. Let us kneel right down here, and ask him."

So down these two little girls went, on their knees, at the side of the public road, and asked God to keep the cows from hurting them. When they reached home they told their mother, and said that "God did keep the cows away, for they went by on the other side of the road." The father of one of these little ones, though not a christian, wept when he heard of their simple, childlike faith.

What a beautiful picture that would have been for a painter! Did not Jesus mean something like that, when he said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me?"

RESTING IN GOD.

MRS. L. CHANDLER.

Restless, unsatisfied no more am I;
Supreme contentment doth with me abide;
Sincerely I can say to thee, my Lord,
Than thine, I want no other will beside.

However quiet all my life may be,
However hedged about my way may seem;
Though smallest duties only fall to me,
Thy loving kindness still shall be my theme.

Though I have often dreamed of greater things,
Oft prayed that I in other ways might go;
Yet quiet now I rest within God's hands,
And what-oe'er he does is well, I know.

For this I humbly pray for faith and love;
For perfect faith in Him whose word is sure,
That I may wholly rest upon that word,
And firmly stand on Christ the rock secure,—

For perfect love, that reacheth out to take
Strong hold of God, and with the other hand
Shall draw the sin defiled and erring ones
The fullness of his love to understand.

WHO DID IT?

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

Who issued the command to restore and build Jerusalem? and when did the commandment go forth? That this is an important question to be considered at the present time, the division and confusion of sentiment prevailing among us on the point makes apparent. In answering this question we shall, in the first place, be indifferent as to where or when the sixty-seven weeks of Dan. 9:25 commence or end, as this may relate to a subsequent inquiry; but shall first proceed to give the circumstances, and also the necessity of said command being issued at one specific epoch. It is well known, by Bible students, that the Jewish nation were often reduced to servitudes to the nations for their infidelity, after entering Canaan, as illustrated in the book of Judges; and also were severely scourged in the reigns of the kings of Israel by civil war, and by defeats from the armies of the nations surrounding them; and the ten tribes were finally carried off into captivity by the king of Assyria, and have ever since remained scattered abroad upon the face of the earth, never to return again to enjoy the promised land, except the righteous seed among them; and their return can only be by a resurrection from the dead, in a state of immortality. The remaining two tribes of Judah and Benjamin were also chastised at various times for their sins, and threatened with the breaking up and the destruction of their capital city, Jesusalem, and of being carried into captivity in Babylon for seventy years; which threatening was executed in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, and the eleventh of Jehoiakim, king of Judah. In this year, the king of Babylon "carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valor, even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths; none remained save the poorest sort of the people of the land." Here dates the seventy years captivity, as recorded in Jer. 29. As chronology is the "soul of history," it is equally so of prophecy. "Without it the Scriptures would lose much of their harmony and beauty. It is carefully interwoven into the sacred text, and gives the order and dependence of the several parts on each other."

Therefore the Chronology of the Bible is as important in its place as any other subject of revelation, and should be studied with deep interest. When the Lord gives us a definite period of time in his word, as these seventy years, relating to the captivity of his people in Babylon, it must be fulfilled to the letter, as these seventy years were: "For thus saith the Lord, That after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you, and perform my good word towards you, in causing you to return to this place." Jer. 29:10. Here is a distinct and definite period of time given, during which the Jews must remain in captivity in Babylon; and at the expiration of this time they can no longer remain captives in Babylon without a forfeiture of the word of the Lord; therefore the Lord must either miraculously deliver them, or use human instrumentality in the work. The latter he predicted he would do, as he said—"perform my good word towards you, in causing you to return to this place." As also Yah-vah speaks through Isaiah—"Thus saith the Lord [or Yah-vah] thy Redeemer, and he that formed thee from the womb, I am the Lord that maketh all things; that stretcheth forth the heavens above; that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself; that frustrateth the tokens of liars; that maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh wise men foolish [as he had done in the interpretation of the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, and the handwriting on the wall of the palace of Belshazzar, through his prophet Daniel]; that confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built. . . . That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built, and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." Here are predictions uttered of the restoration of Jerusalem, and the removing of obstacles out of the way, even before Jerusalem was desolated, and Cyrus king of Persia called by name, more than a hundred years before he was born, as the chosen instrumentality to perform the work—"even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." Here is a divine prediction, that Cyrus would give the command to build Jerusalem; yet some have said in the face of this prophetic utterance that Cyrus did not give any command to build Jerusalem. If the utterance predicted to come out of the mouth of Cyrus—"saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built"—is not a command, then nothing could be. No language could express it. Yet those that deny that Cyrus built Jerusalem, admit that he built, or laid the foundation for the temple. The language employed in Isa. 44:28 is just as strong in the one case as in the other. Therefore, if Cyrus laid the foundation of the temple, he built Jerusalem.

Profane history, as well as sacred, is in harmony concerning this work of Cyrus. The language in Isa. 45 is very emphatic of the work of Cyrus in preparing the way for the restoring of the captive Jews, and building Jerusalem:—"Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden to subdue nations before him, and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut. I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight. I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron. And I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that I the Lord, which call thee by name, am the God of Israel. For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name. I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me. . . . . I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will direct all his ways. He shall BUILD MY CITY, and he shall let go my CAPTIVES, not for price nor reward, saith the Lord of hosts." Here are facts stated about the work of Cyrus, in taking Babylon, restoring the captive Jews, and the building of Jerusalem, that ought to silence the mouths of all gainsayers to the contrary.

The foregoing facts were prophetic utterances long before Cyrus was born; but when these facts became history, and Cyrus had come on to the stage of action, and had taken Babylon, Ezra says in chap. 1, that to fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, "the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing; saying, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah." (The marginal reading is—"caused a voice to pass" throughout all his kingdom. From this language, it appears that heralds went forth throughout the whole kingdom with a written proclamation, and announced it with an audible voice.) "Who is there among you, of all his people, his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel (he is the God), which is in Jerusalem." This proclamation of Cyrus caused the "chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites," with the children of the province, to the number of 42,360, besides their servants and maids, of whom there were 7,247, to go up to Jerusalem. This proclamation of Cyrus was evidently issued on the tenth day of the fifth month; and by the first month they all arrived "as one man to Jerusalem."

We have given some of the circumstances connected with and attending this proclamation of Cyrus; and that it "fulfilled the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah," that the captives should return after those seventy years were accomplished. Here is the specific time given when this command must go forth; that is, at the end of those seventy years captivity. It is called in Dan. 9:5, "THE commandment, not a commandment, as though there might be several; but one that was definite, and distinctly recorded; one which there need be no uncertainty in distinguishing; the only one that ever was or ever would be given. Therefore, the only commandment that ever was issued under heaven, to restore the captive Jews from Babylon, and to build Jerusalem, was the one that the Lord stirred up Cyrus, king of Persia, to issue. The commandment of Darius and Artaxerxes was simply a confirmation of the original one made by king Cyrus, as the record in the book of Ezra will show. For after the work had commenced in building Jerusalem, the enemies of the Jews made complaint, and "hired counsellors against them to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus king of Persia [which was about six years], even until the reign of Darius, king of Persia." The king of Persia that succeeded Cyrus favored these enemies of the Jews, and caused the work of building Jerusalem to cease for a season; but the work was resumed again when the true statement of the matter was brought before Darius, who caused "search" to be made among the rolls, or books, and one was found containing the decree of Cyrus, proving that the Jews were building under the authority of the decree of Cyrus, and thus the enemies of the Jews were silenced by a decree from the king of Persia. So the work continued, and the house of God was finished in the sixth year of Darius. Artaxerxes, whom many supposed restored the Jews to fulfill the prophecy in Dan. 9, did no such thing; and he never would have been regarded in any such light, only under pressure from a false view of chronology and historical data.

It is certain, from the seventh chapter of Ezra (to which we are referred as authority), that no decree can there be found to restore and build Jerusalem; moreover, Jerusalem had already been built by the fifty thousand Jews who returned from the captivity by reason of the decree of Cyrus. This class had become corrupted by marrying strange wives, and otherwise amalgamating with the people of the land; and Ezra entered upon the work of reforming this class. This second edition of Jews, that went up from Babylon unto Ezra, were evidently aroused to seek their spiritual welfare, because of an awful plague that had broken out and was raging throughout the Persian empire. Ezra proclaimed a fast at the river Ahava, and there the people afflicted and humbled themselves before the God of Israel, and God was entreated for them. The king of Persia was also alarmed by reason of this terrible plague, which was depopulating his empire and carrying off multitudes of soldiers out of his army; therefore, the king sought relief from the God of Israel; and when Ezra made request unto the king for his sanction, that the Jews might return under the auspices of the king, the king "granted him all his request," and then made a decree to all the "people of Israel," the "priests" and "Levites" in his "realm," that were "minded of their own free will to go up to Jerusalem. Moreover, the king and his seven counsellors contributed silver and gold as an offering unto the God of Israel, whose habitation is in Jerusalem." The king also gave permission unto Ezra to take of the silver and gold that he could "find in all the province of Babylon, with the free-will offerings of the people . . . that that thou mayest buy speedily with this money bullocks, rams, lambs, with their meat-offerings, and offer them upon the altar of the house of God, which is in Jerusalem."

From the foregoing scripture, we see that the temple, or house of God, with the altar, were already built in Jerusalem before Ezra went up from Babylon. How absurd, then, to talk of Artaxerxes restoring and building Jerusalem. But the assistance that Artaxerxes rendered to Ezra reached beyond Babylon. He called upon the treasurers beyond the river to give to Ezra all that he should require of them, and have it done speedily, "unto an hundred talents of silver, and to an hundred baths of wine, and to an hundred baths of oil, and salt without prescribing how much. Whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven, let it be diligently done for the house of the God of heaven; FOR WHY SHOULD THERE BE WRATH AGAINST THE REALM OF THE KING AND HIS SONS?" This latter clause of verse twenty-three of chapter seven explains the whole object of king Artaxerxes in assisting Ezra in the work of offerings and sacrifices. It was for the welfare of the kingdom of Persia, in view of the divine visitation already alluded to. Ezra's heart was elated by reason of the favor the king and his counsellors had shown him, but especially for the king's interest manifested for the decoration of the house of God in Jerusalem, as he says—"Blessed be the Lord God of our fathers, which hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart, to BEAUTIFY the house of the Lord WHICH IS IN Jerusalem." Does this scriptural fact, here stated, look consistent with the idea that Ezra was engaged, under the direction of the king of Persia, in restoring and building Jerusalem; when he was merely going up to reform the Jews, offer sacrifices, and beautify the house of God that already had been built many years before? In the light of what we have here presented, let the reader peruse the last four chapters of Ezra, and see if anything can there be found that looks like a decree to restore and build Jerusalem; and if so, let it be forthcoming for the benefit of the writer of this, as well as of others.

THE BEST WAY.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Walk in love."—Eph. 5:2.

If the language of the apostle Paul in the concluding verses of the preceding chapter, and in the first four verses of this fifth chapter of Ephesians were universally practised, earth would be almost if not quite a paradise. It is well for all professed christians to read over these scriptures often, not hastily, but slowly and prayerfully, meditating upon each word, and drinking in the deep meaning of the passage.

The most of us, I fear, live too far away from the Fountain Head. We do not get the water of life in its freshness. It is our privilege to come near, to take the Bible itself and drink of the healing streams that flow through its sacred pages.

The religion of many is too general; they are christians in general and not in particular. If they read the Bible, it is to find doctrine or prophecy over which to dispute or argue with others who search the Scriptures merely for the sake of argument.

Well, it is blessed to know the truth, but woe be to those who having a knowledge of the truth hold the same in unrighteousness. If we have merely a knowledge of great truths, and our hearts and lives are void of the true spirit of Christianity, our religion is but a shell. There is no life, nor power, nor salvation in us.

There are a great many little precepts, to which we must give attention, like the one at the head of this article, in order for us to come up to the standard of New Testament religion. This is the adhesive principle.

When christians walk in love, there is no pulling apart. They cleave together. Walking implies life, activity, progression. Walking together in love implies unity, concert, harmony of action. There should be no chafing or friction in the great machinery of God's church.

May the good Master pour on the heavenly oil, that we may "walk in love."

ASHAMED OF THE NAME.

For years past honest christian men have been taunted and twitted with being "ashamed of the name of Advent." Thus slurs have been cast upon those who honestly believe that the Lord has the sole right to name his children, and that the bride should bear the name of her own bridegroom rather than that of some neighbor, relative, or friend; and that all sectarian titles savor more of the world, the flesh, and the devil, than of the pure gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God. And hence, whenever a man stood, in quiet readiness, to prove these positions, declining to be considered an enemy to the truth he himself preached, and refusing to abandon the work he had wrought, but objecting to be banded with names not warranted by Scripture, the cry would be, "Oh, yes, you are ashamed of the name! I'm not ashamed to be called an Advent!"

The indications are that this kind of argument will not avail much longer. Bible questions cannot be settled by slang phrases, nor by some sectarian hue and cry. Men who follow Christ and believe the Bible, are inclined to search for themselves, and see what all this talk amounts to. If God's word ever commanded that men should be called Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists, or Adventists, they want to know it; and if all such titles are unscriptural then they want to drop them, and come down to the Bible hard-pan, and find a solid foundation. Sectarian war-cries prove nothing; God's word must settle the matter. "If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

The fact is, all these sectarian jackets are getting to be rather a tight fit; and if men continue to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, buttons or seams will be likely to give away somewhere. Already acceptable preachers of the gospel of the kingdom of unquestioned usefulness and soundness in the faith, have had their licenses withdrawn by a conference, and have been deprived of their standing as preachers in "the body," not because they were bad men or failed to do their duty, but simply because they had raised up assemblies of believers and set them in order, as "churches of God," without any sectarian name whatever. They had neglected to put the sectarian ear mark upon each sheep of the flock, and so, good men, who loved them, believed with them, prayed for them, and bade them God speed, "cast them out" because they would not impose an unscriptural name upon the little flocks of believers gathered through their ministry.

The accused parties offered to define their position by the Bible, and change their practice if convinced that it was wrong, but that would not answer; they were not to be tried by the Bible but by a little pamphlet called a "constitution," which said nothing directly on the point in question, but which they thought warranted the proceedings. Some of old said, "we have a law, and by our law he ought to die;" now men say, "we have a constitution, and whether it be right or wrong we are bound to see it executed." And thus a people who have fought sectarianism, proclaimed the Bible, and preached a coming judgment to a dying world, and borne the reproaches of sectarian churches for their fidelity to God, have been entrapped and misled till they are building the things they once destroyed, and making human constitutions and regulations paramount to the word of the everlasting God.

"Ashamed of the name!" Let these things go on, with all the other disputes and quarrels with which men busy themselves while "waiting for the Lord," and how long will it be before men who are intelligent, honest, and fair minded, will be ashamed of the name, and also of the men who bear it? Already most of the papers and organs which have proclaimed the coming and kingdom of the Lord, have either omitted or dropped the name, or else quietly left it in the shade, and the sentiment of the people at large seems to approve this course. The day for sect building is about over. Christ prayed for his people that they might all be one, and how will it ever come to pass if men continue to build their party walls, and flaunt their party names in each other's faces, thanking God that they are not as other men are, but that they are Methodists, or Baptists, or Adventists?

This leaving one sect, to build up another fully as sectarianism, does not seem consistent. It is like the man who opposed having an organ in the church, and then, when he was out-voted, withdrew and went and joined another church where they had three organs! Often men organize churches to propagate certain truths. But in doing this they sometimes shut up the truth rather than diffuse it. They say "these are our views," and men say, "Away with your views! what do we care about your views?" While if they would stop getting patent rights on the gospel, and say, "these are not our views, they are yours; they belong to the whole church; they are the teachings of the word of God;" then men could hear them without prejudice, and believe them on the credit of the holy Scriptures alone.

The tendencies of the age are to unity. Godly men yearn for companionship with the faithful, and the members of the "one body" cannot and will not be sundered. Let the work of division and strife have an end, and let each one come closer to Christ, and nearer to his living and abiding word. Standing on the broad platform of christian fellowship and unity, our peculiarities will not be merely in doctrines, and crotchets, and notions, but we shall be "a peculiar people zealous of good works." And to those who interrogate us concerning our faith and standing in the christian life, we can answer in the language of good old John Bunyan: "Since you would know by what name I desire to be distinguished, I desire to be, and I hope I am, a christian; and I desire, if God should count me worthy, to be called a christian, a believer, or any other such name that is sanctioned by the Holy Ghost. But as for those factious titles, such as Anabaptists, Independent, Presbyterian, and the like, I believe they came neither from Jerusalem nor Antioch, but rather from hell and Babylon, for they naturally tend to divisions, and ye may know them by their fruits."

Truth exists irrespective of names and independent of men. Adventists as a general rule have invented nothing new but their errors, have discovered almost nothing but mistakes. All that they have that is good, and strong, and true, has been believed, and preached, and written by men outside of the Advent ranks from the days of the apostles down. And there are probably more who believe in the near coming of the Lord, who are not Adventists than who are. Sectarianism often hinders truth more than it helps it. And when men who claim to be "a Bible people," and to stand on a Bible platform, resort to unscriptural names, and rules, and organizations, and make laws for God's people for which there is no warrant in the word of God, it is high time that some voice should call a halt, and that no man should be deterred from following the word of God by the sneering taunt, "you are ashamed of the name."

There are men who have borne the heat and burden of the day, and who if not quite as sectarian may be fully as faithful; and who, even if they are sometimes chargeable with being ashamed of a name which God never gave and the Holy Ghost never used, can yet say, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every soul that believeth." —Advent Chris. Times.

DOES MAN DIE?

A. F. MOORE, M. D.

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," and in due time he saw fit to people it with all manner of living beings, the last and noblest of which is man, whom he made in his own image, and after his own likeness, male and female, and gave him dominion over all the living beings whom he had made. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became [not had put into him] a living soul." God put this man, Adam, in a garden to "keep and to dress it." He made a companion for him, fitted to associate with him, and to be to him a helpmeet; and he gave them all the fruits of the garden, except one. They even had access to the tree of life, so that they might live forever; but the tree of knowledge of good and evil must on no account be touched. The penalty for such offense was sure death. ("Dying, thou shalt die," margin). The tempter came, and "beguiled" them, and they did eat of this tree of knowledge of good and evil, and the penalty was executed. Sin wrought its work and received its wages, death.

Every variation from the true standard of health is a process toward death. Hence, when the feelings, which always follow an act of sin, began to exercise themselves upon this guilty pair, producing the baneful effects which it has been demonstrated they do produce upon the human frame, deterioration commenced, and they became "dying." God came forward in awful majesty, and made known to them that having been formed of dust or earth, they should return to earth again; which sad fate was at length realized; and he shut them away from the tree of life, lest they might stop the process of death, and prevent the execution of the penalty by partaking of its fruits. Gen. 3:22.

In the Bible account of the creation and fall of man, as described above, several peints are noticeable, among which are these; viz., that man himself is a living soul; not, is composed of a body and soul; that man himself is made of dust, not the body is made of dust, and, that besides this body there is a soul not made of dust, and which will not return to dust, and finally, that on account of sin, man dies, and no part of him is excepted. And this agrees with all parts of the word of God, assertions to the contrary, notwithstanding. Even the New Testament, from which the advocates of natural, inherent immortality draw nearly all their arguments, says, "The gift of God is eternal life." Rom. 6:23. See also 1 Tim. 6:16; 2 Tim. 1:16; Rom. 2:6, 7; 1 Cor. 15 chap., etc. etc. Thus we see God only hath immortality (1 Tim. 6:16), and that he gives or withholds it as pleases him.

Has science anything to offer with regard to this matter? This is an age of science, and a time when "knowledge shall increase;" and on looking over the records of science, we see much in favor of the Bible view of this matter; and, perhaps, nothing against it. In an essay read before the Chicago Academy of Medicine, and published in the U. S. Medical and Surgical Journal, the writer of this essay has enlarged upon the subject somewhat, and will give some extracts:—

"'Canst thou minister to a mind diseased?' is a question which meets the physician at every turn, and towards its solution have been directed the minds of the greatest and best in the medical profession. With what success we all know. Till the dawn of Homœopathy, the field has been blank and barren of any satisfactory results. But now, we are beginning to make some progress in the right direction, for we have the law which will direct us aright. We know that if arsenic will produce a certain kind of mania, it will, in many instances (if given in small doses) cure such mania, and Dr. Hempel says it cured a barber of a desire to kill. If aurum will produce an inclination to suicide, it will cure such a desire. Opium produces a kind of stupor, and will cure a like affection. So we have remedies which, for the same reason, are indicated in melancholy, hysteria, rage, loss of memory, fear of death, or of ghosts, or of the future, various desires or aversions, and fancies or feelings.

Now, what is this mysterious connection, which the mind has with the body, whereby we can alter even a man's reasoning faculties, thoughts and feelings, by means of drugs? It would seem that the mind being independent, as an entity, and able to live without the body, would have some independence as regards its own state and being, thoughts and feelings; that if it was able to manage this body at all, and make it obedient to its own will, when it, the body, was in health, it would hardly be led or forced into doing and saying things, when the body was diseased, which it considered improper at other times; that is, by way of illustration, if a workman is able, with good instruments, to do good work, he should be, and is, able to do a fair job with poor ones, or else he will not work at all.

Then, I ask again, how, if we put alcohol into a man's stomach, it "steals his brains," and makes him murder, and his mind and reasoning faculties, and his conscience, which impels him to do what he thinks is right, cannot prevent the deed, and are themselves held responsible for it?

How do diseases of the body affect the independence of the mind? Does the house in which I live control me, or do I order the house to suit my own purposes? But if I am a part of the building, it would be natural to suppose that some of the changes in the building would change me. Perhaps this illustration is not correct in all respects, and it would be more exact to say if I was the result, or the manifestation of my powers was the result of my organization; that, if the structure thus organized was changed or perverted, such change or pervertion would alter those manifestations. We are apt to speak of the mind as an immaterial thing, which has a living existence. Now, I think there is no immateriality which has any existence, independent of the organism which produced it. Pain cannot exist without something to be painful; joy is nothing without some one to be joyful; sound requires an atmosphere upon which its waves may be propagated, and the vibration of some material body to produce those waves. The rays of light are supposed to be no less waves than sound; and, although composed of no material substance themselves, must have such substance for their production, transmission, and reception or reflection. Electricity and magnetism obey the same laws, and it is more than likely that these subtle agents themselves are nothing but waves.

Is it to be supposed that there is anything immaterial obeying different laws? Is there anything in nature analagous to such a state of things? I think not. All material beings and entities live and are governed by the same laws. Beginning at the lowest sphere and ascending to the highest, through the whole range of animated beings, all live by the same law of development, dependence upon other substances for means of sustenance or growth, and even their propagation depends upon the will or accident of another, and not themselves. All know that everything inanimate is governed by the same fixed laws, and we have shown that all things called immaterial, so far as we are able to detect them, have laws which cause them to conform to the same requirements as material things, in one particular at least; viz., a something substantial to give them origin and existence. Will science be able to detect an immateriality, which does not conform to this law, and does not depend upon the body (or physical organism) for its origin, continuance, variations, and end? I think not. But men will say, You make man no better than the beast; man can reason, and the beast cannot. To such I will say, that this statement has no relation whatever, in a scientific view, with the arguments and facts I have adduced; but for their satisfaction I will say, let him, who dare, deny that animals can reason."

"But it is generally thought that the faculties of memory reason, and the power of the will are satisfactory evidences of an existence and intelligence far beyond anything to which matter can attain. If so, the beasts have this intelligence and existence, for they have a will, memory, and can reason to a certain extent."

Then follow some physiological facts and illustrations which will be detailed more at length further on. Right here it may be mentioned, that considering the possession of reason, intelligence, etc., as evidence of the dual nature or immortality of the being possessing them, is about as absurd as to think that an owl has a threefold nature, because it can see in the dark, a faculty not possessed by man, or that it was immortal for the same reason. The mere possession of certain faculties, either physical or mental, has nothing to do with immortality at least, and does not distinguish natures as some imagine. The writer of this article has seen a pig pick up the letters which spelled his name, or that of the president and others' when asked to do so, and do other things requiring intelligence and reason above mere instinct, and yet no one considered it as evidence that the pig had a soul which was immortal; neither would any person consider it murder to kill the pig. Most persons are familiar with similar facts, which might be used as illustrations of this point.

FADING LIKE A LEAF.

S. S. BREWER.

"We spend our years as a tale that is told."

Now, in the eventide of life, as we retrospect over threescore and ten, how forcible the language of the son of Jesse appears. Brief in very deed is the space in my pilgrimage from youthful manhood to the hoar frosts of the present. How brief the summary of the patriarch's reply to Pharaoh: "The days of the years of my pilgrimage are an hundred and thirty years; few and evil have the days of the years of my life been, and have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers, in the days of their pilgrimage." "All the days of Methuselah were nine hundred sixty and nine years; and he died." How great the contrast appears from that unparalleled instance of longevity to that of the Psalmist. "The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off."

When I survey over thirty years of the past, how mournful and sad the mutations of our eventful time appears. The trembling old Low Hampton farmer appeared, Bible in hand, startling the world with the "gladly solemn sound"—"Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." Then the following names, with the few of those of that time that yet remain appeared: Fitch, Barry, Kent, Billings, Hazelton, Southard, Stuart, Galusha, French, Thomson, W. Pratt, Marsh, Robinson, Jones, Howell, and Wendell. Those warm hearts and eloquent tongues, who, from the gushing fountain of light and life drew their divine ammunition, that moved the great deep of nearly every heart that listened to their warnings, are as silent as the tomb that keeps their precious dust. They are waiting till the great and long predicted day shall dawn, and the long, dark, gloomy night of sorrow and death shall forever pass away.

How mournful again, and how brief the tale. 'Tis but a few short years since, when in some localities I could read the names of many on their signs and doors; now all appears strange. Once I could walk but a few moments without meeting and greeting expectants of the coming One; now those places remind me of the pathetic strain of the poet:—

"I feel like one who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted;
Whose lights are fled, and garlands dead,
And all but me departed."

Years seem like months, months as weeks, weeks as days, and all are, as Job expressed it, "swifter than a weaver's shuttle."

The infirmities of the moment remind me that I must close. Hoping, desiring, and praying, that the glad hour of earth's redemption may speedily dawn, and, in the assurance of faith, I remain a feeble servant of Christ.

HONESTY AND HOLINESS.

I have no patience with that religion that stops short of paying honest debts. While it is true that the most scrupulous honesty, without holiness, can never open the gate of heaven, it is also true that dishonesty will shut the door of salvation against the soul. While you have unsettled accounts with men, God will have unsettled accounts against you. There is as much religion in paying as in praying. He that prays to God, and never pays to men, will find himself a spiritual bankrupt when the final settlement comes.

On this point I do not want to be misunderstood. I do not mean to say it is impossible for man to get into heaven, if he goes out of this world leaving debts unpaid. I can well understand how even a christian man, in honest dealing, may sometimes become involved in debts beyond what he is able to pay. Such a man may die in debt and go to heaven, leaving debts in this world that never can or will be paid. We are talking about the man who has money in his pocket, and who says he has religion in his heart, but whose religion is not long enough or strong enough to reach down into his pockets to take the money out to pay his honest debts.

I would not give a brimstone match for all the religion in the world that consists wholly and altogether in an inward experience of holy feelings. With a brimstone match you may strike a light and kindle a fire, but there is no light nor life in an inward holiness that is not developed into an outward honesty. We want a religion that will have such an influence and control over men's outward conduct, that it will make them honest traders and good neighbors. The religion of Jesus Christ will do this, because it is a holiness in the heart that shows its power in the honesty of the life.

True religion will make a man honest in those transactions where the law cannot reach him. There are crimes which neither the rules of society nor the the laws of the land can reach—crimes which neither stagger on the streets, nor swing under the gallows, nor get locked up in the jail; true religion will keep a man from all such crimes. It is a power for honesty that goes before and beyond demands of the law. That religion that barely keeps a man out of the penitentiary, will not admit him into the kingdom of heaven. A man may be honest without being holy, but he cannot be holy without being honest.—J. N. Otis.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

The provisions of the new postal law, requiring pre-payment of postage on all newspapers, go into operation on the first of January next. After that date all postage (excepting on newspapers within the County in which they are published) will have to be paid at the Office from which the paper is mailed. This change relieves the subscribers from the care and trouble of postage payment, placing it upon the publishers, and making the expense, which is quite an item, to come directly upon the latter.

To meet this (in regard to the Crisis), the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society, at a late meeting, voted to add twenty-five cents to the price of our paper; so that from Jan. 1st, 1875, the World's Crisis will be $2.25 per year in advance. And hereafter, all monies received at this office for advance pay on the Crisis will be credited from Jan. forward at the rate of $2.25 per year. And if any, who have already paid for the paper in advance, are disposed to send us what they would have to pay at their Post Office, under the old law, we will thankfully receive the same; and so of those who receive the Crisis FREE.

WHO CONTROLS THE HUMAN HEART?

The word heart, as used in the Scriptures, generally represents the moral endowment or element of man. It is the fountain from which the moral character of each accountable act is received. Out of it proceeds the good or evil qualities of all our acts. The physical heart produces the functions of organic life, while the moral heart produces the functions of moral life. Heart is the organ of life; therefore the life is regulated by it. When it is weak, the life forces are weak; when it is strong, they are strong; when it is diseased, life is in a precarious condition; when it ceases to act, the life forces are all gone.

The moral forces are produced entirely by spirit, which moulds the character of all acts in their conception. There are but two spirits which operate in this department, one from God the Holy Spirit, the other from Satan—an unholy Spirit. The spirit of God produces love and loyalty to him. Man in his probation has the power of choice, so that by his volition he can choose the spirit to which he will yield obedience. He was made to obey some superior being;—to become the subject of some government, and his nature compels him to yield himself a servant to obey some master. As this obedience must be produced through the agency of some spirit,—for his heart can only be acted upon by spirit—it follows that his ruler must be a being who possesses a spirit by which he can control men. The Scriptures represent Christ and Satan to be such beings, each possessing a spirit by which they govern the children of men. They are antipodes, being exactly opposite in their natures and governments, consequently can never unite in possessing and controling the same heart at the same time. Christ will have no partnership with Satan in the government of man. The spirit of holiness and sin cannot mingle; one or the other prevails. "What concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you." The condition upon which God will receive us as his children is that we separate ourselves from Satan, his spirit and people, and receive Christ fully, without reservation, to be entirely his. We cannot partly belong to Christ and partly to the devil, serving both at the same time. It is impossible to serve God and mammon, for God will never accept such divided service. He demands the whole heart, and will receive nothing less. The idea that we can be christians while we are conforming to the world, interested in its speculations, financial or political, conforming to its foolish fashions and wicked habits, carried away with the spirit of worldly, pompous worship, is one of the most fatal snares ever coiled to draw men down to perdition. The liberal Christianity, giving men the assurance of glory while they are following their carnal, satanic inclinations, is a false religion, unscriptural and ensnaring.

Let none be deceived in supposing that they belong to Christ unless they are conscious of yielding all to him, to be entirely at his disposal, time, talents, reputation, property, and all to be used by him according to the teaching of his Word and Spirit. We have no assurance of boldness in the day of judgment only "because as he is so are we in this world." Christ is too holy and pure to dwell with sin and moral pollution; therefore he will not dwell in us until we become holy or sinless. He first prepares his own dwelling place, the human heart, before he occupies it by his love and Spirit. The work of washing and purifying it is done by Christ through his atoning blood, which can never leave a stain, or fail to eradicate all moral corruption.

When we put on Christ, he becomes our head as teacher, leader, ruler; and it is vain for us to suppose that we have put him on unless we accept of the gospel as his instruction, and follow the leadings of his Spirit in doing christian duties, and receive our heart inspirations from him, to control all our plans and purposes of life. He dwells in us when the principles of the divine nature become the elements controling our lives, so that they conform to his exemplary life. Pure Christianity is heavenly in its origin and nature, and as radically different from this worldly, half-hearted, superficial religion, as Christ is different from Satan, or as the next world will be different from this.

Brethren, do not allow yourselves to live a day in a cold, heartless, unsatisfying way, with your conscience accusing you of not living up to the gospel standard, acknowledging that you are not prepared to meet the coming Judge. Do not suppose that you can be saved in such a condition. We warn you in the name of Christ that it will prove a fatal snare to you. The service of Christ will be the most satisfying, and all controling business of life if we are enjoying salvation. Does Christ rule in your hearts by his Spirit and Word? If he does, then you enjoy a glorious victory over Satan and the world. Then the requirements of the gospel are in perfect harmony with your will, and the keeping of them the sweetest acts of your life.

SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH.—No. 2.

Let us look at some points of difference between the Old and New Covenants. We have said the first was a national covenant with the entire body of the Israelites, designed for their social and temporal welfare; but the keeping of it did not secure their salvation. In it all there is not a single reference to Christ. It contains no command to love God nor man. It does not condemn hatred, variance, impatience, strife, wrath, envy, evil-speaking, backbiting, selfishness, pride, boasting, malice, bigamy, incest, witchcraft, cheating, sorcery, vulgar talk, drunkenness, and over twenty other sins, which are condemned in the new covenant. Which shall we adopt? Moses and the old covenant, or Christ and the new? In the new covenant Christ is all in all. He is the alpha and omega. Peter says—"For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things, whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul, that will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." Acts 3: 22-23. In all his teachings, and in the writings of the apostles, there is not one single command to observe the Sabbath, or rest day, kept by the Jews.

Working on their rest day is not once named as a sin among Gentile nations; either under the old or new covenant. We do not see how the Jews' memorial day could be properly kept by any other people; because the reasons assigned why the children of Israel should so arrange the beginning of their six working days, that the seventh, or rest day—the Sabbath—should represent the day of their deliverance from Egypt, could not apply to any people whose fathers were not in Egyptian bondage. Even the introduction to the ten-commandment covenant makes this point prominent, as follows: "And God spake all these words, saying, I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage." After saying this, He commences giving the articles of the covenant, as they appear in the decalogue. By mutual arrangement with the Lord, the children of Israel adopted this covenant, before it was "written and engraven in stones." Had it not been mutual, it would not have been a covenant; for a covenant always implies the consent of two or more parties. That the writing on the two tables of stone was a covenant, the Bible positively and repeatedly affirms; therefore this point is out of the reach of controversy. Before the covenant was made with the children of Israel, the Lord said to them, through Moses, "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people. . . . These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel. And Moses came, and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces all these words which the Lord commanded him. And all the people answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do. And Moses returned the words of the people unto the Lord." Ex. 19: 5, 7, 8.

Immediately following this promise from the people, arrangements were made between the Lord and Moses for the meeting on Mt. Sinai, where the covenant was prepared. When it was completed, with the instruction concerning its sacrifices, surrounded and protected by its statutes, judgments and ordinances, as given in Ex. 20th, 21st, 22nd, and 23d chapters, then we read in Ex. 24: 1-8: "Moses came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments; and all the people answered with one voice, and said, All the words which the Lord hath said will we do." Then the sacrifice of burnt and peace offerings was made, and to confirm the whole, we read, "Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basins; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar." Ex. 24: 6. Having done this, "he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people; and they said, All the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient." Ex. 24: 7. Then to seal the whole thing, "Moses took the blood and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words." Ex. 24: 8. At this time, the covenant was not put on to the stones. The book containing "all these words" was called "the book of the covenant," because that was a very important part of the writing.

Paul takes up the subject and says: "Neither the first testament [or covenant] was dedicated without blood. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and the people, saying, This is the blood of the testament [or covenant] which God hath enjoined unto you." Heb. 9: 18-20. Thus Paul shows, beyond controversy, that the "first covenant," the one that "had also ordinances of divine service" (Heb. 9: 1); the one given on Mt. Sinai, that was "dedicated" with "blood" (Heb. 9: 18), is the ten-commandment covenant. And the ark in which it was kept was called "the ark of the covenant" (Heb. 9: 4); and the stones on which it was written were called "the tables of the covenant." Heb. 9: 4.

It appears certain that the foregoing scriptures can refer to no other covenant but the one on "the tables of stone." It is equally positive that this "first covenant," or the "old" one, was "abolished" when "the blood of Christ" (Heb. 9: 14) was shed on the cross to dedicate, or confirm, the "new covenant" (Heb. 8: 13), of which he was "the mediator." Heb. 9: 15. Since the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ, the church of "the living God" has been under the "new covenant," and its instruction, which nowhere directs the saints to keep the seventh day of the Jews.

As the "old" or "first covenant" "had also ordinances of divine service," it is certain that the ten-commandment one is meant, because there was no other one contained in ordinances. But the one that had the ordinances of divine service is the one that was "abolished" in the days of the apostles. We can see no possibility to come to any other conclusion, if we adhere to the plain teaching of the Bible on this subject.

When "the first covenant" was broken, of course the keeping of their memorial Sabbath, or rest day, which was to remind them of their covenant, was of no avail. If they did not observe all the "ordinances" that "contained," or surrounded the covenant, they lost the promised blessings. The Sabbath feast-day must be kept in a particular way, or it was broken. If it was not kept according to the prescribed manner in harmony with the law that regulated its ordinances, it was violated. For instance, those who kept the Sabbath day holy were required to offer "on the Sabbath day two lambs of the first year, without spot; and two tenth deals of flour for a meat offering, mingled with oil, and the drink offering thereof; this is the burnt offering of every Sabbath, beside the continual burnt offering." Num. 28: 9-10. This was to be perpetual. Who keeps the Sabbath day now? We do not know of a single individual. What right has any uninspired man to change the manner of keeping that day? Who gave him the authority? When the manner of keeping it is not observed, the day is not kept holy. The Lord prescribed a particular way, and all others were wrong. When they ceased to sacrifice their two lambs every Sabbath day, then they ceased to keep the day holy. It was no more sin to change the day, than the mode of its observance.

When the Lord gives particular directions how to do a thing, no other way will answer. If it is not according to the pattern, it is not accepted; hence those who pretend to be keeping the seventh day that the Jews observed, are every one of them Sabbath breakers; and consequently if their theory is true, they are all under condemnation. We do not see how one of them can be justified before the Lord. They have turned back from Christ to Moses; from the new to the old covenant; from the gospel to the law; from grace to works. Paul says: "Whosoever of you are justified by the law, ye are fallen from grace." Gal. 5: 4. Again he says: "If righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain." Gal. 2: 21.

A VALUABLE WORK.

Some of our readers have seen the great Map of History, twenty-two feet long, and about thirty inches wide, the engraving of which cost twenty thousand dollars. It is the result of some six years labor, by Bro. S. C. Adams, a christian minister, formerly of Salem, Oregon, now in Cincinnati, O., where he may be addressed. We have just made arrangements to keep these Historic Maps for sale at the Crisis office. The price has been twenty dollars, which was considered cheap for a work of so much value; but the price is now put down to fifteen dollars. Every family should have one of these beautiful maps; and every school in the country should have a copy. The high schools in Boston are about to introduce them. By the aid of one of these maps, one can obtain a better knowledge of history in a week than most people get in a life-time.

The map begins with Adam, in the garden of Eden, and extends to A. D. 1874. On this map will be found all the principal kingdoms of the world, with their accessions and losses; all their kings, occupying their proper place on the map, including the time they reigned; also the two hundred and sixty-three popes, with a great variety of other interesting matter, that every body should know.

The whole map is carefully marked off into centuries, and subdivisions, down to a single year, so that every king, pope, and other historic event, occupies their true chronological position; thus enabling one to see at a glance the relative situation of all the great historical events since the creation of Adam, so far as made known in the Bible and standard histories. The work has been prepared with great care and persistent labor, and is just what every minister needs, who ever has occasion to speak on the prophecies. Although it is wholly unsectarian, it affords a remarkable confirmation of the Bible historic record. The map is as it is because it cannot be any other way and be right. It is history transferred to a map, in harmony with the best authorities. Distinguished scholars say it is far in advance of anything else of the kind in the world. It is truly a work for the times and well calculated to block the wheels of infidelity.

WORCESTER.—Sabbath, Oct. 11th, we spent very pleasantly with the church in Worcester. That church is a living one, and continually growing up into Christ under the faithful pastoral labors of Bro. S. G. Mathewson. The subject of christian holiness meets with warm favor, and many of its members are rejoicing in the blessing of "perfect love."

DISCUSSION ON TRINE IMMERSION.

Our discussion with Bro. W. C. Thurman on the subject of "Trine Immersion," closed Monday evening, Sept. 28th, having been continued five evenings. We are very much pleased with the results. Bro. Thurman is most thoroughly posted in the argument supposed to prove trine immersion, having been associated with the Dunkers, or Tunkers,* who hold to this doctrine. He has written works on the subject, and spent much time in its investigation. We will give some of his strongest points, with the rebutting evidence.

After the commencement of the debate, we soon found that the "Apostolical Constitutions" and "Canons" were the source from whence came a large amount of his proof. One strong point in his evidence in favor of trine immersion was the fact that the Greek church had long practiced this mode. Chrysostom, an old Greek author of much note, had spoken in favor of trine immersion; also some distinguished Catholic authors, which led Bro. Thurman to conclude that this mode of baptism was the most ancient, and apostolic. His strongest evidence was taken from what purported to be the writings of Clement, of Rome, who died about A. D. 100, the same year of the death of John the Revelator. This Clement is the one whom the Greek church, and many in the Catholic church, claim was the one who prepared the "Apostolical Constitution" and "Canons," which consist of eight books. The fiftieth canon in the eighth book reads as follows: "If any bishop or presbyter does not perform the three immersions of the one admission, but one immersion, which is given into the death of Christ, let him be deprived; for the Lord did not say, 'Baptize into my death,' but, "Go ye and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Do ye, therefore, a bishop, baptize thrice unto one Father, and Son, and Holy Ghost, according to the will of Christ, and our constitution by the Spirit."

This canon is the stronghold, the Gibralter of proof, in favor of trine immersion. Both the Greek and Catholic churches adopted these canons in the fifth century, and the Greek church to the present time. The Catholics rejected them by a council in A. D. 633; but as the Greek church still hold on to them as genuine, they accordingly practice trine immersion, in harmony with the instruction contained in the fiftieth canon.

Finding that the "Apostolical Constitutions" and "Canons" were the stronghold of proof in favor of trine immersion, that on which the Greek church mainly rested for its evidence, we saw it was necessary to examine carefully the reliability of the "Constitution" and "Canons." We turned to Mosheim, the noted church historian, and found him speaking as follows:—

"The learned are now unanimous in regarding the other writings which bear the name of Clemens; viz., the apostolic canons, apostolic constitutions, the Reconyntions, of Clemens, and Clementina, as spurious productions, ascribed by some impostor to this venerable prelate, in order to procure for them a high degree of authority. . . . The eight books of Apostolical Constitutions are the work of some austere and melancholy author, who, having taken it into his head to reform the christian worship, which he looked upon as degenerated from its original purity, made no scruples to prefix to his rules the names of the apostles, that thus they might be the more speedily and favorably received."—Mosheim's History of the Church, Vol. 1, p. 108,9.

"Krabbe, who wrote an elaborate treatise on the origin and contents of the Apostolical Constitutions," came to the conclusion "that the first seven books were written 'towards the end of the third century.' The 8th book, he thinks, must have been written at the end of the fourth, or beginning of the fifth."—Introductory Notes to the Apostolical Constitutions.

Turning to the Apostolical Constitutions and Canons, we find them commencing with the following salutation:

"The apostles and elders to all those who from among the Gentiles have believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, grace and peace from Almighty God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, be multiplied unto you in the acknowledgement of him. Book 1, Sec. 1, p. 15.

"In Book 8, Sec. 2, c. 1, p. 212, we find the following:

"Wherefore we, the twelve apostles of the Lord, who are now together, give you in charge those divine constitutions concerning every ecclesiastical form, there being present with us Paul, the chosen vessel, our fellow apostle, and James the bishop, and the rest of the presbyters, and the seven deacons."

In the 8th Book, chap. 6, Sec. 2, p. 256, we read:

"High priests, priests, and Levites were ordained by Moses, the most beloved God. By our Savior were we apostles, thirteen in number, ordained, and by the apostles I, James, and I, Clement, and others with us, were ordained, that we may not make the catalogue of all those bishops over again."

In Book 2, chap. 39, p. 68, is the following: "I, Matthew, one of those twelve which speak to you in this doctrine, am an apostle, having myself been formerly a publican."

In Book, 5, c. 7, p. 125, we read: "He will restore the bodies, which have been dissolved, to the souls that are still in being."

After speaking of various things in our Lord's history, they say:

"We, who have eaten and drank with him, and have been spectators of his wonderful works, and of his life, and of his conduct, and of his words, and of his sufferings, and of his death, and of his resurrection, and who received a command from him to preach the gospel to all the world, . . . we teach you all these things. Book 5, c. 7, p. 127.

If these Constitutions and Canons were genuine, coming from the apostles, through Clement, as is claimed, then their authority would be the same as that of their writings in the New Testament. Assuming this to be true, then we have very strong proof in favor of trine immersion, according to the plain teaching in the fiftieth Canon. As the Greek church adopted these as the genuine writings of the apostles, by Clement, of course that church must practice trine immersion, as did also the Catholic church, till the fourth council of Toledo (A. D. 633,) which, by the advice of Gregory the Great, "decreed that henceforth only one immersion should be used in baptism."—Hunton's History of Baptism, p. 150.

Chrysostom,* an able Greek scholar, and member of the Greek church, advocated trine immersion, according to the fiftieth Apostolic Canon.

The fact that Chrysostom and the Greek church taught and practiced trine immersion, and that it was enjoined by Clement, who died A. D. 100, it was claimed, wrote the Apostolical Constitutions and Canons, in company with all the twelve apostles, led Bro. Thurman and others to feel very confident that trine immersion must have been the mode of baptism in the days of Christ and his apostles. But when it was shown that "the learned are now unanimous in regarding . . . the Apostolic Canons, the Recognitions of Clement, and Clementina, as spurious productions," Bro. Thurman, like an honest man, gave up all the evidence that rested on these productions, which of course nullified the testimony of Chrysostom, the Greek and Catholic churches between A. D. 498 and 633, when trine immersion prevailed most extensively. When it was shown that the genuine Clement, who died A. D. 100, had nothing to do with the Apostolical Canons and Constitutions, which were prepared more than two hundred years after his death, Bro. Thurman said very nobly, he was ashamed that he had made such a mistake as to introduce a spurious Clement as a witness to prove trine immersion.

After fully clearing up this point, the next question to settle was, From whence came trine immersion? Where did it originate, and why was it incorporated into the Apostolical Canons? Neither of us were able to trace it back to A. D. 130, when Marcion started the sect called Marcionites, hence we read of the "three-fold baptism of the Marcionites." Homilies, Credner, Vol. 3, p. 308, Hagenback's History of Doctrine, Vol, 1, p. 196. Marcion taught the people to be "baptized three times." Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, p. 773. It appears that at first, Marcion advocated trine immersion only for a special class of advanced christians, but it soon spread quite extensively, and became the prevailing mode. Epiphanius speaks of the "multitudes of people" who followed him "in Italy, Egypt, Palestina, Arabia, and Syria, in Cyprus, Thebais, Persia, and other places."

In Ancient Christianity Exemplified, p. 364, we read as follows: "Certain religious sects . . . were accustomed to rebaptize, others, again, contended that it must be thrice administered, to be valid. Such was the custom of the Marcionites and Valentinians."

These and other facts show that trine baptism originated with the Marcionites, and when it had spread so as to bid fair to become the prevailing mode, the one who wrote the Apostolical Constitutions and Canons thought best to enjoin it in the fiftieth Canon.

Those who read the Apostolical Constitutions and Canons will find the writer takes special pains to exalt the clergy, presbyters and bishops. Probably no one book has aided so much to exalt the Catholic clergy, in their early history, and prepare the way for the Pope, as these spurious Apostolical Constitutions and Canons. They afforded the needed stepping stones to clerical authority, and priestly rule, for which the Catholic church has been so noted. The claim that they were prepared by the twelve apostles gave them the highest authority, and those who received them as genuine, felt under the same obligation to obey their instruction as any portion of the New Testament.

Tertullian, a noted Catholic writer, who flourished between A. D. 190 and 214, in the reigns of the emperors Severus and Caracalla, adopted trine immersion, as taught by the Marcionites, while at the same time he opposed other things advocated by Marcion. After he was past middle life he became a follower of Montanus, who claimed to be one who was to complete what Christ left unfinished. He assumed to be a prophet, and was accompanied by two prophetesses.

Jerome, another distinguished Catholic, who was born A. D. 331, and died 420, sustained trine immersion. The examples of these men and some others, did much towards making trine baptism sufficiently popular to be placed in the Apostolical Canons.

After this examination of the historic evidence, we felt sure that trine immersion was a heresy, which originated with Marcion. Having settled this point, Bro. Thurman then turned to the Bible for proof, which we purpose to notice next week.

* The Dunkers, or Tunkers, commenced in 1708, in Schwartzenau, Germany. "The name Tunker (from the name tunken, to dip) was originally given them as a nickname to distinguish them from the Menonites. They are called Tumblers from their mode of baptism, which is by putting the person, while kneeling, head first under water, so that the motion resembles the act of tumbling. . . Between 1719 and 1729, they all emigrated to America."—Zell's Encyclopædia, vol. 2, pp. 1033, 1034.

The Dunkers are most numerous in Pa., Md., Va., Ohio and Indiana. They are scattered into almost every State in the Union.

* Chrysostom was born A. D. 347, made bishop of Constantinople A. D. 378, and died A. D. 407.

BIBLE AND SCIENCE.

It is a pleasing fact that the Bible harmonizes with all true science, but it is greatly at variance with popular theology. Some men have been called infidels for stating facts that were in harmony with the sacred Scriptures, although it is true that they disagreed with human creeds. Many candid, thinking men, have come to the conclusion that man's mental powers, like his physical, are dependent upon his organism; and that, when he is dead, he stops thinking till the resurrection. This is in harmony with common sense and the Bible.

The following reference to Dr. Priestley shows that his thoughts on the nature of man were not so far from the Scriptures as some have supposed:

M. G.

"Priestley carried his philosophic meditations into other fields than chemistry, and among the most obnoxious of his deeds was an elaborate argument in support of absolute materialism. He reasoned out with remarkable acuteness that in the nature of a man there was but one substance, and that material; that the so-called freedom or self-determination of the will in man had no reality, but that he was subject to necessity like other things in the universe, and that his corollary from that, plainly expressed, was that there was no such thing as the immortality of the soul. At the same time, Priestley held the immortality of the soul with singular force, but he believed that that immortality did not adhere to man in his natural state, but was a fresh and miraculous gift conferred upon him by the Creator at the resurrection. Prof. Huxley proceeded to show that several dignitaries of the Church of England had expressed opinions precisely the same in substance, and on the same thesis as Priestley's—notably, Archbishop Whately and Bishop Courtenay—yet they had lived in peace and quietness. But what was not blamable in a dignitary of the church became so in a dissenter."—Springfield Republican.

TENT-MEETING.—Our Advent Mission Tent meeting has commenced in Fall River favorably. We had a good attendance yesterday (Oct. 11th), and the people were interested so much, that questions were asked relative to our faith, which we promised them should be answered in the course of our meeting. It is to continue afternoons and evenings, as long as duty demands. Will the brethren in the region come in and help us? The tent is on North Main St., near Bowinville Depot. L. BOUTELL.

CORRECTION.

The statement that Bro. N. Mc'Culloch and family have left Rochester, N. Y., has been circulated somewhat extensively in this section, both to the injury of Bro. Mc'Culloch and the cause here; therefore I wish to say through the Crisis that his family are here, and do not expect to leave, and that he is only away at work at his trade for a short time. J. S. Extracts from Letters.

BRO. J. P. DAVIS, Middletown, Conn., writes:—"I wish to say, for the encouragement of those who are laboring to extend God's truth in the land, through the pages of the Crisis, I am weekly benefitted by it, and do not scruple to say, I prize it next to my Bible. It causes the word of God to shine brighter on my pilgrimage journey in these last days of peril, as the apostle foresaw (2 Tim. 3: 1). Amid these days of abounding wickedness, we see that both love to God and man is waxing cold. 'Evil men and seducers' are waxing 'worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.' People's hearts are waxed gross; their ears are dull of hearing the truth; their eyes see not, having closed, and they understand not with their hearts. O! in this sad state of Christendom, is it not high time for every true professed follower of our Lord to gird up the loins of his mind, be sober, and watch unto prayer, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh?"

BRO. D. D. REED writes from Santa Clara, Cal.:—"The church in Santa Clara is gaining ground. We never had so much of the Holy Spirit in our meetings as of late. We have fellowship one with another, and we feel that the blood of Jesus Curist cleanses from all sin. We have commenced to reckon ourselves 'dead indeed unto sin;' and alive unto God, through Jesus our great Lifegiver. What we all need is more of the good, old-fashioned religion, Christ in us 'the hope of glory.' If we trust in anything short of this, we shall miss the kingdom of God. Many think of being saved because they believe this or that, or have done something; but it will all prove abortive in that great day. We must be in Christ here, or lost when he comes."

BRO. E. BELLOWS writes:—"To-day (Sunday, Oct. 4th) closes up our tent-meeting in this place, near Hazard's Mills. The meeting has been good; saints have been comforted, and confirmed; some wanderers and sinners have professed to be saved; the seed of truth has been sown, and many have had an opportunity to see, by an exposition of the sure word of prophecy, that the end of all earthly things is at hand."

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 13th, 1874, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

TENT MEETINGS.

Dearly Beloved:—Since campmeetings, I have been continually engaged in tent meetings, and have seen the work of the Lord prosper exceedingly. There is something exciting in seeing a tent pitched, and the news never fails to get circulation. Then an inquiry comes, "What is that here for, especially in a thicket of meeting-houses?" Finding readily it is for the specific purpose of preaching this "blessed" gospel of the coming of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to make every effort by prayer, fasting, preaching and beseeching, with self-denial, long-suffering, and earnest entreaties for the purpose of saving the lost by the good news of a remedy that never fails to reach the hardest case, when the medicine is taken or applied according to the prescription. They find the tent door is open to all, the rich and the poor, bidding them all a hearty welcome to the choice of seats. There is no proscription on account of the cloth they wear, or where they go to meeting. It is a welcome place to those who are not in the habit of visiting the popular places of worship for lack of means to appear in their gaudy apparel. In the present generation meeting-houses are built for those like Dives, but Lazarus can come only to the door, seldom finding any healing ointment to heal his sores; but the Mission tent calls and welcomes all, telling them it is everybody's meeting-house who wills or wishes to hear of Jesus. The attention has been so great, wherever we have hoisted the flag of salvation by pitching the Mission tent, that we have not failed of good congregations every evening, and sometimes afternoons.

I have not seen so much interest manifested to hear the words of this life for ten years, as of late, under the tent. The Bible plan of saving a lost race has not lost its power upon dying men; neither the crowning truth of the Bible, the coming of our Lord to fill the earth with his glory. All that is wanting is a ministry that lives "at the fountain, drinking" the water of life hourly, and a membership that believes on Christ as the Scriptures say, so that the streams of living water may overflow; then the refreshing will come. Workers of this kind will find enough to do, and will be successful in building up one another, and also in adding to the family of the first-born from the dead.

The time is about over for tent-meetings this year, but there is no way I know of to reach the people like a tent; and if time should continue till warm weather comes again, preparations should be made for meetings in every place where they have not heard the good news, and holy men should be all ready to make the sacrifice and go. The work is delightful. With a true yoke-fellow I would like to take the Mission tent into the Southern field, blow the trumpet, sound the alarm, and tell them the day of the Lord cometh with the Savior's speedy return. I feel just like it. Glory to God in the highest! It is high time to seek a larger sphere of action, where more can be reached. A vigorous effort should be made, by having meetings all about. Leave the old track and the old stubs for a time, till they can appreciate their privileges. Make inroads into new fields.

May God, by the Holy Spirit, infuse the missionary spirit into us all. It seems as though we were almost lifeless, and satisfied with doing nothing. No means, money hard, benevolence flagging, Christianity at a low temperature, all satisfied, while the love of the world worketh death. These things ought not so to be. Do you want to see a better state of things? All will say, Yes. The Lord wishes to see a mighty change for the better. Then where is the fault? In you, not in the Lord. Then you can arouse and do better. Will you? I see the multitude going the broad road to death, and now is the time to save by pulling men out of the fire. "O Lord, revive thy work." Cause thy people to bring their tithes into the storehouse, and prove thee. Blessings will come, and the rust of gold would begin to be worn off by its circulation, and hearts would be made glad, both by the giver and receiver, while the water of life would run freely, and a new song of praise would be heard below, and the angels of God would shout for joy.

L. BOUTELL.

ELD. GEORGE THOMSON.

Dear Brethren:—To all who feel an interest in the welfare of Elder Geo. Thomson, this is especially addressed. Elder Thomson is now living in a small house in this village, and is dependent for his support upon donations received from his friends. He is entirely helpless, but all his trust is in the Lord. Brn. Wm. Carter and Stephen R. Bentley have been chosen receivers, and remittances by mail should be addressed to Wm. Carter, or Stephen R. Bentley, Prairie du Sac, Wisconsin. Articles sent by freight should be sent as above, via. Merrimack.

Those who wish, can send to Elder Geo. Thomson, Prairie du Sac, Wis.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Louisiana.---An Organized Mob at New Orleans.

NEW YORK, Oct. 12. A special despatch to the Republic from New Orleans, dated last night, has the following: "Events to-day show that apprehensions of pending danger were not without foundation. This afternoon a Republican mass meeting was being held in St. James parish. It had been advertised, and threats had been made of breaking it up should it assemble. Many negroes had been intimidated by threats of violence from attending. However, about two o'clock quite a large assembly had come together, composed of whites and blacks. No signs of disturbance appeared, and the meeting was duly organized.

After transacting some routine business and appointing a committee to draft a series of resolutions, one of the speakers arose to address the meeting, when suddenly and without any warning whatever an armed mob, under the leadership of the notorious ex-Senator Bovey, an ex-rebel and Democratic politician, of New Orleans, a reputed leader and organizer of the White Leagues, and charged with having been an officer in the old Ku-Klux organizations, appeared upon the grounds at the head of an armed body of men. It was not a mob, but had the appearance of being an organized, well disciplined organization. This body was accompanied by a mob armed with pistols, knives and clubs. An indiscriminate assault was instantaneously made upon the meeting.

Two men were killed by the first fire and a number wounded, several fatally, among them a lady. The meeting at once broke up and the participants ran for their lives. They were pursued in all directions by the infuriated mob. Bovey seemed to lose all control of his men. Himself under the influence of liquor, they joined with the mob and became general rioters, shooting and clubbing any one who came in their way. One negro was seized by the rioters and dragged away by a rope around his neck

A fire was set to the dwelling of one of the leaders of the meeting, but extinguished by the mob when it became apparent that the property of some of their number was endangered. An alarm was given that United States troops were hurrying to the scene, which caused the lawless ruffians to disperse to grog shops and other places of resort for consultation and reorganization. The disturbance caused the greatest excitement and apprehensions. No one who has professed loyalty to the Federal Government feels safe, and many are starting with their families for the North, fleeing for their lives, leaving their property unprotected behind them. The negroes seem to feel their utter helplessness and despair.

U. S. TROOPS CALLED OUT.

LATER. Gen. Emory has called all his forces in from the barracks, and two companies have gone to the scene. Two 12-pounders have been planted before the State House, and the muzzles of howitzers grin defiantly from commanding positions.

BOTH PARTIES ARMING.

Both parties are arming. The White Leagues do not now attempt to conceal their strength. They are well armed with rifles and revolvers. It is disclosed that large quantities of arms have been received in this city within the last three days. They came in boxes labelled "boots and shoes," and were directed to men suspected of connection with rebel organizations. The rebels do not hesitate now to boldly defy the Federal Government. They say they will re-establish the Confederacy and that the Crescent City shall be the capital. The greatest excitement and disorder spread throughout the city as the news of the disturbance in St. James parish was known.

MATTERS WARLIKE.

The rebellion is renewed. War is actually threatened, and only the strong military power of the Government can preserve peace. Two companies of Custer's cavalry have reached Shreveport. The remaining battallions have just reached the landing. They will at once be distributed to points where they can be most available in aiding the authorities to overcome armed resistance to the authorities.

NEGROES AFRAID TO REGISTER.

New York, Oct. 12 The Times' New Orleans special says that the State Register is daily in receipt of reports from country districts. In seventeen of the Red River parishes very few negroes have registered as yet, and all over the Northern part of the State they seem afraid to exercise their rights. In New Orleans, on the contrary, nearly all the League voters have registered, and a very full vote is expected.

SALT LAKE, Monday, Oct. 12. This afternoon, Deputy United States Marshal Orson Pratt, son of Apostle Pratt, attempted to serve a subpœna upon Brigham Young to appear before the grand jury, but was resisted. United States Marshal Maxwell then took the subpœna, and started with Deputy Marshal Pratt to serve the process. On entering Brigham Young's private office, adjoining Young's room, the door-keeper assaulted Maxwell, kicking him in the back unseen, and knocked the officers prostrate, over one hundred armed Mormons, headed by Mayor Wells and other apostles, assisting in the resistance. Maxwell immediately summoned a possee, and arrested the doorkeeper and others, and finally made the service on Brigham Young. Great excitement prevails over the arrest. Gov. Wood, on hearing that Maxwell was being resisted, issued an order for troops.

THE EARTHQUAKE AT ANTIGUA.—A correspondent, describing the recent fearful earthquake at Antigua, (Guatemala, says the ground was shaken in a direction from west to east. The movement was a series of strong vertical and horizontal impulses combined. The wave-like undulations on the surface rose and fell at least a foot. This action, along with the vertical movement, made it almost impossible to move about without being thrown to the ground. It gave one a feeling as if he stumbled into a hole, and then stumbled against an elevated body which prevented him from recovering his equilibrium. The situation was rendered still more dismal by the darkness, it being night when the shocks occurred. The first strong shock lasted from twenty-five to thirty seconds. Long after that passed there was still the sound of walls falling more or less distant. Suddenly arose the sounds of hundreds of voices chanting a hymn to the Creator for mercy; the solemn melody had a strange effect. Many shocks followed during the night, of varying intensities, every one of which gave rise to new alarms and new petitions for mercy. The night seemed an age in length; fortunately no rain fell. Even during the terror of the first shock there were not wanting hardened wretches who appeared with long knives for the purpose of stealing and murdering, and tried to do so, but fortunately the political chief of Antigua proved to be the right man for the occasion. He took measures at once to put down such pests of society, and saved the people of Antigua from murder and plunder.—Boston Journal.

PROSPECTS OF WAR BETWEEN CHINA AND JAPAN.—In reference to the difficulties between these nations regarding Formosa, the Japan Mail says: "War is regarded as inevitable by the foreigners in both countries, and it is difficult to understand how it can possibly be avoided."

Obituaries

LADD. At Fitch Bay, Feb. 14th, 1874, Miss Abbie F., daughter of William at Betsey Ladd, aged twenty years and three days.

The pure and lovely things of earth are the first to pass away. The pearly dew drop glistens in the morning sunshine but an hour. The lovely flowers droop and die. Sr. Abbie's young life passed before us in spotless purity, and we saw her depart as we would watch the setting of a bright star, or the going out of a clear light, leaving us to mourn in sadness her transient stay. As her strength fled the love of Jesus grew more and more precious. Her faith was strong and beautiful. She would frequently say to her dear mother, "Oh! I wish you could give me up. It won't be but a little while, and I will meet you again. Yes, I will meet you in the morning."

She was fully consecrated to God, and was ripe for the kingdom. Oh, may the dear young friends of Abbie all try to follow her, as she followed Jesus, and meet her in the glorious morning. It may be truly said none knew her but to love her. Her voice is missed in the choir of which she was a faithful member, and may those who are left go to join the blessed choir of the redeemed of the Lord, and sing with Abbie on the new earth. Abbie is mourned by a large circle of friends. She had been useful and pure in life, so she was peaceful and lovely in death. A very excellent discourse was preached by Eld. Sornburger, from these words: "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." We mourn, but not as those without hope. A FRIEND.

DOLLOFF. At Concord, N. H., Oct. 1st, Herbert Warren Dolloff, son of Frank F. and Jennie Dolloff, aged five months.

So fades the flower before the blast,
But when death's reign is overpast,
The withered buds to life shall spring,
And with the saved awake and sing.
M. L. M.

CADWELL. In Shabbona, Ill., Aug. 24th, 1874, of consumption, Sarah A., wife of Richard Cadwell, aged thirty-one years.

She has gone from among us, and we mourn, though not as those having no hope; for we believe she will one day be called forth among the redeemed, to ever be with Him whom she trusted, having full faith that he would care for and watch over her child, whom she leaves in this cold, selfish world. She was enabled, amid suffering and trials, to look up and say, "Thy will be done." Words of comfort by Eld. H. G. McCulloch. Text, Job 14: 1, 2. E. THOMPSON.

HODSDON. Peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, in Tuftonborough, N. H., July 25th, 1874, Bro. Samuel Hodsdon, aged seventy-seven years.

Bro. H was one who first embraced the blessed truth of the coming of Christ at hand, and all other consistent kindred truths. He was truly one of those (whether in temporal or spiritual things) who, whatever his hands found to do, did it with his might. The church here, as well as his family, have sustained a great loss in the death of our dear brother. Death has triumphed, but blessed be God, its triumph will be short. Our brother leaves a faithful wife and several children, who deeply mourn his loss. Funeral attended by the writer. T. W. PIPER.

BARROWS. In Bridgewater, Vt., Sept. 6th, 1874, of typhoid diphtheria, Ella Barrows, wife of Mortimer Barrows, and only daughter of Sister Topliff, aged nineteen years and seven months.

She leaves a husband, infant child, and a sad, widowed mother, with other friends, to mourn her loss. She had been a subject of much care and affection of her mother all through her life; but now she has laid her away in deep sadness, to await the reward of all mankind.

May these afflicted friends, who feel so keenly the smart of this stroke, turn wholly to the Lord, and find in him a balm for every wound. Services attended by the writer. ALLEN DAMON.

JOHNSON. In the same town, of apoplexy, Hezekiah Johnson, aged eighty-one years and eleven months.

He leaves children and grandchildren to mourn his loss. He also sleeps in the grave so low, until the last loud trump shall sound, when all shall stand before their God to receive a reward that shall be according to their works. Services attended by the writer. ALLEN DAMON.

BRADLEY. At the residence of her daughter, in Royalston, Sept. 15th, 1874, Mrs. Jane H. Bradley, aged eighty-three years, two months, and ten days.

Our aged mother was formerly a native of Rutland, Vt., where she united herself to the Christian Advent church. She was a christian, and respected as such by all. Although living far from any of that denomination, her christian faith has been supported by the weekly perusal of the Crisis, which she enjoyed very much; also the reading of the Bible gave her life and strength until her last. MARY A. RUGG.

MILLS. In Topsham, Vt., Sept. 3d, 1874, of heart disease, Mrs. Esther, wife of Mr. William Mills, aged seventy-four years and six months.

She fell asleep trusting in Jesus, in hope of a resurrection at the last day. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 17, 18. ELD. D. D. PAGE.

DICKERMAN. Also in Topsham, Vt., Sept. 16th, 1874, Miss Arabella B. Dickerman, daughter of Lemuel O. and Esther A. Dickerman, aged fifteen years and five months.

She is sweetly sleeping. May God bless, guide and comfort the parents, and bring them all to enjoy the saints' sweet home on the earth renewed. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from Amos 4: 12. D. D. PAGE.

STAPLES. In South Casco, Me., Aug. 6th, 1874, Bro. James Staples, aged eighty-eight years.

Bro. S. was one of the first, in the town of C., to embrace those doctrines that have distinguished us as a people. And although he lived to an advanced age, he never lost his love for the Bible and its sacred teachings. The second coming of Christ, and events connected with his coming, were ever a theme of deep interest. He leaves a widow, one son, and many friends to mourn his loss. Only a few of the aged ones remain, but death, the last enemy, will soon be destroyed. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1st Thess. 4: 18. J. T. JORDAN.

PHILLIPS. In Woodstock, Ct., July 9th, 1874, Sr. Minnie Phillips, aged thirty-three years.

Sr. P. experienced religion some four years ago, and embraced the Bible hope of life and immortality only through Christ. She now sweetly sleeps in Jesus, and has left a dear companion, a little daughter, and many other friends to mourn, but not without hope. Words of comfort were spoken at the time of her burial by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13. P. S. BUTLER.

Notices.

WESTERN CONFERENCE.—A General Religious Conference for the promotion of piety among believers, and conversion of unbelievers, will be held in the Green Street Tabernacle, Chicago, Ill., commencing on Wednesday, Oct. 21st, at 7½ P. M., and continuing over the following Lord's day. It is expected that Elds. Miles Grant, S. G. Mathewson, and John Couch, from the East, will attend this meeting. We invite all to attend who can come, from far and near, and we hope all who come will bring with them a holy zeal for God and Jesus Christ. We specially invite brethren and sisters in the west to come up to this feast, and help in the cause of Christ. Let there be a general rally. For the church, FRANK BURR, Pastor.

CONFERENCE AT MELVIN VILLAGE, N. H.—The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Melvin Village, commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 22d, to hold over the following Sabbath. Brn. E. A. Stockman, J. Parsons, and D. Churchill are expected to preach the word. A generous invitation is extended to all. T. W. PIPER.

THE first session of the Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will meet with the church at Brunswick (Gardiner school-house), Thursday, Oct. 22d, to hold over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, to work for the Lord and to save sinners.
H. D. REED, President.
H. S. MITCHELL, Secretary.

A TWO DAYS MEETING will be held at Darien, Genesee Co., N. Y., commencing Friday evening, Oct. 16th, it being the twelfth Annual Meeting at that place. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend. Teams will be at Croft's Station at three o'clock P. M. to meet the cars from the east, and six o'clock P. M. from the west.
In behalf of the brethren, C. W. LOW.

TO THE BRETHREN IN KANSAS.—I would respectfully call your attention to the following proposition.

Resolved, That the churches throughout this State of Kansas call a special conference to meet on or about the 23d of Oct., 1874 to be held where there is a body of believers, and as near central among the churches now organized as circumstances will admit of. That the meeting be composed of ministers of the Kansas Advent Christian Conference, and delegates from the different churches; also that all lovers of the cause throughout the State be invited to attend.

The object of this meeting to be for the special benefit, and cheering up of all those interested in the proclamation of Bible truths, and to devise plans for a more vigorous fall and winter campaign. That the meeting commence on Friday, and continue over the following Sabbath.

Now I simply make the above proposition as one among the many interested in the cause of truth and its general prosperity. And I desire that all who read this that are interested, immediately write to me, giving their opinion in full. Also that the churches who desire the meeting to be held with them, and are willing to feed the hungry ones during the meeting, mention it in their letter. Respectfully, V. F. HUNT, Box 104, Wellington, Sumner Co., Kansas.

HAVING supplied the church in East Concord one half of the time during the past year, I intend closing my labors with them on the first Sunday in Nov. After which time I shall be at liberty to labor in places as the way opens.
ENOCH MORRILL, South Deerfield, N. H.

NOTICE.—As I expect my labors in this section will soon close, I would say I shall be ready to go and preach "the gospel of the kingdom" anywhere, as the Lord may open the way, the coming fall and winter. Any wishing to correspond with me can direct for the present to A. P. MOORE, Linden, Genesee Co., N. Y.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—For Eld. W. H. Ingham, from Albert Pratt, $3.00; from William Doley, $2.00. GEO. T. ADAMS.

DEARLY BELOVED, the Mass. Mission Tent is in the field. We have no funds in the treasury. Shall it stop, while the calls are being made upon us, for lack of means? L. BOUTELL.

TO VERMONTERS.—At our annual conference at Bethel, the State Committee were urged to carry the gospel of the kingdom into every new field which opened a door, and especially to offer a week of labor for any five dollars pledged by an isolated brother or sister living in a new field. This was to encourage individual effort and sacrifice on the part of the isolated. We want to hear immediately from those places where labors are desired, that we may make due arrangements to meet the demands. If you are too poor to raise five dollars, and yet the door is open for a meeting, write us just the same as though you raised the money. Write to me at Waterbury, Vt., or to A. A. Hoyt, Plainfield, Vt. Write full particulars of circumstances, people, time, and place. Write soon.
H. F. CARPENTER, President of Conference.

HOOSICK VALLEY CONFERENCE.—The annual meeting of the Hoosick Valley Adv. Chris. Conference will be held with the church in Hoosick, N. Y., commencing Oct. 21st, 1874, and continue over the following Sunday.

Let every church and locality within the bounds of this Conference be represented at this meeting by delegates duly appointed. We hope to see a large gathering of the friends of Jesus at this meeting. The church at Hoosick have kindly invited us to hold this annual session with them, and as ever they will provide for and entertain at their homes all who come. Come therefore to this annual feast. Come from the hill top and valley, from the cities and the rural districts Let us go to Hoosick and worship the God of our fathers in spirit and in truth; go to impart good and get good. Let us have this year less form, and more devotion; less debate, and more of Christ; less strife, and more peace; less of the external, and more of the internal; that whatsoever is done may be done to the glory of God.

Purchase tickets at the R. R. stations for Hoosick Corners, and there will be teams on the arrival of the train from Adams at one and half-past two P. M. from Troy, each day of the Conference, free of charge. A. W. SIBLEY, President.

THE next Maine Central Quarterly Meeting will be held at Belgrade Mills, commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 22d, and continue over the following Sunday. A general invitation is given to brethren and sisters to unite with us in preparing a people for the coming of Jesus. Homes provided for all. Call on Charles Austin, Wm. Hersom, C. H. Kelley, Edwin J. Farnham, F. E. Blaisdell. and others. Per order, H. B. SEVEY.

TENT-MEETING NOTICE.—We are obliged to withdraw our notice for tent-meeting at Elliott, Me., as we are now with the tent at Fall River, Mass., and it is duty to remain through this week, and over Sunday, Oct. 18th, and perhaps longer. There is a good hearing, and good interest, and it is doubtful about getting away so as to have another tent-meeting this fall.
ENOCH MORRILL.

THERE will be a meeting of days at Bonny Eagle, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 22d, at seven o'clock, and holding over the following Sabbath. A general invitation is given to all the friends to come and worship with us. It is expected that preaching brethren will be present to preach the word. In behalf of the church,
JESSE GAY.

OHIO CONFERENCE.—The annual session of the Ohio State Conference will be held, the Lord willing, with the church in Norwalk, Huron Co., O., commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 15th, and continue over the following Sabbath. This will be an important meeting for the cause of truth in this State. Let every A. C. Church in the State appoint delegates without fail; also let all who love the appearing of our Lord in glory, and the resurrection of the dead, come. All are welcome, and will be provided for.
E. MCCULLOCH, President.

THE DELAWARE DISTRICT A. C. CONFERENCE is hereby called to meet and hold its second semi-annual session at the Second Advent Christian Hall, on Seventh street, below Poplar, Philadelphia, Pa., commencing Friday evening, Nov. 13th, and continue over the Sabbath. This conference embraces the District of Columbia, Delaware, New Jersey, and Eastern Pennsylvania. It is earnestly hoped that every church sympathizing with us will be represented, either by letter or delegates. Every church or religious body co-operating with this conference, is entitled to one delegate, and an additional delegate for every ten members. All letters of correspondence for the conference can be addressed to Edwin King, 1716 Francis Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
A. G. JAYNE, President.
EDWIN KING, Secretary.

DEDICATION.—There will be a dedication of the Advent and Univeesalist Union meeting-house in Milo, Me., Oct. 16th and 17th J. R. Hall and other preachers are expected. We extend a cordial invitation to all to attend.
For the church, W. T. LIVERMORE.

THE next annual session of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held with the church in Bristol, commencing Wednesday evening, Oct. 14th, to continue over the following Lord's day. We hope there will be a general gathering at this meeting.
G. L. WHITE, Secretary.

THE Lord willing, we will commence a meeting at Woodhull, Steuben Co., N. Y., Oct. 29th, and continue over the following Sunday. Hope the brethren and sisters will pray for us, that good may be done in the name of the Lord. A general invitation is given to attend.
JOHN T. ONGLEY.
E. H. EGGLESTON.

J. G. SMITH and J. W. WHITE will preach in Farmington, N. H., two Sundays in each month, as long as it seems duty. J. G. Smith the first, and J. W. White the third.

P. S. As there is an appointment for the first Sunday in Nov., J. G. Smith will be there the second. Will preachers coming to Farmington please notice this arrangement. J. G. SMITH.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting held in Salisbury, N. H., at the Union meeting-house, commencing Friday, Nov. 27th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands.
C. H. FLETCHER.
D. F. LEAVITT.

THE Second Quarterly Meeting for the Eastern District of Wisconsin A. C. Conference will be held with the church at Fairfield, Sauk Co., Wis., commencing in the evening of Oct. 23d, and holding over the Lord's day. Every church in the district is requested to send one or more delegates. We hope to see a large gathering. Come in the name of the Lord, and to work for him.
E. P. GRAVES.

THE Ministerial Committee having been called to investigate difficulties at Rochester Village, N. H., hereby recommend that all ministers who are members of the New Hampshire Conference decline to minister to either party until a full investigation can be had, or until the next session of the conference. E. A. STOCKMAN.

THAT BOOK.

"History of the Second Advent Message, Doctrine and People."

This work is now ready for all. It contains the history of the rise and progress of the proclamation of the Second Advent of Christ, near at hand, from A. D. 1820 to the present time, in America, Europe, Asia, and Africa; with sketches of the great reformations accompanying it; of many of the chief pioneers associated with it; the great opposers, and their futile efforts to defeat the work. Records of its rapid progress, and of many of the remarkable manifestations of God's guiding hand in the work. Discussions, lectures, sermons, dialogues, and chief points of doctrine advocated by the various classes of believers in the Lord's soon coming.

Records and tables of the prophetic times of Daniel and John, as advocated by the chief Protestant writers, all of whom terminate the periods between 1836 and 1880. A sketch of Luther and his times, compared with ours. His portrait, and portraits of twenty Second Advent pioneers, with discourses on Daniel 2nd, 7th and 8th chapters, illustrated with fine wood cuts, with much other valuable matter.

Our subscribers will be supplied at prices agreed on when orders with cash (and 20 cts. for postage) are received. All who wish to buy the work will be supplied, postpaid, at $3.50. As our object is not to make money, but to have this message and its history go as far and as cheap as possible, we put it as low as we can. We have endeavored to make it a book that all who are really associated in this great movement will buy, and that real inquirers will think best to buy. The book contains 711 octavo pages, neatly bound in cloth, gilt side.

NOTHING BUT LEAVES.

Nothing but leaves; the spirit grieves
Over a wasted life;
O'er sins indulged while conscience slept,
O'er vows and promises unkept,
And reaps from years of strife
Nothing but leaves,
Nothing but leaves.

Nothing but leaves, no gathered sheaves
Of life's fair ripening grain;
We sow our seeds, lo! tares and weeds;
Words, idle words for earnest deeds,
We reap with toil and pain,
Nothing but leaves,
Nothing but leaves.

Nothing but leaves, sad memory weaves
No vail to hide the past,
And as we trace our weary way,
Counting each lost and misspent day,
Sadly we find at last,
Nothing but leaves,
Nothing but leaves.

Ah! who shall thus the Master meet,
Bearing but withered leaves?
Ah! who shall at the Savior's feet,
Before the awful judgment seat,
Lay down for golden sheaves
Nothing but leaves,
Nothing but leaves?

BIBLE BAPTISM.---No. 6.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

There is an interesting fact which we have from good authority connected with the verse (Matt. 3: 11), which we have never seen in print. It is well known that there is in London, Eng., a board of nineteen men engaged in revising, under the supervision of the Church of England, the King James' Version of the Bible. In the due course of their work, they came to this text, when some one made the motion to render the word baptizo "immerse." The motion was put and lost, eight voting for it, and eleven against it. Those "eight" were certainly a respectable minority, and clearly indicated how those men considered the matter and the meaning of the word. The motion was then made to render the preposition en "in," instead of "with," when a gain of one was made, nine voting for it, and ten against it, a majority of one only keeping the word as it was. In the event of the change of the first word, John would be heard to say, I immerse you with water, which would be a little ambiguous, but would be clearly evident as to what the word "baptize" means. The latter change would have the language read, "I baptize you in water," which would harmonize with the expression that the people were "baptized in Jordan."

The final vote in this case is a strong proof of the meaning of the phrase of the original—"Ego men baptizo humas en hudati"; rendered, "I indeed baptize you with water." A prejudice against changing the text; a feeling that it had long been received, and could, whether it would or not, be properly construed; with a feeling of reverence for the word, which had even in the Greek long been on the lips of Christ's officiating servants,—might lead these men to spare it as it was; and their vote against it may not signify that they were not true to their convictions; for it was a great thing that these men, who were members of a church whose common method of the administration of the ordinance was sprinkling, should give their united voice at last in favor of the meaning we have found it really had; and although it stands in the margin, it is there without a rival rendering to say it may mean sprinkling and sprinkling may be practised and called baptism, and so leave the question still open, and thereby allow and sanction both "immersion" and "sprinkling." It is certainly true that the literal sense of en hudati is "in water," and henceforth the friends of the proper rendering of the words, Ego baptizo humas en hudati, may have a weapon forged by the friends of "sprinkling" with which to attack the practice of those who thus "sprinkle," and call it "baptism," because they have said it means "I immerse you in water."

There are several other passages beside those we have noticed, which refer to "John's baptism," which we note, and then pass to consider the practices of the church after Jesus commissioned his disciples to "baptize," and then left them to do their work and went away. Those passages are as follows: "The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?" Matt. 21: 25; Mark 11: 30. "John did preach the baptism of repentance." Mark 1: 4; Luke 3: 3. "Being baptized with the baptism of John." Luke 7: 29. "Beginning from the baptism of John." Acts 1: 22. "That word, . . which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism of John." Acts 10: 37. "Knowing only the baptism of John." Acts 18: 25. "Unto what, then, were ye baptized? and they said, Unto John's baptism." Acts 19: 3. The verbs which refer to John's work occur as follows: Matt. 3: 6, 11, 13, 14, 16; Mark 1: 4, 8, 9; 10: 39; 16: 16; Luke 3: 7, 12, 21; 7: 30; John 1: 28, 33; 3: 22, 23; 4: 1; 10: 40; Acts 1: 5. Some twenty texts refer to it, and about twelve have his name as the Baptist; to wit., Matt. 3: 1; 11: 11, 12; 15: 2, 8; 16: 14; 17: 13; Mark 6: 14, 25; Luke 7: 20, 28, 33; 9: 19. Nearly all the passages in the four gospels refer to his baptism, and this is not strange, when we remember that these gospels are a record of the period of time when John's baptism was the recognized one, and that it was continued during Christ's ministry; or until he was imprisoned and beheaded; and it was not until the close of his (Christ's) ministry that the great commission was given, although his disciples were authorized in their Master's name to baptize, and it was reported that they baptized more than John did himself. See John 4: 1. John, however, was but the forerunner of Christ, and was sent, as we shall see, to introduce Christ and his kingdom to the Jews, and preach the entrance into that, by repentance, to those who had wandered too far away to be permitted to become subjects of it as they were; but there was no difference between his method of baptizing and that afterward practised; in fact, there could be none; for whatever may be said to the contrary, the word has reference to the form of the thing, as our investigation of the matter shows; and if it means anything at all, it means the manner of the performance, as well as the fact of it; and wherever used, it must uniformly mean the same thing; else other words would and must have been used.

Rantism, for instance, which when we come, as we shall, to see what it means, will be proved to have been a very appropriate word, to say the least about it. John, therefore, actually baptized the people—baptized them, not according to the modern diversified definitions of the word, which are loose, and lax, and perverted, and allow the license to make it mean anything as to form, and make any form the fact; but as the word meant then, when it had never crept into the English language, and was only known as a Greek word with its own special and original meaning, and could have been translated into other languages by taking a word original to those languages, which meant the same thing; as, for example, in the Latin immersum, for those contemporary languages were original, and not derived like our English; and therefore a Greek word could not have been made over like an old garment, as it now is, and be un translated. And so we repeat what we have said before, that the word had its own meaning before Inspiration seized upon it as the name of the ordinance we speak of, and was to keep it till the end of time, and for that reason it was applied to it as its name; and although, when first applied to John's practice, it was made to designate a particular ordinance, whose subjects were to be penitent men, and never inanimate objects, or irrational animals, which might be immersed, but could never share in the ordinance; although, we say, this was the fact, yet the name should and must always be appropriate; and its form too, to keep the fact apparent, must remain forever unchanged. To call that baptism, therefore, which is of some other form, is to introduce another thing into the church, and call it by an assumed name, to give it the appearance of the divine sanction and authority, and make it a falsifier, and set up for it a claim to be what it is not.

We shall insist still that John's baptism was what baptisma was before he baptized, and shall, we think, as we proceed with the subject, have no occasion to allow a variation from the terms used to designate the rite of baptism. We shall not object, however, to the use of the word, now that it has come into the English language, and has long had a place there. Some may, but we do not, on mature reflection. We know that "The American Bible Union" has translated the words "immersion" and "immerse," but we are content with baptism. It has to us a thousand sacred associations, and is to us the name of the ordinance more than immersion can be, because all things that can be immersed cannot receive Christian baptism; and all we shall insist upon and contend for is, that the terms be properly understood; then, there will be, there can be, no misunderstanding of the matter; but all will be agreed, and there will be a union on the basis of right, and not on a charity which overlooks the right, and is peaceable without purity.

In our next article, we propose to consider Bible Baptism, as practised by the apostles after the pattern of the commission of Jesus Christ; and shall, therefore, consider (1) its form; (2) its subjects; (3) its administrator; (4) its object. In considering its form, the number of times it is necessary to immerse one, in order to baptize him, will be considered; and therefore we shall consider, as exhaustively of the subject as possible, that innovation upon the ordinance known as "Trine Immersion," and other points of particular interest.

ARE WE CHRIST'S?

S. I. CROUSE.

"If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Rom. 8: 9.

Have we the spirit of Christ? Are we living near to Jesus, and showing by our daily life that we are his children? Are we bearing the frnit of the Spirit spoken of by the apostle Paul in Gal. 5: 23? Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance? Let us examine ourselves, and ascertain whether we bear these fruits or not.

First, do we love God with all our hearts, and our neighbors as ourselves? and more than, this do we love our enemies? Do we forgive them that trespass against us, and pray for those who despitefully use us and persecute us? How often we hear it said, and by those too professing to be followers of Jesus—"I can never forgive him, or her, as long as I live." Is this the spirit of the Master, who. even in his dying agony, prayed for his murderers?

Second, are we joyful in the Lord? Do we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory? Surely, if any one has reason to be joyful, it is the one whose sins are washed away in the blood of Jesus. And though we may be afflicted, let us rejoice still, knowing that "these light afflictions, which endure but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Do we have peace? Jesus said, "My peace I leave with you."

O how blessed it is to have peace and rest in Jesus, long-suffering, gentleness, etc. Let us ask ourselves if we are bearing these fruits. How gentle and meek was our blessed Savior. And he has left us an example, that we should follow his steps. We are looking for Him "whom, having not seen, we love." Surely we should be a peculiar people, not conforming to the world, but seeking each day to be more like our pattern.

Let us examine ourselves, and if we find that we are bearing any of the fruits of the flesh, let us go right to Jesus, and ask him to cleanse us from all sin. May the Lord direct us in all things, and at last present us faultless before him with exceeding joy, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

CONFIRMATION OF SCRIPTURE.

The testimony from old monuments to the truth of the Bible is already worderful and abundant. The following is a strangely interesting instance of this, confirming the story in the 12th chapter of Exodus, of that awful morning when the oldest child of every Egyptian family was found smitten by the angel of wrath, "from the first-born of Pharaoh that sat on his throne unto the first-born of the captive that was in the dungeon," and "there was not a house where there was not one dead."

Dr. Cumming, of London, says: "There are monuments to be found to every Pharaoh save the one who perished in the Red Sea. Concerning him two stones have been found narrating many of his exploits, but each ends with 'and——,' a long black line succeeding. Every other of the Pharaohs we find was succeeded by his eldest son, according to the law of Egypt; but of this Pharaoh it is expressly said that he was succeeded by his second son; while no account whatever remains of his first son." What an astonishing confirmation of Scripture is this!—Advent Review.

Christianity is love in action, having its centre in Jesus, and its field humanity.

WHERE GOD PUTS SIN.

J. M. T. SMYTHE.

"The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." Isa. 53: 6.

The origin of sin is a theme which has frustrated all investigation, a problem which has yet to be solved. First in order comes original sin, which means that whereby our whole nature from our birth is depraved and entirely corrupt; while actual sin signifies a direct and open violation of the divine law.

Generally speaking, all sin may be classed under two heads, namely, sins of omission and commission. Its introduction into this world, its contaminating effects upon the human race, and its consequences, are plainly revealed in the pages of holy writ. See Gen. 6: 5; Rom. 5: 12; Jas. 1: 14, 15. The very etymology of the word sin, will illustrate what a deadly foe it is to man, and what a source of misery and woe it has involved him in. The monosyllable is derived from the Greek verb (sino), to hurt, signifying the thing that hurts. The rendering of the word hardly needs comment.

Who among us has not been sin-oppressed, sin-polluted, and sin-stung! Its devastating mark can easily be defined; the misery it entails is discernible at a glance. Of all the sweet and comforting passages in the word of God there is perhaps no more important utterance which so vitally concerns man as this one. "The Lord hath lajd on him the iniquity of us all." In this announcement there is contained a stupendous truth, a startling declaration, which conveys to the mind of man a force and weight, influencing him either to accept or reject this great truth. To be neutral in such a momentous question is impossible, neither can it be read without arriving at some definite conclusion as to where God has placed or disposed of sin.

The power and dominion of sin over the whole universe is self-evident. Does it not lead captive thousands at its will and pleasure? Again, sin seldom assails its victim without leaving a terrible sting behind; perhaps it may be in the form of a seared conscience, a wrecked constitution, and a guilty heart burdened and weighed down with remorse for the past, from which the sufferer sees no possible delivery or escape.

Sin, "the abominable thing" that God hates, has deprived man of two of his greatest privileges, namely, God's image and God's favor, both of which our first parents possessed in their perfect state. How marred and defaced has become that once bright and radiant image of God. What a change has taken place. The sinner's state before God is desperately wicked, hopelessly dead in sins, entirely corrupt, and lying under an awful censure—"The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Ezek. 18: 20), and, "The wages of sin is death." Rom. 6: 23. These two passages of Scripture, if really believed, would certainly deter man from indulging in sin. God's definition of sin is —"For whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Have we this faith? If not, how can we be released from the power of sin? 1. By faith in the blood of Christ which "cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John 1: 7. 2. By the fear of God which restrains from sin. Ex. 20: 3. By the word of God which keeps from sin. Ps. 119: 11.

Again, we read that God will punish the world for their evil. Isa. 13: 11. Then how hopeless is the individual outside of Christ, how critical his position, and how awful the impending doom that awaits him. Is there no delivery, no possible escape, no refuge from the wrath of a consuming God? Yes, thank God,—

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Emmanuel's veins;
And sinner's plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains."

There is a loving Father who, as an infinite being, condescends not only to invite, but beseeches the sinner in "Christ's stead" to be reconciled to him; and there is an all-sufficient Savior who is willing, able, and waiting "to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." Heb. 7: 25.

The only way we can estimate how God hates sin is by looking at the greatness of the sacrifice necessary to expiate it. Nothing short of the death of Christ could atone for sin. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." Then what a comfortable thought this is to the wearied, fainthearted, and doubting sinner seeking Jesus. That "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son,"—Christ so willing as to lay down his life, and "bear our sins in his own body on the tree," and the Holy Spirit so ready to sanctify and change our bodies into fit temples wherein the Triune Jehovah may abide.

Thus we are led to see the co-operation of the glorious Trinity working in our behalf, and for our eternal good, assuring us that Christ "hath appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." See how our heavenly Father has in a seven-fold manner removed sin from us forever.

1. So far as the east is from the west. Ps. 103: 12. 2. Behind his back. Isa. 38; 17. 3. He has covered them. Ps. 85: 2. 4. Blotted out. Isa. 44: 22. 5. Cast into the depths of the sea. Micah 7: 19. 6. There shall be none found. Jer. 50: 20. 7. Never mentioned again. Ezek. 33: 16.

With such assurances of God the Father's love, let us boldly approach the throne of grace, come therefore empty of self, come believing and trustful, come in all your guilt and wretchedness, and cast yourself unreservedly on Christ. Do not stay to improve your condition; come literally as you are, steeped in iniquity, sin-sick and sin-stained, to the living fountain open "for sin and for uncleanness," and say—

"Just as I am—and waiting not
To rid my soul of one dark blot,
To thee whose blood can cleanse each spot,
O Lamb of God, I come;"

pleading with him to make you know yourself, to cleanse, deliver, and keep you from the power of in-dwelling sin. For he hath said—"Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." For "I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." Then you will experience what a privilege it is to have free access to drink deeply from the waters of salvation, which is life to the soul, and taste of that love on earth which will be soon swallowed up in oceans of love above; and having realized that "God hath laid on Christ the iniquity of us all," you can unhesitatingly say—I am saved from sin, saved for nothing, saved "with an everlasting salvation." "Oh the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out."

Des Moines, Iowa.

"EVEN, SO, COME, LORD JESUS." REV. 22: 2.

L. C. KERR.

The above is to be the sentiment of the bride (the church) of Christ when he comes. "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come; and let him that is athirst say, Come; and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Ver. 17. There seems to be a great deal of importance involved in this little word come; probably more than many are able to comprehend, not knowing its entire force. It does not simply mean, as we would express it, "come" in any ordinary sense of the term; but as used here, in this Scripture, it has a mighty force. It takes everything with it, speaking from the depth of the heart. Not uttered alone by the tongue, but by all acts and modes of expression. If the thirsty one wishes to drink from the river of life, he must be unanimous with the bride in saying Come.

He has to speak this word by his works and acts, as well as by mouth. It matters not how much he may say it by the mouth, or profess it, if his other attributes act not in accordance with it, he is simply speaking one thing, and at the same time squarely contradicting himself, and denying what he pretends to be already affirming. So that by saying this merely, without a correspondence throughout in every essential, he is only deceiving himself. But if he say "Come," and his works completely characterize this sentiment in all his daily walks, then not only the tongue is speaking, but everything else speaks too, and says, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

There is far more contained in actions than in words. We can say that we love God, and have our works in the opposite direction, and they will deny it, as the apostle says, in speaking of hypocrites. With their lips they profess to know Christ, but by their works deny him.

If, then, we be seeking those things above where Christ is, and ever have this expression sunk down deeply into and impressed upon our heart, we shall say so in walk, in dress, in talk, in love, in actions, in our comings in, in our goings out, in our meeting together, and in our departing, in our conversation, and in all things we speak this beautiful sentiment as plain as tongue can utter it, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." We shall not, then, only use this multum in parvo in preaching, or praying, or singing, leaving other things to testify to the contrary, but have a perfect harmony and coincidence through our entire proceedings, and both God and man will see that we are just what we profess to be—christians indeed.

And here is where John's hope takes effect, which is—"Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as Christ is pure." John 3: 2, 3. So that this word "come," though a small one, when it is carried out in all its bearings, embraces the whole christian character, and purifies the man, all of him.

We have reached the time of which the Revelator spoke—"Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book, for the time is at hand." Ver. 10. Evidently we are now occupying the same stand-point the apostle did when he uttered these all-important words. Being in vision, and led by the Spirit of God away down the stream of time to the end, the angel commands the book not to be sealed saying, that the time is at hand; and here is where and when these words have their application. We are occupying a place proximating to the advent of our Lord, when the true bride of Christ hath made herself ready, and is eagerly crying out, "Come, Lord Jesus." She is looking with such a longing desire for the return of the Bridegroom, that every sign characteristic of it is being made the greatest use of by her to ascertain, if possible, the exact time when it is; and the more evidence that she can find indicative of that, the more determined she is to appropriate that evidence to its special purpose, and hence the cry, "Come."

John furnishes us with a sample of the impatient vigilance of the true church of Christ at the time of his coming, and just as that sample was, just so will every member of that church be that is a true member. He will be watching and waiting faithfully for the coming of the Master, and his life in every particular will say, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." The sooner the better, and with joyous greeting will he receive the glad tidings that Jesus is coming within a very short time. Hallelujah! O glorious thought! how it revives my drooping spirits to think that soon we shall see the Lord, and receive his welcome smile, and hear the glad sound—Well done!" O! I would that it were to-morrow.

Dear brethren, this will be one of the best times that we ever had in all our lives, and Oh do you not long for it? Just think, to be with Christ! What a sublime thought, to enjoy the company of the Son of God! Who can conceive for a moment what humiliation on the part of Him who is above all, and created all, perfect in righteousness and true holiness, and just in all his ways, exalted and high, "Lord of lords, and King of kings," possessing all things, and sustaining all things, but being rich in mercy, and of the tenderest compassion, left all and humbled himself to be made like unto man, and took upon himself man's nature, to suffer in his stead, and die an ignominious death, to save such a poor sin-susceptible object of misery as man.

Then, my dear brethren, is not such an one as this more worthy of all our admiration and attention than anything that this vile world can afford? What is here then that should in this vain life engage us in its attendant evils and pursuits, that we should lose sight of the beatitude of that world to come? and, what is more consoling, it is so near.

This ought to make us inspired with the greater zeal for the coming of the blessed One, and cause us to cherish this glorious news, searching all evidences, if so be, to hasten the glorious time, and anxiously exclaim with the holy seer of Patmos, "Even so, Come, Lord Jesus!"

HAVE FAITH.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Only believe." Mark 5: 36.

"My little daughter lieth at the point of death." How touching are these words. They tell us what was in the heart of Jairus. He loved his child very tenderly. No doubt he had done all in his power to save her life, but he saw that she was failing fast, and must soon die. His grief was inexpressible. He came to Jesus, and falling at his feet, besought him to come and heal his child. Jesus started, but before he reached the house, the little daughter had breathed her last. Messengers bring them word saying, "Thy daughter is dead." O! what heart-rending words were these to Jairus. His heart was ready to break, but Jesus seeing it all, said, "Be not afraid, only believe." He went to the house and found them weeping and making a great ado. She must have been a lovely child. I imagine a smile of beauty played over her face as Jesus entered the room. Taking her by the hand he said, "Maid, arise;" and she got up and opened her eyes. O what love and power there was in Jesus.

This narrative is instructive. The Ruler did just right when he went to Jesus. We must go to Jesus with all our sorrows and troubles. He is the only one who can give us the help we need. Are we in any trouble, he says to us to-day, "Be not afraid, only believe." Do not worry and fret, and make your burdens a great deal heavier. "Only believe." Take them all to Jesus. He is full of comfort, power, and salvation. He can remove your difficulties and fill your heart with peace. Trust in Him. Only believe. Many of our troubles are imaginary. We look ahead, instead of looking up. This is not the best way. Let us live by faith now, and the future will take care of itself. Jesus is ready to save now, this very moment, only believe. Fall at his feet, and implore his assistance just now, and you will hear those precious words "only believe."

MY ROBES.

Thy love hath led me on at last,
Through toil to calmer days,
And garmented anew my life
In richest robes of praise;
With gladness hast thou girded me
For very heaviness,
And on my yielded soul hast laid
My Savior's comeliness.

O my Beloved! now I hear
Thy own thrice-blessed voice,
That speaks the word of life, and bids
Thy faithful bride rejoice.
Array me in thy righteousness,
Like linen clean and white,
That I may be all pure and fair,
O Christ, in thy dear sight!

Shine on, my Light! o'er all my ways,
Through coming chance and change,
Thy Spirit making plain and sweet
What once to me was strange;
Love consecrating me, with joy,
To thankful service new;
"Trust" over all my gates inscribed,
Through Thee to will—to do.

MAINE CAMPMEETING.

The campmeeting held at Pittsfield, Maine, commencing Sunday, Aug. 30th, and holding over Sunday, Sept. 6th, was to many a season of blessing that cannot soon be forgotten. The grove is pleasantly situated, and has been prepared by grading and seeding, with an abundance of excellent water from two good wells. The weather was all that could be desired for such a gathering, no rain falling for the week except on Friday night, when it was much needed to lay the dust.

For many weeks before the meeting a spirit of earnest prayer was poured upon the saints in these parts, that the "God of all blessing" would visit us at our approaching feast; and, as is usually the case, praying increased the interest, and the brethren and sisters, a number of them, as early as the 28th, and by Saturday evening we had quite a gathering, prepared for the opening service on Sabbath morning, Aug. 30th. This was the day looked forward to with faith, hope, and love. Melting mercy seemed to fall upon us from the very first. Such love, unison, peace, and a spirit of labor for the salvation of souls, I have rarely witnessed at any meeting. The preaching brethren present were A. A. Phelps, H. L. Hastings, I. C. Wellcome, S. R. Partridge, Jer. Carr, Geo. Weeks, N. G. Reed, Samuel Ames, A. W. Taylor, Thos. Kines, M. W. Corliss, John R. Hall, and the writer.

The preaching was plain, direct, earnest, and powerful. No hobby riding, or cross-firing, or wrangling. Wanderers were sought out, and sinners wept over, with pity and affection imparted by the great Shepherd, who gave his life a ransom for many. Strong men and women bowed before God, and turned their feet into his testimonies, and took the yoke of Christ upon them. No pen can describe the sweetness of the labor, or the glory and joy poured upon us from the "blessed God," when victory and triumph crowned the efforts. Six were baptized during the meeting, and others since. Time and eternity stood forth in the labor in solemn contrast. From many, I trust, the "present evil world" faded out, and the "world to come whereof we speak," came to the front.

That abominable old filthy tyrant, the "Tobacco King," the unclean god of too many in this foul-mouthed generation, trembled greatly when that "mighty man of God," A. A. Phelps, levelled the Sword of the Spirit upon him, and surrendered a number of his oppressed captives. Several were converted out of the use of that poisonous narcotic drug a year ago, at campmeeting, and reported themselves still standing fast in the liberty wherewith Christ had made them free.

The attendance at the meeting was large during the whole week for these parts, and it was though nearly five thousand were upon the ground the last Sabbath, and the power of God was present.

The young people at Pittsfield have excellent advantages for schooling, that being the seat of a well conducted seminary, under the charge of the "Free Christian Baptist" denomination. The school has a wholesome influence upon many of the young, so that it is not difficult to keep order in our meetings, so far as the village youth are concerned. Our meeting has closed, but the influence still lives, and breathes, and works, and we trust the labor will be so followed up that many sinners may be brought into the fold.

The ground has been leased for a term of years, if time continues, and a committee has been appointed to provide for another meeting, should our Lord tarry till the season comes around again. If it be so unspeakably blessed to meet in our present state, how glorious it will be to be gathered home to rest forever with all the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus. F. A. BAKER.

THE ROPE OF FAITH.

"Brethren, I am now going to show you how a poor sinner was saved by grace; and I am sure that many of you have been so saved. Let us take the case of a miserable man in the pains of conviction. He is, we will suppose, down at the bottom of the pit of despair. Now let us ask him how he got there, and how he means to get up." Then leaning over the pulpit to the right hand, the preacher curved and hollowed his hand, and applying his mouth to it, spoke aloud this imaginary colloquy, as if from the surface down through the pit-shaft, after the manner of the "banksman" at the colliery:

"Hallo! hallo! who's down there?"

"O minister! a poor sinner; a miserable sinner."

"How came you there, my poor brother! how came you there?"

"My load of sin weighed me down, and I fell deeper and deeper."

"Oh, wretched man that you are! How do you mean to get up?"

"I shall never get up. I am lost, lost forever! I have been trying ever so long to climb up by the side of the shaft, but I cannot; I fall down again."

"You cannot succeed of yourself. I'll send you down the rope of faith. Lay hold of that, and you will be got out. Cling to it; cling to it; here it is!" (imitating the paying out of a rope.) "Now, then, it must be down to you. Lay hold of the 'only hope set before you.' Have you got hold now?"

"I'm so feeble I can can hardly grasp it; but I think I have got a good grip now."

"Then pull ahoy, lads! Let us help this poor sinner up. Oh, how heavy he is! Why, what have you got besides yourself hanging on to the rope?"

"Only a few good works of my own."

"Good works! good works! Throw them down. Down with them, or they'll break the rope."

"Well, if I must, I must; but sure they would do me some good."

The preacher continued to represent the lifting, but suddenly stopped, as if his arms had received a check, exclaiming to the imaginary ascendant,—

"Why, what's the matter now; What are you struggling wi h?"

"Doubts and fears, sir. I am afraid I cannot hold on."

"Lay firmer hold of the rope. Doubts and fears are nothing to strong faith. But what now? Trembling again! What is it now?"

"A great fight of afflictions, master, and I cannot hold on."

"Hold on, sinner, hold on! you'll come out of the afflictions. But what is this? shaking again? What can be the matter now?"

"Strong temptation, master. Oh, I shall fall! I am falling! Oh, help me! O help me!"

"So we will. But ah! what dreadful thing has happened now? The weight is three times as great. What a horrible noise! What have you got there?"

"It is the devil himself has gripped me. He is gripping me hard. O minister, I'm lost, I'm lost!"

Hereupon the excitement in the congregation became intense. Women wept; men rose up; and the minister, seizing his opportunity, continued,—

"Now, lads, let us all pray and pull together. This poor sinner is in great danger. But Satan cannot long buffet him. The great Captain is with us, and he is too strong for demon and devil."

Straining at the lifting of the imaginary load, the preacher greatly excited himself as well as his hearers. Finally he appeared to succeed in bringing the imperiled and hard gripped penitent to the surface. Then with great effect he uttered the words, "Lads, he's safe! he is saved! There he is! The rope of faith never broke yet, and I knew it wouldn't break now."—Exchange.

HOME AND HEALTH.

EXCITEMENT AND SHORT LIFE.

The deadliest foe to man's longevity is an unnatural excitement. Every man is born with a certain stock of vitality, wich cannot be increased, but which may be expended or husbanded rapidly, as he deems best. Within certain limits he has his choice to move fast or slow, to live abstemiously or intensely, to draw his little amount over a large space, or condense it into a narrow one; but when his stock is all exhausted he has no more.

He who lives abstemiously, who avoids all stimulants, takes light exercise, never overtasks himself, indulges no exhausting passions, feeds his mind and heart on no exciting material, has no debilitating pleasure, lets nothing ruffle his temper, keeps his "accounts with man duly squared up," is sure, barring accidents, to spin out his life to the longest limit which it is possible to attain; while he who intensely feeds on high-seasoned food, whether material or mental, fatigues his body or brain by hard labor, exposes himself to inflammatory disease, seeks continual excitement, giving loose rein to his passions, frets at every trouble, and enjoys little repose, is burning the candle at both ends, and is sure to shorten his days.—Ex.

LOOK OUT FOR YOUR TEETH.

There are not a few individuals in the world who are either too indolent or too careless to cleanse their teeth sufficiently often to keep them free from dirt. As a natural result, they find them presenting a most unpleasant and unwholesome appearance, and standing as indubitable evidence of their untidiness. Wishing to conceal their shiftlessness, and unwilling to take the necessary trouble to secure cleanliness, these short-sighted individuals resort to the most illegitimate and ultimately ruinous means for removing from their masticators the accumulated filth of months, or even years.

For the accommodation of such persons, money-seeking and unscrupulous men have prepared certain lotions which they put up in nice little bottles, labeled, "Tooth Wash." It is claimed that a single application of one of these compounds will effectually whiten the most dingy teeth, without doing them the slightest injury. A recipe for making a wash of this kind is found in Dr. Chase's recipe book, now being offered for sale by agents. An article of the same essential character is also being sold by peddlers about the country.

Our friend, Dr. Hawxhurst, a professonal dentist with whose writings our readers are already familiar, gives the following description of this villainous compound and its effects:

"The wash, as it is called, is put up in vials which look attractive. It does in reality whiten the teeth almost as soon as it touches them. The muriatic acid which it contains lays hold upon their mineral salts, and they seem to be at once transformed. A set of old and rusty pegs have become a row of pearls. This whiteness, so coveted, is due to a dislocation of atoms and molecules from their places in the structures of the organ. It is the signal of destruction to the teeth. After using this compound long enough, it finally fails to whiten the teeth, and they take on a softened and decayed look that is appalling to one who has ever enjoyed the blessing of beautiful teeth.

"To test the dangerous character of this tooth-destroying elixir, I threw a sound tooth into the bottom of a bottle obtained of one of these men. In a few minutes (seventy minutes), I found the enamel soft enough to be scraped up with the thumb nail, with many other evidences of the terrible decomposition that had been at work. I performed many other tests which need not be described here; it is enough to say that the acid is muriatic, one of the three strongest mineral acids, and that no one who has the slightest desire to preserve his teeth will use it in a single instance.—Health Reformer.

EARLY EDUCATION.—Experience has demonstrated that of any number of children of equal intellectual power, those who receive no particular care in childhood, and who do not learn to read and write until the constitution begins to be consolidated, but who enjoy the benefit of a physical education, beat those who commence earlier and read numerous books when very young. The mind ought never to be cultivated at the expense of the body; and physical education ought to precede that of the intellect, and then proceed simultaneously with it, without cultivating one faculty to the neglect of others, for health is the base and instruction the ornament of education.

USE BRAINS CAREFULLY.—Brain-work is hard work. A man is always better for having something to do. "Idleness" not only "clothes a man with rags," as to his body, but it dwarfs the mind. He who rarely thinks never has a strong intellect. But there is a limit to thinking. No man can study hard all the time without jading and injuring his mental powers. Many have tried it and reaped the bitter consequences.

QUEER TOM.

Tom Flossofer was the queerest boy I ever knew. I don't think he ever cried: I never saw him. If Fleda found her tulips all rooted up by her pet puppy, and cried, as little girls will, Tom was sure to come round the corner whistling, and say:

"What makes you cry? can you cry tulips? do you think every sob makes a root or a blossom? Here, let's try to right them."

So he would pick up the poor flowers, put their roots into the ground again, whistling all the time; make the bed look smooth and fresh, and take Fleda off to hunt hen's nests in the barn. Neither did he do any differently in his own troubles. One day his great kite snapped the string, and flew far away out of sight. Tom stood still for one moment, and then turned round to come home, whistling a merry tune.

"Why, Tom," said I, "aren't you sorry to lose that kite?"

"Yes, but what's the use? I can't take more than a minute to feel bad. 'Sorry' won't bring the kite back, and I want to make another."

Just so when he broke his leg.

"Poor Tom," cried Fleda, "you can't play any mo-o-o-re!"

"I'm not poor, either. You cry for me: I don't have to do it myself, and I have a splendid time to whittle. Besides, when I get well, I shall beat every boy in school on the multiplication table; for I say it over and over, till it makes me sleepy, every time my leg aches."

Tom Flossofer was queer, certainly, but I wish a great many more people were queer that way.—Wood's Household Magazine.

THE SHEPHERD BOY.

One beautiful spring morning a merry-hearted shepherd boy was watching his flock, in a blooming valley between woody mountains, and was singing and dancing about for very joy. The prince of the land was hunting in that neighborhood, and seeing him, called him nearer, and said, "What makes you so happy, my dear little one?"

The boy did not know the prince, and replied, "Why shouldn't I be happy? Our most gracious sovereign is not richer than I am!"

"How so?" asked the prince; "let me hear about your riches."

"The sun in the clear blue sky shines as brightly for me as for the prince; "and mountain and valley grow green, and bloom as sweetly for me as for him. I would not part with my two hands for all the money, nor sell my two eyes for all the jewels in the royal treasury. Besides, I have everything I really need. I have enough to eat every day, and good warm clothes to wear, and get money enough every year for my labor to meet all my wants. Can you say the prince really has more?"

The kind prince smiled, made himself known, and said, "You are right, my good boy. Keep fast hold of your cheerful spirit."

Contentment makes one happy and rich as the greatest king.—Christian Weekly.

YOU WILL NOT SWEAR.

One day a gentleman observed a group of boys, bent on play, strongly urging another boy to join them. He was struck with the very decided 'No' which the boy gave to all their entreaties. Anxious to see the result he stepped into an entry, where he could hear and see and not be much observed.

"That boy has a will to resist the whole band of them," he said to himself.

A last effort was made to induce him to come with them,—

"Now, James, will you not come? you are such a good player."

"Yes," he replied, "but on condition. Give me your hands that you will not swear, and I will go."

They did so, and with joy they ran off to play. We are sure the game lost none of its interest for the want of swearing. Noble boy! not ashamed to show that he was on the Lord's side, even in the face of ungodly play-fellows.

The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

"WATCH!"

"Watch therefore; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."—MATT. 24: 42, 44.

All gone to sleep! Wake, virgins,—up!
Your lamps with oil prepare!
"The Bridegroom comes!" that midnight cry
Will soon ring on the air.
The first sound of his chariot wheels
We strain our ears to catch;
All signs portend 'tis near "the end,"
And Christ says, "Therefore watch!"

To such as mock—"Christ come again?"
Sufficient this reply—
'Tis likelier he should come to reign,
Than that he came to die.
The unbelief in "days of Noah"
Well does the present match,
Which is a sign of last decline,
And Christ says, "Therefore watch!"

The war-fiend's loose! and carnage wrought—
O, who can tell the sum!
Of earth man's godless empire reels,
And "perilous times" are come!
The truth's denied, and lies believed
That wicked spirits hatch!
A given sign of "the last time;"
And Christ says, "Therefore watch!"

"In such an hour as ye think not"—
Ah, me! who thinks at all
Of aught but self and worldly gain,
Or heeds the Master's call?
He's near at hand, he's at the door,
His hand is on the latch.
And "our redemption draweth nigh,"—
Watch therefore, christian, watch!

A committee appointed by the Chair on business reported the following order, which was adopted:—

1. Reading of the Secretary's minutes.
2. The report of the Executive Board, by the President.
3. Treasurer's report.
4. The election of officers for the ensuing year.
5. Promiscuous business.

The Secretary's minutes of the last annual session were read and adopted. The President read the report of the Executive Board, it being the next item of business in the order adopted. The following is a part of the President's address:—

ADDRESS TO MISSION SOCIETY,

BY MILES GRANT,

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING IN SPRINGFIELD, MASS, AUGUST 12th, 1874.

To the American Advent Mission Society, Greeting: Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ,—The flight of time has brought us to the close of another year, with its varied events. Like other years, it has witnessed joys and sorrows, trials and temptations, lights and shadows, with some heart-rending scenes in sick rooms, by the side of the dying, the dead, the tolling bell, and burial. Some, who greeted us in this consecrated spot last year, will come no more. We live to continue the work they so ardently loved.

You are called together at this time to listen to the report of your Executive Board, and to transact such business as relates to the interests of this Society, organized in 1865 for the purpose of spreading the light and truth contained in the sacred Scriptures. Since its organization, it has received and expended about $33.000. The results will be best known in the world to come. If one is saved in consequence, the reward will be everything for almost nothing. Had that saved one the opportunity of selling his right to eternal life for what has been paid out by the Mission Society during the last nine years, does any one think he would accept the offer? Jesus has said: "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Instead of one, we have reason to believe that many will be saved in consequence of what has been done by the supporters of this Society, that would have been lost but for its efforts. We have only to read the reports of those engaged in the missionary work, to be satisfied that this is a correct conclusion. Then is there not a good reason for its continuance with increased energy? If our combined efforts for a whole life-time result in saving one, we shall be richly paid for our labor and sacrifice.

It is said "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light"; that is, they study out the best ways and means to accomplish their purposes. If they were as careless of their temporal interests, as many professed christians are of the advancement of the cause of Christ, their successes would be turned to failures. Satan knows the importance of missionary labor. See the results among the Catholics. They send missionaries to all countries,—send them early, and take the lead. No effort is spared to spread their influence. Schools, colleges, councils, general gatherings, and all possible means are continually employed to accomplish their object. Every man, woman and child is looked after carefully, and surrounded by a Catholic shield. They attend to their religious matters as though they thought them of some importance. Their missionary work has been one great cause of their remarkable success. All this is done for error—for Satan—to spread a counterfeit religion. How much more should it be done for the genuine. Remember, too, that the vast Roman Catholic system is supported largely by money received from the poor laboring classes.

Glance at the success of Mormonism. Every few months we hear of the arrival of several hundred from Europe, en route for Salt Lake. A hundred thousand, or more, are already gathered in Utah to sustain the false system there proclaimed. How is this accomplished? Mainly by missionary work. Their men are sent to various countries to proclaim their views with persevering earnestness, which goes far towards convincing those who listen. Had it not been for their missionary labor, they would have but a handful to-day.

Now, if all this is done for the spread of error, what shall we do, who are believing the most glorious truths ever presented to the human race? Shall we be passively idle, and expect to hear the Savior say, "Well done"? He said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Is not this instruction as important now as then? If there was ever a time to go into the "regions beyond," is not this the hour? If circumstances ever called for immediate, earnest action for Christ, is not the call now more than ever imperative?

At the conclusion of the reading of the report of the Executive Board, by the President, it was moved, and unanimously carried, to adopt and publish the same in tract form for free distribution. Adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock A. M.

Met as adjourned. The President in the chair. Prayer was offered by Eld. J. Couch of Chelsea, Mass. The Secretary's minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved. The Treasurer's report was read and adopted.

GEO. T. ADAMS, Treasurer A. A. M. Society.

BOSTON, AUG. 5, 1874.

This is to certify that I have this day examined the accounts of the Treasurer of the A. A. M. Society, and found them correctly kept and rightly vouched, and a balance in the Treasury of four hundred and nineteen dollars and seventy-five cents ($419.75.)

L. BOUTELL, Auditor.

The Chair, by vote, appointed Charles Goodrich, L. T. Cunningham, and George A. Streeter, as tellers to receive, assort and count ballots for the election of officers for the ensuing year. It was voted, that Bro. J. Couch be requested to read an appeal, which he had written, respecting the importance of immediate action on the part of every believer in the speedy coming of the Bridegroom, to contribute of their means, with which God had entrusted them, to help spread the glad tidings, "Behold he cometh," and to prepare a people for the Lord, when he shall come the second time "without sin unto salvation."

AN APPEAL TO THE A. A. MISSION SOCIETY.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE A. A. MISSION SOCIETY, greeting:

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ:—

You have associated yourself as a mission society, that you may combine your strength and harmonize your efforts in accomplishing a great work. Mission implies the act of sending, or the state of being sent; authority by which delegates are sent to transact specified business. A society is a body of persons associated for the purpose of accomplishing some specified object. A mission society is therefore one which accomplishes its work by sending delegates or missionaries to act for it. Your society is a christian body formed for the purpose of doing work for Christ;—gospel work. Christ's special work relating to our world is to seek and to save that which was lost. His people, who follow him, obligate themselves as his servants to be governed by the same principles, and labor to accomplish the same objects. He was rich, but to accomplish his mission he voluntarily became poor, that he might make many rich. So shall we, when we have his spirit, be willing to expend our wealth in carrying out his great mission. He made it especially important to preach the good tidings to the poor, because they would more gladly receive it than the higher classes. His people are greatly blessed of him when they condescend to men of low estate, and freely send the gospel to the poor, the outcasts, having few advantages and are the substratum of society.

His great work was to reconcile rebellious men to God, making them loyal to him, and true friends to each other. This should be the grand object of all christian labor. He preached the inspired word of God as the standard of saving faith, the rule of life, the foundation of hope, and the forewarning of dangers. We are not allowed to deviate from his example.

The objects for the accomplishment of which you have combined your means and efforts, are among the most important and honorable in which fallen man can be engaged. They are graded in so high a plane that God manifests a special interest in them, exercising a supervision over the cause, putting his seal on the commission of every true ambassador sent to do the holy work, furnishing the heavenly means—sacred truth,—the Divine Spirit, and all needed grace for its execution. All heaven is interested in this great subject. It is the redemption and salvation of men;—the beings of God's creation and love,—the earthly representatives of himself, designed as peers with the angels.

A theme so noble and heavenly as this, is altogether above the grade of the sinful heart; its aspirations and hopes fall far below it. His eye doth not see it, nor his love embrace it. Divine grace alone can raise humanity to that elevated plane, to behold its infinite importance, and its eternal blessedness. Sin blinds the mind of man, so that all objects are inverted; the highest becomes the lowest; the richest the poorest; those of first importance the last to be sought. From a worldly stand-point your society and work appears to men as an insignificant matter, unworthy of their time or talents; but to the eye of faith it is seen from God's stand-point, and appears (if it be of God, as we trust it is), in its true grandeur, overtopping their great political combinations and secret associations, with all their high sounding titles and senseless ceremonies. Theirs originate in a worldly spirit; but yours in a heavenly. Theirs operate to exalt the high, and oppress the poor; but yours to abase the high, and exalt the low. They expend much of their treasure in corrupting and killing men, but you design to expend all of yours in saving men. A noble purpose! A Godlike work! Worthy of the sacrifices and devotion of Christ, and faithful ministrations of the angels. For its accomplishment the holy Seers engraved the sacred parchments. Christ preached his great sermons, and inspired apostles wrote the gospel and the holy epistles. That God may be all and in all connected with this glorious work, he sends his Holy Spirit to inspire and help all who engage in it.

Then lift up your heads ye people of the Most High God, for he reads your hearts, and smiles at your sacrifices made for Jesus' sake. Remember, ye meek and lowly ones, that when you enter your closets, and your yearning, pitying hearts petition God to have mercy and save the poor outcast, down-trodden millions, the sorrowing, suffering multitudes for whom Jesus died, and is now pleading, that his great heart will love you when you do the little that you can to send light and truth to raise the fallen, cheer the faint, and save the perishing. Do this holy mission work in the name of Jesus, and be sure that your hopes and aspirations are like his. Let no evil motives control you;—love of honor, praise of men, peace or worldly gain, the spirit of rivalry, or any false ambition. Remember that the Jew was condemned by Christ because he was unfaithful in the unrighteous mammon (worldly goods), and therefore was not entrusted with the true riches—the gospel blessings through Christ. The principles under the gospel are the same, and no one can enjoy a fullness in Christ, or secure an everlasting habitation in the kingdom of God, who withholds the fruits of his earthly inheritance from the Lord's cause.

We do not speak thus plainly, brethren, to reproach you for the past, but to encourage you for the future. You contributed nobly for the sacred cause the past year, and as far as it was done heartily as unto the Lord, we are assured you have received a hundred fold of the true riches.

Your Executive Board have felt a great weight of responsibility thrown upon them, in receiving for their appropriation these consecrated funds—the hard earnings of toiling christians given to God in prayer. They have felt the need of heavenly wisdom to do this responsible work of selecting men, chosen and qualified of God to go into the "regions beyond" and preach the gospel of the kingdom to those sitting in darkness and exposed to swiftly coming judgments. They have felt the need of much grace to impartially and without personal likes or dislikes, to justly and wisely distribute these sacred treasures in the various localities, and to the different persons from whom has come the prayer for help. They would not assume to say that they have not, in any case, acted upon an error of judgment in this matter, but would meekly say they have purposed to act in harmony with the divine will.

The Macedonian cry from destitute regions for missionary help, has been greatly increased the past year. The door for this gospel kind of labor was never so widely opened for us as a people before. Where kind and well directed efforts have been put forth, and the Holy Spirit has been more depended upon than human eloquence or sensationalism, sound Bible arguments than blackguardism or sarcasm, prejudice has greatly given way, and the people are more ready to hear the great message we are especially called to proclaim, than for many years in the past.

We have felt it duty under the circumstances, to do but little for New England, as those States have local societies which are designed to supply their wants. We have assisted some of the servants of Christ while laboring in new and destitute places in N. Y., N. J., Md., D. C., and Va. Much more could have been profitably expended in those States if we could have had sufficient funds. South Carolina has been our base of operations in the South Atlantic States, and from this point we trust light and salvation has been circulating among the people with very satisfactory results. Bro. Bowman has had the principle charge in this field, and has labored constantly and earnestly in S. C., N. C., and Ga. The truth we love so well has taken deep root in many hearts, of both the white and colored people, which neither sectarianism nor infidelity will be able to uproot. A number of preachers in other churches are becoming deeply interested in present truth, and are beginning to proclaim it to their flocks and the people. May the voice of God be heard sounding over those southern fields, awakening the people to a sense of impending danger, and the necessity of speedy preparation to meet the Judge of quick and dead.

We have esteemed it a duty and a glorious privilege to assist the heralds of the gospel of the kingdom in sounding forth the solemn note of warning in the Gulf States, Flo., Ala., Miss., and also Tenn. Bro. Cargile, Green, Smith, and others, have been traveling extensively in those States, proclaiming the good news of salvation through Christ, and the speedy redemption of the faithful, to the old masters and their former slaves, with great success. We doubt not, Brn., but the money you have sent into that field through your Board will yield you a very large per cent. of profit in the kingdom of God. It will give you great delight, when the redeemed millions are gathered to their heavenly rest, to see among them a happy class who were lead to salvation's fountain through the instrumentality of your donations, and the untiring labor of these faithful missionaries.

We have also scattered the fruits of your christian benevolence in Ohio, Ky., Mich., Minn., Ia., and Mo. These States have not shared so largely in your offering as some others, but needed our assistance to a much larger extent than we were able to give. May the Father of all mercies open his heavenly window and pour them out a great blessing in the future.

The new and frontier State of Kansas has occupied a position to call for our sympathies and help. Society in many parts is in its incipient stages of formation. Religious meetings are just being established; the people are anxious to obtain gospel teaching, and in many places cannot obtain it for want of means, unless it is given without money. Under such circumstances, missionary labor can be employed to much greater advantage than where society is established, and the missionary is looked upon as an intruder, and is under the necessity of laboring under the fire of open batteries. We have no doubt that from Kansas many will rise up in the judgment and call you blessed, because you, in a gospel spirit and manner, sent them the word of life, just at a time when it could reach and save them. The brethren in that State have been doing what they could to help themselves in the mission work, and we are inclined to think that no State in the Union has been more thoroughly awake to mission labor the past year than this.

The Pacific coast has not been forgotten in this glorious work, for California has extended her friendly hand over the Rocky mountains, which has been kindly clasped with christian greetings and a financial blessing and promise. A great and good work has been accomplished on the Pacific slope through missionary efforts, and we do earnestly pray that the Lord, who giveth the increase, may prune and water this western vine that it may bring forth much fruit to the glory of Christ. Much good has been accomplished in your mission work by supplying our missionaries with publications for free distribution. The arguments used by them in these fields, upon some important subjects, were entirely new to the people, and they could not retain them so as to criticise them by hearing one or two sermons; but when they were supplied with published arguments upon the same subjects, they could examine them deliberately, and when favorably impressed, they could communicate it to others. A part of those publications have been paid for out of your funds, and a part from the Tract Fund.

When we look over all these extended fields, and the formidable opposition to this work which has been met, and the limited means and scattered instrumentalities employed, and see that a flood of prejudice has been swept back, and the glorious light of truth has sprung up in a thousand places, and thousands of saddened hearts have been cheered by the glad tidings proclaimed, we recognize a divine hand rolling onward the car of salvation with almighty power. We should feel that God has greatly honored us to impose such trust and confidence in us as to make us the stewards over any of his earthly treasures, that we may have the privilege of manifesting our love to him, and our regard for the eternal happiness of our fellow-men, by appropriating any of it in so holy and heavenly a cause. If the spirit of Christ dwell in us, it will give us the same will and aspirations that it gave him. He so loved perishing men that he willingly gave up his riches and life for their salvation. It will produce the same willingness in us. It made him a self-sacrificing, public-spirited Benefactor of our world, cheerfully bearing burdens for the general good. It will produce the same in all his people. Let none be deceived in this matter. He that lives for himself has no part in Christ. The essence of christianity is an all controlling desire to benefit others. "Charity seeketh not her own." God is love; and through this infinitely glorious essence of himself, he dwells in his people. Love is an immutable negative,—"worketh no ill" to any; and an eternal positive, it will "do good to all."

Is this divine nature—infinite love—the ruling element of our hearts? Then the salvation of a ruined race is the grand theme of our minds and efforts for the accomplishment of this object—the joyful labor of our lives.

The christian's interest in this inspiring subject is greatly intensified when he sees, by the light of God's word, that the time of labor is drawing to a close, and the day of the sinner's calamity is just at hand.

When a man of God, filled with the love and sympathy of Christ for humanity, puts the glass of inspiration to his eye, and beholds countless millions walking blindly and unconsciously to the brink of a terrible precipice, every step they advance heightens his alarm for their safety, and increases his exertions for their rescue. We believe this is the condition of Christ's true servants to-day. If a man could stand upon the suspension bridge at Niagara, and see a staging attached to it by cords, hanging over the foaming, leaping waters far below, upon which many of his dear friends were laboring, and could see the fastenings gradually giving way, would not the loosening of each cord increase his alarm and his efforts to save them from the terrible calamity impending? He would be considered far below the plain of humanity, if he, to save a few dollars, or to enjoy a little more ease and pleasure, should neglect to faithfully warn them of their danger, and do all he could to save them from an awful death. How, then, will Christ and the angels look upon us, whose eyes have been turned to see the loosening cords holding the frail stage upon which humanity stands, if we spend our time in vain parade and sinful strife, and do not lift up the voice like a trumpet and warn them of hastening judgment? Can we look upon the untaught, unwarned millions, whose hour of doom is upon them, and they unconscious of its approach,—the fatal snare about to be drawn, and they not aware that their feet are within the coil, and be justified before God and them in judgment, and not do all we can to arouse them to a sense of their danger, and to lead them out of the coil into the fold of Christ? Will not our hearts be aroused to an agony of earnestness, like the husband who is drawing the wife of his love out of a pit of death? Shall we not give our profession the lie when we say that Christ is soon to appear in judgment, and the last hours of man's probation are passing, and we spend those hours in worldly speculations, hoarding up treasures of which not a twentieth is given to the Lord, or doing worse, striving about abstract theological questions which only divide and confuse the church of Christ?

May God help us to comprehend the vastness of this subject, and the weight of responsibility resting upon us. A world is about to plunge into the vortex of eternal ruin, and God and all the principles of mercy and love for our race call upon us to rush into the whirl and confusion of the excited, maddened multitudes, and rescue a few, if possible, from the pit of everlasting destruction. Time is short! What thou doest must be done immediately. Push out your life boat! A plaintive cry is heard asking for help in the darkness of the storm! Hasten to the by-ways and hedges, and tell the broken-hearted, forsaken wife that Jesus will receive her as his friend! Tell the noble-hearted but enslaved inebriate that Christ saves sinners! Help the poor servant of Jesus, whose heart is burning with love for the fallen, to fly on the swift chariots and lead them to the Rock of safety! O work, work, for your sun is setting. The prophetic index now points to the closing moments. Come not down from the house top, but lift up your voice where you are! Return not from the field, but wave your signal as you stand! A moment should not be lost! Do not be deceived by waiting for new developments, or more favorable circumstances. Strike for God and a perishing world, and strike to-day! All heaven is watching with intense interest to see the remnant church, bearing the last message of mercy to a rebellious world, as she meekly stands, hidden in the smoke and dust of battle, with uplifted hands praying, "O that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down!" "Even so, come, Lord Jesus!"

At the conclusion of the appeal, several brethren made remarks on the importance and nature of the work to which God had called us. When means were called for with which to push forward the mission work another year, there were responses of a noble character from the stewards of the Lord's money, which indicated the fact that the faith in the coming of the "King of kings" had not become entirely extinct.

The committee appointed to receive and count ballots reported the following elected officers, for the ensuing year:—

President—Eld. Miles Grant.
Vice Presidents—N. W. Wait, C. S. Sherman, S. Hall, Sam'l Ayres, and Mrs. E. S. Jennings.
Secretary—Eld. A. W. Sibley.
Treasurer—Geo. T. Adams.
Auditor—Eld. L. Boutell.
Executive Board—Elds. J. Couch, L. T. Cunningham, and S. G. Mathewson.

After singing the doxology—

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow,"

the meeting adjourned sine die.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

P. S.—At the first meeting of the Executive Board, after the close of the annual session, Miles Grant was chosen Chairman, L. T. Cunningham Secretary of the Board, and Geo. T. Adams Corresponding Secretary of the Board, for the year ensuing. The following committees were then appointed by the Chair: On Finance—Geo. T. Adams, L. Boutell, and A. W. Sibley. On Publications—Miles Grant, S. G. Mathewson, and L. T. Cunningham. On Tent—Geo. T. Adams, L. Boutell, and J. Couch.

STUDY THE BIBLE.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Searched the Scriptures daily." ACTS 17: 11.

The best book that ever was printed is the Bible. There are a vast number of good books in the world, and it seems to me that even the poorest families might obtain a library in these days, when books can be purchased at such a small cost. Books are worth more than money, or fine clothes; and with a little economy and self-denial in worldly things, many dollars could be saved with which to fill up the shelves of the family library. Yet, books are of but little value only as they are studied. One volume well studied is of more value than a thousand volumes not studied at all. The man of one book is often more intelligent than the man of many volumes, from the fact that he studies his one, more than the other does his many.

But I took up my pen to say something about the Bible. This is the Book of books. The truths of this book are of more value than the knowledge of all other books combined. Whatever other volumes we may lack, let us not be destitute of this. However ignorant we may be of other things, let us not be ignorant of the Bible. It is the Holy Book. God is its author. He who created the heavens and the earth has handed down to man a transcript of his holy mind and will. A knowledge of faith in, and obedience to this holy word, secures the present and eternal happiness of human beings. O how wonderful is the Bible! Wonderful in its origin, wonderful in its purity, wonderful in its unity, wonderful in its simplicity, wonderful in its profundity, wonderful in its variety, wonderful in its freshness, wonderful in its power and preservation.

I am glad that my attention was ever directed to the blessed Bible. Where should I have been had it not been for the Bible? I was an ignorant, wicked boy going down the road to ruin. I knew not God, and had no one to take me by the hand and lead me to Jesus. But the good Shepherd saw me from afar. He heard my broken, childish prayer, and came to my rescue. It was a happy day when my feet were turned into the narrow path. Truly I could sing,

"Jesus sought me when a stranger,
Wandering from the fold of God;
He to save my soul from danger,
Interposed his precious blood."

But I had no Bible, no guide book, no lamp to my path. I was ignorant of what to do, and how to live a christian. Somehow or other, I got fifty cents, and away I hastened to the nearest store, and bought my first copy of the precious Bible. It was a cheap one, fine print, with no references between the verses, or on the margin; but I thought it was the prettiest and sweetest book that ever I saw. I began at Genesis and read it through. It was my companion by night and day. When I arose in the morning, I read it; when I returned from the field at night, I read it; when I went to meeting I took it with me. My little fifty-cent Bible was all the companion I had. I thought more of it no doubt, than some men think of thousands of dollars. And did I prize it too highly? No. When I spent that fifty cents for a Bible, it was the best bargain I ever made. It was the beginning of a new life to me. That money was deposited in heaven's bank, and will draw interest to all eternity. Since then, I have attended thousands of religious meetings; have spoken thousands of times on Bible subjects, to thousands of people; have received thousands of dollars; have had thousands of good hearty shakes of the hand with brethren in the Lord; have been blessed in various ways thousands and thousands of times; and I have found thousands of precious promises in the Bible, which I did not know were there before I searched it for myself.

The Bible has been my light in darkness, my joy in sorrow, my song in affliction, my support in weariness, my guide in every perplexity. It is my chart, my compass, my beacon light. By it I discern the perils that surround me, and see the safe channel which leads to the celestial harbor. I love the Bible, because it has done so much for me. I love it because it is more and more precious every time I read it. I love it most of all, because it tells me of Jesus. His name is the golden thread that runs through all its sacred pages. It tells me of his love; how he came to this world; was cradled in a manger, a weak and helpless babe; how he was persecuted; how he grew to manhood, and then went about preaching the gospel, healing the sick, raising the dead, comforting the hearts of the sad, feeding the hungry, forgiving the penitent, blessing little children, and scattering blessings all around him to the suffering and needy. It tells me of his sufferings; how he was poor; so poor that he had not where to lay his head; how he was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; how he suffered in the garden of Gethsemane, when he sweat as it were great drops of blood, falling down to the ground; how he wore the crown of thorns, the purple robe, and was smitten and mocked by his enemies. It tells me of the cross, and the tragic scenes of Calvary; of his ignominious death, his burial, his resurrection, his appearance to his disciples, his ascension into heaven.

It tells me how he comforted the heart of his disciples before he left them, saying, "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions. . . . I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." It tells me that as he departed and went up into heaven, while two angels in white apparel stood by the disciple, and said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come, in like manner, as ye have seen him go into heaven." It tells me that, when he comes, he will raise the sleeping saints, and change the living ones to immortality. He will wipe away all tears, and bind up every broken heart. He will remove the curse, cleanse the earth of all its wickedness, and fill it with his glory. It says, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth. . . . And I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven; . . . and I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away. Mother, then you will meet the little one you laid away in the grave so long ago, all shining and beautiful. Do you not love the Bible? Study it more.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

There are many now on the earth who are looking for the second coming of Christ, as something near at hand, and there always have been, since he left this earth. Who can blame the bride for looking for the return of the Bridegroom—for longing for it—for putting a favorable construction upon every sign of his return, especially when we are told that a "crown of righteousness" awaits all those that love his appearing?

But though it is easy to see that those in past ages were mistaken who looked for his speedy coming, are those mistaken who look for it now? Though there is much uncertainty about his coming there are some things certain.

1. To the most of the world he will come unawares—like a thief in the night—they will be eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, just as they were in the days of Noah. Nay, many will be scoffing and saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" but

2. Those who are looking for him will know when he is coming—not the exact hour, probably, but near enough for every necessity. Our Lord told his disciples, "When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, . . . let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains." No doubt it was far from clear to their minds then, how any could escape after the Roman armies had invested the city, but it was clear enough when the time came. The city was surrounded by the legions of Cestius Gallus, but on account of some disturbance, not far off, he withdrew his troops for a short time, thus giving the christians opportunity to escape, and not one perished in the siege which followed under Titus. So the wise virgins will have the timely warning and all will be found with their lamps trimmed and burning.

3. If it is not certain that it is near at hand, it is certain that it cannot be very far off—so certain that it becomes every one to see that he is in readiness—that nothing is left undone which he would wish done in case of such an event—that when the Master comes, he will find nothing in their houses and nothing in their hearts which they would not have him see. Some house cleaning and some heart cleaning will be necessary to this end. Let us heed the admonition: "Be ye also ready."—Chicago Foundling's Record.

WE are apt to make our vocation in looking out of the way for occasions to exercise great and rare virtues, and by stepping over the ordinary ones which lie directly in the road before us. When we read, we fancy we could be martyrs; and when we come to act, we cannot bear a provoking word.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 989. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1874. VOL. XL.—NO. 2.

The World's Crisis, AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,

Issued every Wednesday Afternoon, by the ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, At No. 160 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass.

GEO. T. ADAMS, TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

JOHN COUCH, MILES GRANT, } EDITORS.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE: S. G. MATHEWSON, L. BOUTELL, WM. H. MITCHELL.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE: H. V. DAVIS, M. BATCHELOR, L. T. CUNNINGHAM, J. G. HAMBLIN, J. HEMENWAY.

The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

"WATCH!"

"Watch therefore; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."—MATT. 24: 42, 44.

All gone to sleep! Wake, virgins,—up!
Your lamps with oil prepare!
"The Bridegroom comes!" that midnight cry
Will soon ring on the air.
The first sound of his chariot wheels
We strain our ears to catch;
All signs portend 'tis near "the end,"
And Christ says, "Therefore watch!"

To such as mock—"Christ come again?"
Sufficient this reply—
'Tis likelier he should come to reign,
Than that he came to die.
The unbelief in "days of Noah"
Well does the present match,
Which is a sign of last decline,
And Christ says, "Therefore watch!"

The war-fiend's loose! and carnage wrought—
O, who can tell the sum!
Of earth man's godless empire reels,
And "perilous times" are come!
The truth's denied, and lies believed
That wicked spirits hatch!
A given sign of "the last time;"
And Christ says, "Therefore watch!"

"In such an hour as ye think not"—
Ah, me! who thinks at all
Of aught but self and worldly gain,
Or heeds the Master's call?
He's near at hand, he's at the door,
His hand is on the latch.
And "our redemption draweth nigh,"—
Watch therefore, christian, watch!

ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

AMER. ADV. MISSION SOCIETY,

FOR THE

Year ending Aug. 12th, 1874.

The ninth annual meeting of the Amer. Adv. Mission Society was held at Springfield, Mass. (Chapin's Grove), Aug. 12th, 1874. The meeting was called to order by the President, Eld. Miles Grant. After the singing of a hymn from the Jubilee Harp, prayer was offered by Eld. M. R. Phetteplace, of Providence, R. I. The list of members reported by the Secretary of the A. C. Association was adopted, as the membership of this meeting, which is as follows:

List of Members.

S. G. MATHEWSON, Worcester, Mass.
M. BATCHELOR, New Bedford, Mass.
H. F. CARPENTER, Fitchburg, Mass.

A committee appointed by the Chair on business reported the following order, which was adopted:—

1. Reading of the Secretary's minutes.
2. The report of the Executive Board, by the President.
3. Treasurer's report.
4. The election of officers for the ensuing year.
5. Promiscuous business.

The Secretary's minutes of the last annual session were read and adopted. The President read the report of the Executive Board. it being the next item of business in the order adopted. The following is a part of the President's address:—

ADDRESS TO MISSION SOCIETY,

BY MILES GRANT,

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING IN SPRINGFIELD, MASS, AUGUST 12th, 1874.

To the American Advent Mission Society, Greeting: Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ,—The flight of time has brought us to the close of another year, with its varied events. Like other years, it has witnessed joys and sorrows, trials and temptations, lights and shadows, with some heart-rending scenes in sick rooms, by the side of the dying, the dead, the tolling bell, and burial. Some, who greeted us in this consecrated spot last year, will come no more. We live to continue the work they so ardently loved.

You are called together at this time to listen to the report of your Executive Board, and to transact such business as relates to the interests of this Society, organized in 1865 for the purpose of spreading the light and truth contained in the sacred Scriptures. Since its organization, it has received and expended about $33.000. The results will be best known in the world to come. If one is saved in consequence, the reward will be everything for almost nothing. Had that saved one the opportunity of selling his right to eternal life for what has been paid out by the Mission Society during the last nine years, does any one think he would accept the offer? Jesus has said: "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Instead of one, we have reason to believe that many will be saved in consequence of what has been done by the supporters of this Society, that would have been lost but for its efforts. We have only to read the reports of those engaged in the missionary work, to be satisfied that this is a correct conclusion. Then is there not a good reason for its continuance with increased energy? If our combined efforts for a whole life-time result in saving one, we shall be richly paid for our labor and sacrifice.

It is said "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light"; that is, they study out the best ways and means to accomplish their purposes. If they were as careless of their temporal interests, as many professed christians are of the advancement of the cause of Christ, their successes would be turned to failures. Satan knows the importance of missionary labor. See the results among the Catholics. They send missionaries to all countries,—send them early, and take the lead. No effort is spared to spread their influence. Schools, colleges, councils, general gatherings, and all possible means are continually employed to accomplish their object. Every man, woman and child is looked after carefully, and surrounded by a Catholic shield. They attend to their religious matters as though they thought them of some importance. Their missionary work has been one great cause of their remarkable success. All this is done for error—for Satan—to spread a counterfeit religion. How much more should it be done for the genuine. Remember, too, that the vast Roman Catholic system is supported largely by money received from the poor laboring classes.

Glance at the success of Mormonism. Every few months we hear of the arrival of several hundred from Europe, en route for Salt Lake. A hundred thousand, or more, are already gathered in Utah to sustain the false system there proclaimed. How is this accomplished? Mainly by missionary work. Their men are sent to various countries to proclaim their views with persevering earnestness, which goes far towards convincing those who listen. Had it not been for their missionary labor, they would have but a handful to-day.

Now, if all this is done for the spread of error, what shall we do, who are believing the most glorious truths ever presented to the human race? Shall we be passively idle, and expect to hear the Savior say, "Well done"? He said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Is not this instruction as important now as then? If there was ever a time to go into the "regions beyond," is not this the hour? If circumstances ever called for immediate, earnest action for Christ, is not the call now more than ever imperative?

At the conclusion of the reading of the report of the Executive Board, by the President, it was moved, and unanimously carried, to adopt and publish the same in tract form for free distribution. Adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock A. M.

Met as adjourned. The President in the chair. Prayer was offered by Eld. J. Couch of Chelsea, Mass. The Secretary's minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved. The Treasurer's report was read and adopted.

GEO. T. ADAMS, Treasurer A. A. M. Society.

BOSTON, AUG. 5, 1874.

This is to certify that I have this day examined the accounts of the Treasurer of the A. A. M. Society, and found them correctly kept and rightly vouched, and a balance in the Treasury of four hundred and nineteen dollars and seventy-five cents ($419.75.)

L. BOUTELL, Auditor.

The Chair, by vote, appointed Charles Goodrich, L. T. Cunningham, and George A. Streeter, as tellers to receive, assort and count ballots for the election of officers for the ensuing year. It was voted, that Bro. J. Couch be requested to read an appeal, which he had written, respecting the importance of immediate action on the part of every believer in the speedy coming of the Bridegroom, to contribute of their means, with which God had entrusted them, to help spread the glad tidings, "Behold he cometh," and to prepare a people for the Lord, when he shall come the second time "without sin unto salvation."

AN APPEAL TO THE A. A. MISSION SOCIETY.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE A. A. MISSION SOCIETY, greeting:

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ:—

You have associated yourself as a mission society, that you may combine your strength and harmonize your efforts in accomplishing a great work. Mission implies the act of sending, or the state of being sent; authority by which delegates are sent to transact specified business. A society is a body of persons associated for the purpose of accomplishing some specified object. A mission society is therefore one which accomplishes its work by sending delegates or missionaries to act for it. Your society is a christian body formed for the purpose of doing work for Christ;—gospel work. Christ's special work relating to our world is to seek and to save that which was lost. His people, who follow him, obligate themselves as his servants to be governed by the same principles, and labor to accomplish the same objects. He was rich, but to accomplish his mission he voluntarily became poor, that he might make many rich. So shall we, when we have his spirit, be willing to expend our wealth in carrying out his great mission. He made it especially important to preach the good tidings to the poor, because they would more gladly receive it than the higher classes. His people are greatly blessed of him when they condescend to men of low estate, and freely send the gospel to the poor, the outcasts, having few advantages and are the substratum of society.

His great work was to reconcile rebellious men to God, making them loyal to him, and true friends to each other. This should be the grand object of all christian labor. He preached the inspired word of God as the standard of saving faith, the rule of life, the foundation of hope, and the forewarning of dangers. We are not allowed to deviate from his example.

The objects for the accomplishment of which you have combined your means and efforts, are among the most important and honorable in which fallen man can be engaged. They are graded in so high a plane that God manifests a special interest in them, exercising a supervision over the cause, putting his seal on the commission of every true ambassador sent to do the holy work, furnishing the heavenly means—sacred truth, —the Divine Spirit, and all needed grace for its execution. All heaven is interested in this great subject. It is the redemption and salvation of men;—the beings of God's creation and love,—the earthly representatives of himself, designed as peers with the angels.

A theme so noble and heavenly as this, is altogether above the grade of the sinful heart; its aspirations and hopes fall far below it. His eye doth not see it, nor his love embrace it. Divine grace alone can raise humanity to that elevated plane, to behold its infinite importance, and its eternal blessedness. Sin blinds the mind of man, so that all objects are inverted; the highest becomes the lowest; the richest the poorest; those of first importance the last to be sought. From a worldly stand-point your society and work appears to men as an insignificant matter, unworthy of their time or talents; but to the eye of faith it is seen from God's stand-point, and appears (if it be of God, as we trust it is), in its true grandeur, overtopping their great political combinations and secret associations, with all their high sounding titles and senseless ceremonies. Theirs originate in a worldly spirit; but yours in a heavenly. Theirs operate to exalt the high, and oppress the poor; but yours to abase the high, and exalt the low. They expend much of their treasure in corrupting and killing men, but you design to expend all of yours in saving men. A noble purpose! A Godlike work! Worthy of the sacrifices and devotion of Christ, and faithful ministrations of the angels. For its accomplishment the holy Seers engraved the sacred parchments. Christ preached his great sermons, and inspired apostles wrote the gospel and the holy epistles. That God may be all and in all connected with this glorious work, he sends his Holy Spirit to inspire and help all who engage in it.

Then lift up your heads ye people of the Most High God, for he reads your hearts, and smiles at your sacrifices made for Jesus' sake. Remember, ye meek and lowly ones, that when you enter your closets, and your yearning, pitying hearts petition God to have mercy and save the poor outcast, downtrodden millions, the sorrowing, suffering multitudes for whom Jesus died, and is now pleading, that his great heart will love you when you do the little that you can to send light and truth to raise the fallen, cheer the faint, and save the perishing. Do this holy mission work in the name of Jesus, and be sure that your hopes and aspirations are like his. Let no evil motives control you; —love of honor, praise of men, peace or worldly gain, the spirit of rivalry, or any false ambition. Remember that the Jew was condemned by Christ because he was unfaithful in the unrighteous mammon (worldly goods), and therefore was not entrusted with the true riches—the gospel blessings through Christ. The principles under the gospel are the same, and no one can enjoy a fullness in Christ, or secure an everlasting habitation in the kingdom of God, who withholds the fruits of his earthly inheritance from the Lord's cause.

We do not speak thus plainly, brethren, to reproach you for the past, but to encourage you for the future. You contributed nobly for the sacred cause the past year, and as far as it was done heartily as unto the Lord, we are assured you have received a hundred fold of the true riches.

Your Executive Board have felt a great weight of responsibility thrown upon them, in receiving for their appropriation these consecrated funds—the hard earnings of toiling christians given to God in prayer. They have felt the need of heavenly wisdom to do this responsible work of selecting men, chosen and qualified of God to go into the "regions beyond" and preach the gospel of the kingdom to those sitting in darkness and exposed to swiftly coming judgments. They have felt the need of much grace to impartially and without personal likes or dislikes, to justly and wisely distribute these sacred treasures in the various localities, and to the different persons from whom has come the prayer for help. They would not assume to say that they have not, in any case, acted upon an error of judgment in this matter, but would meekly say they have purposed to act in harmony with the divine will.

The Macedonian cry from destitute regions for missionary help, has been greatly increased the past year. The door for this gospel kind of labor was never so widely opened for us as a people before. Where kind and well directed efforts have been put forth, and the Holy Spirit has been more depended upon than human eloquence or sensationalism, sound Bible arguments than blackguardism or sarcasm, prejudice has greatly given way, and the people are more ready to hear the great message we are especially called to proclaim, than for many years in the past.

We have felt it duty under the circumstances, to do but little for New England, as those States have local societies which are designed to supply their wants. We have assisted some of the servants of Christ while laboring in new and destitute places in N. Y., N. J., Md., D. C., and Va. Much more could have been profitably expended in those States if we could have had sufficient funds. South Carolina has been our base of operations in the South Atlantic States, and from this point we trust light and salvation has been circulating among the people with very satisfactory results. Bro. Bowman has had the principle charge in this field, and has labored constantly and earnestly in S. C., N. C., and Ga. The truth we love so well has taken deep root in many hearts, of both the white and colored people, which neither sectarianism nor infidelity will be able to uproot. A number of preachers in other churches are becoming deeply interested in present truth, and are beginning to proclaim it to their flocks and the people. May the voice of God be heard sounding over those southern fields, awakening the people to a sense of impending danger, and the necessity of speedy preparation to meet the Judge of quick and dead.

We have esteemed it a duty and a glorious privilege to assist the heralds of the gospel of the kingdom in sounding forth the solemn note of warning in the Gulf States, Flo., Ala., Miss., and also Tenn. Bro. Cargile, Green, Smith, and others, have been traveling extensively in those States, proclaiming the good news of salvation through Christ, and the speedy redemption of the faithful, to the old masters and their former slaves, with great success. We doubt not, Brn., but the money you have sent into that field through your Board will yield you a very large per cent. of profit in the kingdom of God. It will give you great delight, when the redeemed millions are gathered to their heavenly rest, to see among them a happy class who were lead to salvation's fountain through the instrumentality of your donations, and the untiring labor of these faithful missionaries.

We have also scattered the fruits of your christian benevolence in Ohio, Ky., Mich., Minn., Ia., and Mo. These States have not shared so largely in your offering as some others, but needed our assistance to a much larger extent than we were able to give. May the Father of all mercies open his heavenly window and pour them out a great blessing in the future.

The new and frontier State of Kansas has occupied a position to call for our sympathies and help. Society in many parts is in its incipient stages of formation. Religious meetings are just being established; the people are anxious to obtain gospel teaching, and in many places cannot obtain it for want of means, unless it is given without money. Under such circumstances, missionary labor can be employed to much greater advantage than where society is established, and the missionary is looked upon as an intruder, and is under the necessity of laboring under the fire of open batteries. We have no doubt that from Kansas many will rise up in the judgment and call you blessed, because you, in a gospel spirit and manner, sent them the word of life, just at a time when it could reach and save them. The brethren in that State have been doing what they could to help themselves in the mission work, and we are inclined to think that no State in the Union has been more thoroughly awake to mission labor the past year than this.

The Pacific coast has not been forgotten in this glorious work, for California has extended her friendly hand over the Rocky mountains, which has been kindly clasped with christian greetings and a financial blessing and promise. A great and good work has been accomplished on the Pacific slope through missionary efforts, and we do earnestly pray that the Lord, who giveth the increase, may prune and water this western vine that it may bring forth much fruit to the glory of Christ. Much good has been accomplished in your mission work by supplying our missionaries with publications for free distribution. The arguments used by them in these fields, upon some important subjects, were entirely new to the people, and they could not retain them so as to criticise them by hearing one or two sermons; but when they were supplied with published arguments upon the same subjects, they could examine them deliberately, and when favorably impressed, they could communicate it to others. A part of those publications have been paid for out of your funds, and a part from the Tract Fund.

When we look over all these extended fields, and the formidable opposition to this work which has been met, and the limited means and scattered instrumentalities employed, and see that a flood of prejudice has been swept back, and the glorious light of truth has sprung up in a thousand places, and thousands of saddened hearts have been cheered by the glad tidings proclaimed, we recognize a divine hand rolling onward the car of salvation with almighty power. We should feel that God has greatly honored us to impose such trust and confidence in us as to make us the stewards over any of his earthly treasures, that we may have the privilege of manifesting our love to him, and our regard for the eternal happiness of our fellow-men, by appropriating any of it in so holy and heavenly a cause. If the spirit of Christ dwell in us, it will give us the same will and aspirations that it gave him. He so loved perishing men that he willingly gave up his riches and life for their salvation. It will produce the same willingness in us. It made him a self-sacrificing, public-spirited Benefactor of our world, cheerfully bearing burdens for the general good. It will produce the same in all his people. Let none be deceived in this matter. He that lives for himself has no part in Christ. The essence of christianity is an all controlling desire to benefit others. "Charity seeketh not her own." God is love; and through this infinitely glorious essence of himself, he dwells in his people. Love is an immutable negative,—"worketh no ill" to any; and an eternal positive, it will "do good to all."

Is this divine nature—infinite love—the ruling element of our hearts? Then the salvation of a ruined race is the grand theme of our minds and efforts for the accomplishment of this object—the joyful labor of our lives.

The christian's interest in this inspiring subject is greatly intensified when he sees, by the light of God's word, that the time of labor is drawing to a close, and the day of the sinner's calamity is just at hand.

When a man of God, filled with the love and sympathy of Christ for humanity, puts the glass of inspiration to his eye, and beholds countless millions walking blindly and unconsciously to the brink of a terrible precipice, every step they advance heightens his alarm for their safety, and increases his exertions for their rescue. We believe this is the condition of Christ's true servants to-day. If a man could stand upon the suspension bridge at Niagara, and see a staging attached to it by cords, hanging over the foaming, leaping waters far below, upon which many of his dear friends were laboring, and could see the fastenings gradually giving way, would not the loosening of each cord increase his alarm and his efforts to save them from the terrible calamity impending? He would be considered far below the plain of humanity, if he, to save a few dollars, or to enjoy a little more ease and pleasure, should neglect to faithfully warn them of their danger, and do all he could to save them from an awful death. How, then, will Christ and the angels look upon us, whose eyes have been turned to see the loosening cords holding the frail stage upon which humanity stands, if we spend our time in vain parade and sinful strife, and do not lift up the voice like a trumpet and warn them of hastening judgment? Can we look upon the untaught, unwarned millions, whose hour of doom is upon them, and they unconscious of its approach,—the fatal snare about to be drawn, and they not aware that their feet are within the coil, and be justified before God and them in judgment, and not do all we can to arouse them to a sense of their danger, and to lead them out of the coil into the fold of Christ? Will not our hearts be aroused to an agony of earnestness, like the husband who is drawing the wife of his love out of a pit of death? Shall we not give our profession the lie when we say that Christ is soon to appear in judgment, and the last hours of man's probation are passing, and we spend those hours in worldly speculations, hoarding up treasures of which not a twentieth is given to the Lord, or doing worse, striving about abstract theological questions which only divide and confuse the church of Christ?

May God help us to comprehend the vastness of this subject, and the weight of responsibility resting upon us. A world is about to plunge into the vortex of eternal ruin, and God and all the principles of mercy and love for our race call upon us to rush into the whirl and confusion of the excited, maddened multitudes, and rescue a few, if possible, from the pit of everlasting destruction. Time is short! What thou doest must be done immediately. Push out your life boat! A plaintive cry is heard asking for help in the darkness of the storm! Hasten to the by-ways and hedges, and tell the broken-hearted, forsaken wife that Jesus will receive her as his friend! Tell the noble-hearted but enslaved inebriate that Christ saves sinners! Help the poor servant of Jesus, whose heart is burning with love for the fallen, to fly on the swift chariots and lead them to the Rock of safety! O work, work, for your sun is setting. The prophetic index now points to the closing moments. Come not down from the house top, but lift up your voice where you are! Return not from the field, but wave your signal as you stand! A moment should not be lost! Do not be deceived by waiting for new developments, or more favorable circumstances. Strike for God and a perishing world, and strike to-day! All heaven is watching with intense interest to see the remnant church, bearing the last message of mercy to a rebellious world, as she meekly stands, hidden in the smoke and dust of battle, with uplifted hands praying, "O that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down!" "Even so, come, Lord Jesus!"

At the conclusion of the appeal, several brethren made remarks on the importance and nature of the work to which God had called us. When means were called for with which to push forward the mission work another year, there were responses of a noble character from the stewards of the Lord's money, which indicated the fact that the faith in the coming of the "King of kings" had not become entirely extinct.

The committee appointed to receive and count ballots reported the following elected officers, for the ensuing year:—

President—Eld. Miles Grant.
Vice Presidents—N. W. Wait, C. S. Sherman, S. Hall, Sam'l Ayres, and Mrs. E. S. Jennings.
Secretary—Eld. A. W. Sibley.
Treasurer—Geo. T. Adams.
Auditor—Eld. L. Boutell.
Executive Board—Elds. J. Couch, L. T. Cunningham, and S. G. Mathewson.

After singing the doxology—

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow,"

the meeting adjourned sine die.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

P. S.—At the first meeting of the Executive Board, after the close of the annual session, Miles Grant was chosen Chairman, L. T. Cunningham Secretary of the Board, and Geo. T. Adams Corresponding Secretary of the Board, for the year ensuing. The following committees were then appointed by the Chair: On Finance—Geo. T. Adams, L. Boutell, and A. W. Sibley. On Publications—Miles Grant, S. G. Mathewson, and L. T. Cunningham. On Tent—Geo. T. Adams, L. Boutell, and J. Couch.

STUDY THE BIBLE.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Searched the Scriptures daily." ACTS 17: 11.

The best book that ever was printed is the Bible. There are a vast number of good books in the world, and it seems to me that even the poorest families might obtain a library in these days, when books can be purchased at such a small cost. Books are worth more than money, or fine clothes; and with a little economy and self-denial in worldly things, many dollars could be saved with which to fill up the shelves of the family library. Yet, books are of but little value only as they are studied. One volume well studied is of more value than a thousand volumes not studied at all. The man of one book is often more intelligent than the man of many volumes, from the fact that he studies his one, more than the other does his many.

But I took up my pen to say something about the Bible. This is the Book of books. The truths of this book are of more value than the knowledge of all other books combined. Whatever other volumes we may lack, let us not be destitute of this. However ignorant we may be of other things, let us not be ignorant of the Bible. It is the Holy Book. God is its author. He who created the heavens and the earth has handed down to man a transcript of his holy mind and will. A knowledge of faith in, and obedience to this holy word, secures the present and eternal happiness of human beings. O how wonderful is the Bible! Wonderful in its origin, wonderful in its purity, wonderful in its unity, wonderful in its simplicity, wonderful in its profundity, wonderful in its variety, wonderful in its freshness, wonderful in its power and preservation.

I am glad that my attention was ever directed to the blessed Bible. Where should I have been had it not been for the Bible? I was an ignorant, wicked boy going down the road to ruin. I knew not God, and had no one to take me by the hand and lead me to Jesus. But the good Shepherd saw me from afar. He heard my broken, childish prayer, and came to my rescue. It was a happy day when my feet were turned into the narrow path. Truly I could sing,

"Jesus sought me when a stranger,
Wandering from the fold of God;
He to save my soul from danger,
Interposed his precious blood."

But I had no Bible, no guide book, no lamp to my path. I was ignorant of what to do, and how to live a christian. Somehow or other, I got fifty cents, and away I hastened to the nearest store, and bought my first copy of the precious Bible. It was a cheap one, fine print, with no references between the verses, or on the margin; but I thought it was the prettiest and sweetest book that ever I saw. I began at Genesis and read it through. It was my companion by night and day. When I arose in the morning, I read it; when I returned from the field at night, I read it; when I went to meeting I took it with me. My little fifty-cent Bible was all the companion I had. I thought more of it no doubt, than some men think of thousands of dollars. And did I prize it too highly? No. When I spent that fifty cents for a Bible, it was the best bargain I ever made. It was the beginning of a new life to me. That money was deposited in heaven's bank, and will draw interest to all eternity. Since then, I have attended thousands of religious meetings; have spoken thousands of times on Bible subjects, to thousadds of people; have received thousands of dollars; have had thousands of good hearty shakes of the hand with brethren in the Lord; have been blessed in various ways thousands and thousands of times; and I have found thousands of precious promises in the Bible, which I did not know were there before I searched it for myself.

The Bible has been my light in darkness, my joy in sorrow, my song in affliction, my support in weariness, my guide in every perplexity. It is my chart, my compass, my beacon light. By it I discern the perils that surround me, and see the safe channel which leads to the celestial harbor. I love the Bible, because it has done so much for me. I love it because it is more and more precious every time I read it. I love it most of all, because it tells me of Jesus. His name is the golden thread that runs through all its sacred pages. It tells me of his love; how he came to this world; was cradled in a manger, a weak and helpless babe; how he was persecuted; how he grew to manhood, and then went about preaching the gospel, healing the sick, raising the dead, comforting the hearts of the sad, feeding the hungry, forgiving the penitent, blessing little children, and scattering blessings all around him to the suffering and needy. It tells me of his sufferings; how he was poor; so poor that he had not where to lay his head; how he was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; how he suffered in the garden of Gethsemane; when he sweat as it were great drops of blood, falling down to the ground; how he wore the crown of thorns, the purple robe, and was smitten and mocked by his enemies. It tells me of the cross, and the tragic scenes of Calvary; of his ignominious death, his burial, his resurrection, his appearance to his disciples, his ascension into heaven.

It tells me how he comforted the heart of his disciples before he left them, saying, "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions. . . . I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." It tells me that as he departed and went up into heaven, while two angels in white apparel stood by the disciple, and said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come, in like manner, as ye have seen him go into heaven." It tells me that, when he comes, he will raise the sleeping saints, and change the living ones to immortality. He will wipe away all tears, and bind up every broken heart. He will remove the curse, cleanse the earth of all its wickedness, and fill it with his glory. It says, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth. . . . And I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven; . . . and I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away. Mother, then you will meet the little one you laid away in the grave so long ago, all shining and beautiful. Do you not love the Bible? Study it more.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

There are many now on the earth who are looking for the second coming of Christ, as something near at hand, and there always have been, since he left this earth. Who can blame the bride for looking for the return of the Bridegroom—for longing for it—for putting a favorable construction upon every sign of his return, especially when we are told that a "crown of righteousness" awaits all those that love his appearing?

But though it is easy to see that those in past ages were mistaken who looked for his speedy coming, are those mistaken who look for it now? Though there is much uncertainty about his coming there are some things certain.

1. To the most of the world he will come unawares—like a thief in the night—they will be eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, just as they were in the days of Noah. Nay, many will be scoffing and saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" but

2. Those who are looking for him will know when he is coming—not the exact hour, probably, but near enough for every necessity. Our Lord told his disciples, "When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, . . . let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains." No doubt it was far from clear to their minds then, how any could escape after the Roman armies had invested the city, but it was clear enough when the time came. The city was surrounded by the legions of Cestius Gallus, but on account of some disturbance, not far off, he withdrew his troops for a short time, thus giving the christians opportunity to escape, and not one perished in the siege which followed under Titus. So the wise virgins will have the timely warning and all will be found with their lamps trimmed and burning.

3. If it is not certain that it is near at hand, it is certain that it cannot be very far off—so certain that it becomes every one to see that he is in readiness—that nothing is left undone which he would wish done in case of such an event—that when the Master comes, he will find nothing in their houses and nothing in their hearts which they would not have him see. Some house cleaning and some heart cleaning will be necessary to this end. Let us heed the admonition: "Be ye also ready."—Chicago Foundling's Record.

WE are apt to make our vocation in looking out of the way for occasions to exercise great and rare virtues, and by stepping over the ordinary ones which lie directly in the road before us. When we read, we fancy we could be martyrs; and when we come to act, we cannot bear a provoking word.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Oct. 21, 1874.

Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of Drafts, Bank Checks, and Postal Money-Orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS.

THOSE who send articles for the "CRISIS," should direct them to the "EDITORS OF WORLD'S CRISIS," Boston, Mass.

PLEASE READ, REMEMBER, AND ACT ACCORDINGLY.

The brethren, sisters, friends—one and all—whoever may write to this office, sending articles for insertion in the Crisis, or subscriptions for the same, notices, appointments, reports, or orders for papers, books, tracts, or anything of the kind, will confer a favor and do the right way by directing their letters in either one of the following ways:—

"EDITORS OF WORLD'S CRISIS, Boston, Mass."

"WORLD'S CRISIS, Boston, Mass.," or

GEO. T. ADAMS, Agent, Boston, Mass.

Those who send articles for the Young Pilgrim should address—

"EDITOR YOUNG PILGRIM, Boston, Mass."

In no case address letters on business connected with the papers, or office, to any of the clerks, compositors, or helps in this office.

AGENT.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

The provisions of the new postal law, requiring pre-payment of postage on all newspapers, go into operation on the first of January next. After that date all postage (excepting on newspapers within the County in which they are published) will have to be paid at the Office from which the paper is mailed. This change relieves the subscribers from the care and trouble of postage payment, placing it upon the publishers, and making the expense, which is quite an item, to come directly upon the latter.

To meet this (in regard to the Crisis), the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society, at a late meeting, voted to add twenty-five cents to the price of our paper; so that from Jan. 1st, 1875, the World's Crisis will be $2.25 per year in advance. And hereafter, all monies received at this office for advance pay on the Crisis will be credited from Jan. forward at the rate of $2.25 per year. And if any, who have already paid for the paper in advance, are disposed to send us what they would have to pay at their Post Office, under the old law, we will thankfully receive the same; and so of those who receive the Crisis FREE.

"OUR PAPER."

In view of the startling fact that we are near the second coming of Christ, ought we not to make more effort to put into the hands of the people such reading matter as is calculated to awaken an interest on the subject? How can this be done more easily and successfully than by persuading them to take "our paper," "The World's Crisis"? We would urge all preachers to make a special effort the coming season to get new subscribers, as a means of stirring up the people to a sense of the solemnity of the hour in which we are living. M. WESTERN NEW YORK.

We left Boston, Tuesday morning, Sept. 29th, for the City of Lockport, N. Y., on our way to the Western States. The cars—one of the wonders of the age, seen by the prophet long ago, running like the lightnings up and down the broad ways, in the days of the Lord's preparation—bears us swiftly away from the metropolis of New England, through its beautiful suburban towns, winding with thundering tread up the sides of the mountains, descending through fertile vales, passing the busy city of Worcester and the long meadows of Brookfield to the verdant valley of the Connecticut. We stopped a few moments at the Armory city—Springfield—and there crossed the grand old Connecticut, whirled over the narrowing intervales of the Westfield river, threading its winding gorge with our long train drawn by its tireless horse, puffing and snorting, with hideous screams of warning and defiance, roaring like a thundering tempest through the blasted excavatious and tunnels, passing over deep gorges filled with broken stones, hurrying through frequent bridges, under which the clear mountain stream flows, while we by marvelous power rose to the ridge of the beautiful Green Mountain range. Such a scene and experience described to our fathers a century ago, would have seemed like the wildest fancy; circumstances impossible to transpire in this world. From our mountain position we descended on the strongly bolted parallel rods to the western boundary of the old Bay State, and dashed away through the eastern towns of the great Empire State, passing over the iron bridge at Albany, from which we could look down upon the broad bosom of the Hudson River.

At Albany we struck the track of the N. Y. C. R. R., one of the largest steam carriage thoroughfares in the country. They are now laying two more tracks, making a four track-road of steel rails from Albany to Buffalo, a distance of three hundred miles. The country through which this road passes, has, doubtless, as many advantages for farming and manufacturing purposes, and capable of sustaining as dense a population as any tract of country of its size in the world. Our train was too late at Rochester to make connection with the express train for Suspension Bridge, so we were under the necessity of riding on the night mail train to Lockport, where we arrived at 1 o'clock Wednesday morning. On our arrival, we were made glad to find Bro. Stoddard, like a true friend, waiting for us at the depot, bidding us a hearty welcome to his pilgrim home, where we found his wife, Sr. L. M. Stoddard also, ready to greet us with true christian salutations. We soon forgot our weariness as we entered into conversation upon former associations, incidents, and Eastern friends. When evening came we went to the Lutheran meeting-house, where an appointment had been given for us to preach. We there met Brn. R. H. Bateman, pastor of the church at Lockport, and W. Vreeland of Shelby.

Our brethren and sisters of Lockport, who are rejoicing in hope of soon meeting our returning Lord, were there, anxious to hear some good news of the coming kingdom. The Lord blessed us with a very good meeting that evening and the following. Bro. Bateman seems to be earnestly engaged in the work of teaching and leading the church to the point of final triumph at the appearing of Jesus. We think that the Lord has many true friends in Lockport, who have their hearts set upon the kingdom of God, and will endure as seeing him who is invisible, until their faith shall end in eternal salvation. Sister Stoddard labors in different places, having a watch-care over several congregations, doing, we doubt not, much good through the grace of our adorable Jesus. The Advent faith has gained a strong foothold in Western New York. Many churches have been planted, and many who have not professed the faith are more strongly inclined to confess the truthfulness of its doctrines than any others preached. We most earnestly pray that God may abundantly bless his servants and people in this section of country, giving them enduring grace that they may continue to occupy the position God has called us to take, waiting for the glorious returning of Christ, until the fullness of time shall come for the complete redemption of the true Israel.

This is a very rich, fertile country, the soil is very productive, and can be worked easily with machinery, is connected by cheap and quick transportation with the largest and best markets in the country, making agriculture very lucrative in all its departments. It ranks very high as a fruit country. It produces in great richness and abundance all the varieties the latitude allows. It is a very enjoyable sight at this season of the year to look upon the broad and beautiful fields covered with golden corn, growing wheat of the richest green, and extensive orchards on which have grown the present season a great abundance of the most beautiful and delicious fruit we have ever seen. God has made the people of Western N. Y. stewards of many of his richest earthly treasures for the use of which they will have to render an account to him at the last day. O, that we may realize that all the blessings, spiritual and temporal, we receive from our Heavenly Father, are given us to be spent in his service; and when we do not appropriate them for that purpose, but squander them upon our carnal lusts, we stand condemned before him.

J. C.

KEENE.

The tent-meeting in Keene, N. H., has resulted in accomplishing special good. The Lord has blest the effort. Much prejudice has been removed, and christian sympathy has taken its place in the hearts of several members of other churches. At the last meeting we attended (Friday evening, Oct. 9th), a large number expressed the fact that they had been blest during the meetings. A goodly number consented to consecrate all to Christ, and received a deeper and more abounding peace than they ever before enjoyed. Others are deeply impressed with the importance of entire sanctification to the Lord.

The people are becoming quite attached to the tent, and are anxious to have it remain longer. Backsliders are returning to the Lord, and there was one bright convert. Others are almost persuaded to be christians. It takes a great amount of labor to reach the unconverted in these days. They have resisted so much light, and abused so many privileges, that their hearts have become almost as stubborn as Pharaoh's. They seem to be more and more set against yielding to the kind invitations of the dear Savior. They are much like Antediluvians and Sodomites.

The chief work now is to get church members aroused from their slumbers so as to be ready to meet Christ at his coming. As the majority of professors are now living, their chances for salvation are very uncertain. Hatred and variance, pride, and covetousness, deceit and laciviousness find plenty of room in their hearts, and thus the Spirit of Christ is crowded out. It is time that every watchman on Zion's walls was sounding an earnest alarm. Let no effort be spared that can be employed to save men from perdition. M. G.

SR. PALMER.—We are saddened to learn that Sr. Palmer, the editor of the "Guide to Holiness," has been very sick for some weeks, and was not expected to live, but we rejoice to hear that she is now a little better, and hopes are entertained of her recovey. She has done a noble work in the vineyard of her heavenly Master during the last thirty years. When in Worcester, Oct. 11th, we met Sr. James, a bosom friend of Sr. Palmer's, who remarked that she and Sr. P. had often spent happy moments together in talking about the return of Jesus, and said with emphasis, "We love his coming. So do all truly holy people, though they may not have seen the evidence that appears so bright to most of our readers. One may love an event without knowing when it will occur, as well as the one who knows the time. But a knowledge of the time would naturally lead one to make extra preparation for the event; hence the effect of presenting reliable evidence of Christ's speedy coming is very profitable to the church. The signs of the times are many-tongued in proclaiming that, in a little while, the dear One who died for us will show his smiling face through the parting clouds of glory. Does the heart of the reader say come, blessed Redeemer, and set up thy heavenly kingdom? Remember, there is a crown for those who love his appearing." Let us be in that happy company. In order to be surely there, we must "keep the heart pure." M. G.

FALL RIVER TENT MEETING.—We spent one evening (Friday, Oct. 16th) at the tent meeting in Fall River, and had a good time. The tent was full, and several were standing. Good order prevailed while the people listened attentively to the evidences showing that we are near the end of the present dispensation. Brn. Boutell and Morrell love the work and are laboring faithfully in this meeting. M. G.

DISCUSSION ON TRINE IMMERSION.

After Bro. Thurman had spent three evenings in looking at the historical accounts, and found no evidence to show that trine baptism did not commence with Marcion, A. D. 130, he than turned to the Bible for proof that christians should be baptized three times. We think the result was an utter failure to find one text that favored his position. Indeed he did not introduce a single passage of Scripture which he claimed said a word about trine baptism, but we did find the inspired apostle expressly saying "there is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling, one Lord, one faith, ONE baptism, one God and Father of all." Eph. 4: 5-6. This language of the Bible is so plain, it leaves no room for controversy. So far as the baptism is concerned, it makes no difference whether one is baptized forward, backward, sidewise, standing on the head, or on the feet, only so that the person is wholly immersed in the element employed for baptism. The most natural way to bury people is with the face upward; so it is also the most natural, pleasant and easy way to baptize with the face upwards; but if any prefer to be baptized with face downwards, it would be as truly baptism in the one case as the other.

Bro. T. endeavored to prove trine immersion from an examination of the words bapto and baptizo, claiming that bapto signified one dip, and baptizo repeated dippings; but we found no reliable authority to sustain his position. Baptizo is derived from bapto; then, if the primary word signifies but one dip, how can its its derivative signify repeated dips? How draw more out of a word than it contains? It is true that some authors claim that the word baptizo, which is represented in English by the word immersion, denotes a "frequentative" action; that is, a double one. Both bapto and baptizo are used precisely alike to denote the burial of an object that was not raised again; but when used to signify baptism as a christian ordinance, it implies the double, or "frequentative action" of burying in the water, and taking out again, as it would be murder to purposely bury a person and leave him drowned in the water; but baptizo affords no evidence in favor of three baptisms. Such an idea is wholly foreign to the meaning of the word.

Taking Bro. T's position, that baptizo signifies to immerse "repeatedly," it proves too much, and spoils his theory. For example, apply it to his favorite passage of Scripture, Matt. 28: 19, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them" repeatedly [three times] "in the name of the Father;" baptizing them repeatedly [three times] in the name "of the Son;" baptizing them repeatedly [three times] in the name of the Holy Ghost;" thus making nine immersions in all.

Bro. T. claimed that trine immersion was anciently accomplished as follows: When the children of Israel were baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea, it was immersion No. 1. When John baptized them, it was immersion No. 2. And when Christ or the apostles, baptized them, it was immersion No. 3. But this contradicts his own theory again. For if baptizo signifies to "dip repeatedly," or three times, then they must have been baptized three times unto Moses, three times by John, and three times unto Christ; making nine immersions. For, according to Bro. T's. position, one immersion is not baptism; hence if John only immersed but once, it was a spurious baptism; and the same would be true of the baptism unto Moses, or by Paul. Will three spurious ones make one genuine?

Bro. T. further claims that those whom John baptized were in those who were baptized unto Moses, just as we were in Adam when he sinned; and thus all received one baptism in Moses' time; therefore John's baptism was the second, and into Christ made the third. This logic would make out that we all had one baptism unto Moses; and that we all had another baptism by John, because we were in John's disciples just as much as they were in those in Moses' time; and then by the same rule we would have another baptism into Christ by the apostles, and thus we have all had our three immersions, and do not now need to be baptized any more, because we were all baptized in our fathers. Why not repent in them also, and be saved because they were holy?

In reference to the meaning of bapto and baptizo, Dr. Carson says in his able work on baptism:

"Bapto and baptizo are considered by most writers as perfectly identical in their signification. On the other hand, there are writers on this subject, on both sides of the great question, who have assigned a difference of meaning, which is merely fanciful. Some have alleged that the termination zo makes baptizo a diminutive, but utterly without countenance from the practice of the language. Others have erred as far on the other side, and equally without authority make baptizo a frequentative. The termination zo has no such effect as either class of these writers suppose, and the history of the word, both in sacred and classical use, justifies no such notion. . . . The termination zo does not make a frequentative according to the practice of the language in other words and the word baptizo is not used as a frequentative by Greek writers. It could not become such, then, in an ordinance of Christ."

Dr. Carson goes on to say: "The learned Dr. Gale, in his Reflections on Mr. Wall's History of Infant Baptism, after giving us a copious list of quotations, in which bapto and baptizo are used, says: 'I think it is plain, from the instances already mentioned, that they are exactly the same as to signification.' As far as respects an increase or diminution of the action of the verb, I perfectly agree with the writer. That the one is more or less than the other, as to mode or frequency, is a perfectly groundless conceit."—Carson on Baptism, pp. 18, 19.

As Bro. T. claims and admits that bapto means but one dip, it is certain that baptizo does not mean any more, hence there is no proof found in the word baptizo to establish trine immersion. Where is the proof? Echo answers—Where? We are shut up to the heretic Marcion as its originator.

Dr. Conant, than whom there is no better authority, says:

"The grand idea expressed by this word is, to put under water (or other penetrable substance), so as entirely to immerse or submerge; that this act is always expressed in the literal application of the word, and is the basis of its metaphorical uses. This ground idea is expressed in English, in the various connections where the word occurs, by the terms (synonymous in in this ground element) to immerse, immerge, submerge, to dip, to plunge, to imbathe, to whelm."

He goes on to say: "From the earliest age of Greek literature down to its close, (a period of about two thousand years), not an example has been found, in which the word has any other meaning."—Notes on Matthew, p. 29.

Dr. Conant further says: "The verb baptizo, immergo, has in fact but one sole acceptation. It signifies, literally and always, to plunge. Baptism and immersion are, therefore, identical.—Notes on Matthew, p. 99.

With these facts before us, we are driven to the conclusion that there is no evidence in the Scriptures in favor of trine immersion. To speak of "one baptism by three immersions is the same as to say one immersion by three immersions; or one baptism by three baptisms. Such a position is simply absurd. Christ died once, was buried once, and was raised once. Baptism is to show our faith in the burial and resurrection of the whole human family. Trine immersion would be proper in case Christ was buried and raised three times; but if only ouce, then "one baptism," as the Scriptures teach (Eph. 4: 5), is the proper mode. Let us not forsake the old Bible way, as taught and practiced by Christ and the apostles—"ONE BAPTISM." Amen. M. G.

NEPHESH.

Editors:—Have you any work from which you can tell us through the Crisis, reliably, how many times the word nephesh occurs in the Bible; what and how many are its different renderings, in our E. V.; and so of ruach, psychee, pneuma, sheol, and hades; also of Zoe? If so, please do, and oblige

Yours truly, G. W. STETSON.

The Hebrew word nephesh occurs in the Old Testament seven hundred and fifty-two times, and is translated in forty-four different ways; its corresponding word psychee occurs in the Greek New Testament one hundred and five times, and has six different renderings. Ruach occurs four hundred times in the O. T., and is rendered in twenty-two ways; pneuma, its corresponding word in the Greek New Testament, three hundred and eighty-five times, and is translated in five ways. Sheol is found in the Old Testament sixty-five times. Hades, its corresponding word, is in the New Testament eleven times. Zoe occurs in the New New Testament one hundred and thirty-four times.

The following are the forty-four words used to translate nephesh, in the authorized version of the Old Testament: man, men, him, himself, he, me, myself, we, her, herself, thee, thyself, they, themselves, yourselves, any, one, lust, ghost, thing, his own, she will, mortally, will, tablets, the dead, fellows, discontented, greedy, breath, deadly, hearty, appetite, pleasure, fish, desire, mind, heart, creature, beast, body, life, person, soul.

The following words are employed to translate psychee: life, mind, you, heart, as, heartily.

The word ruach is represented by the following words: blast, quarters, anger, mind, courage, vain, side, breath, cool, tempest, spiritual, air, windy, whirlwind, smell, smelleth, smelled, understanding, accept, toucheth, wind, spirit.

Pneuma has the following renderings: ghost, life, spiritual, spiritually, wind. Sheol is translated, grave, hell, and pit. Hades is rendered, grave, and hell. Zoe is rendered, life, and lifetime. M. G.

THE BIBLE ECHO is a religious weekly, published by Kellaway and Co., 10 Warwick Lane, Paternoster Row, London, Eng. It is filled with such articles as will interest and instruct our readers. Bro. Kellaway is struggling hard to scatter the light and truth in England. Price of the Echo $3.00 a year. If any wish to subscribe, they can send their address and money to the Crisis Office, and we will forward it to them. We can supply the numbers for June, July and August, bound together, for 25 cts. each. Send and get them, and thus help Bro. Kellaway. M. G.

"GEOGNOSY" is the title of a valuable work, by David N. Lord, one of the most able writers in the country. The book is designed to show that there are no geological facts to prove that this world was not made in six literal days of twenty-four hours each. The book is now out of print. One or two have desired us to obtain the book for them. As we have not their address at hand, we would say we have just found two copies in an antiquarian book-store. Price, $1.25 post paid. To be had at the Crisis office. M. G.

REVEREND.—It is said the term "Reverend was never used by clergymen till 1657."

FINANCIAL ASPECT.

The financial outlook is gloomy. In the midst of plenty, it is hard times, and the prospect for the future becomes more and more threatening. How much we need Jesus here to set things right. The spirit of covetousness and pride have accomplished great things for Satan during the last few years. The progress downwards is so rapid that candid people are really alarmed at the sad state of things. They can see no bright spot in the future. All the efforts to reform the world by human associations have failed, and still the tide of iniquity keeps rising.

The following from the New York Mercantile Journal, for Oct. 10th, 1874, shows how business men look at the financial signs of the times: M. G.

"The past week has not developed any specially new feature in financial circles. We are sorry we must report that the outlook is not what it should be, nor what the people had a right to expect it would be, in view of the great blessings of a kind Providence as revealed in the abundant harvests of the past year. But the cupidity of some men, and the short-sightedness of others, have brought the industrial and commercial interests of the nation into an unfortunate condition which will cause great loss to the masses, bringing poverty and suffering upon many of our most worthy citizens.

It is said by some that the extravagance of the people is at the root of the evil; that they have been living too fast, and deserve to suffer; that railroad building has been pushed to such an extent as to be exceedingly damaging; and much more of the same sort of trash is talked.

Now, while we are not blind to the fact that in some instances labor has been unwisely applied to building railroads, the embarrassments of the hour do not arise from the fact of such misapplication. That many (the majority of the people) are inclined to live beyond their means of paying, we must admit; but this has not been the underlying cause of the trouble. The real cause is to be found in the fact that property owners have been enabled, by class legislation, to wring from those renting from them (in whichever of the thousand forms they did it) a higher rent by far than the use of such property was worth. To illustrate: while a man may own the house he lives in, free from all incumbrance, he is compelled, not only to pay heavy taxes, which are greatly increased by the high rate of interest paid on the town, county, State, and national debts, but on every pair of boots, every garment, or pound of food he purchases he must share the burden of the heavy rent of shop, store, money borrowed, etc., etc., paid by any and all those with whom he deals. Those who finally receive this heavy rent generally do nothing, but, as the saying is, they live within their means, although it is in the most expensive manner. They constitute the class who have most to say about the extravagance of the people from whom, like vampires, they draw their living.

It is not a pleasant thing for a man whose arduous labor (under these embarrassments for which he is not responsible, and which he cannot throw off) barely obtains the necessaries of his family, to be told when he is thrown out of work that he should have been more economical. The fact is, there should be a candid examination of the subject of the distribution of the products of labor, which would include the proper rent to be charged for the use of capital, so-called. That this distribution should be equitably made in the natural course of every day life is highly important to the future welfare of the country."

CHURCH POLITY.

We have been requested to publish the Principles of Church Polity, as prepared and approved by the Ministerial Conference at the Springfield camp-ground, last August. They are as follows:—

PRINCIPLES OF POLITY.

First Principle. The Scriptures are an infallible guide to the essentials of church order and discipline.

Second Principle. A christian church is a voluntary association of persons possessing repentance for sin, and faith in Jesus Christ, united together by a solemn covenant for the worship of God, and the celebration of religious ordinances.

Third Principle. To this assembly of professing christians, united by a covenant, and statedly meeting for church purposes, all executive, ecclesiastical, or church power is intrusted by Jesus Christ, the great Head of the church.

Fourth Principle. Every member of such church has equal essential rights, power, and privileges with every other; and the membership together, by a majority vote, have the right and duty of choosing all necessary officers, of admitting, dismissing, and disciplining their own members, and of transacting all other appropriate business of a christian church.

Fifth Principle. The Scriptures recognize but two orders of permanent church officers, viz., Elders or Presbyters (otherwise called Pastors, Overseers, or Bishops), and Deacons. There should be an entire, ecclesiastical equality among all christian Elders, Pastors, Overseers, or Bishops.

Sixth Principle. Each church is independent of all outward control, and answerable only to Christ, and is on a level of essential character with every other church on earth.

Seventh Principle. A fraternal fellowship is yet to be maintained between these churches in all cases, and so long as may be consistent with the principles of the New Testament.

Eighth Principle. A conference is an assemblage of ministers and delegates for the purpose of mutual encouragement and assistance in christian work. These conferences have no juridical authority, being simply advisory, suasory bodies.

SOCIAL OR QUARTERLY CONFERENCES.

Two or more sister churches may form and hold Quarterly Conferences, and upon such representation as they may see fit to adopt.

STATE, OR ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

The churches within any State, or convenient section, may hold annual conferences for the transaction of such business as may be delegated to them by the churches they represent consistent with the principles of this polity.

A GENERAL CONFERENCE may be held once in —— years. It shall be composed of the pastors of churches, and evangelists co-operating with them, and of delegates for churches. In this conference, each church shall be entitled to one delegate,—provided, that no person shall be a member of such General Conference, unless at the time he be a member of some recognized church.

CORRECTIONS.—In the article relating to our discussion on "Trine Immersion," instead of reading—"Neither of us were able to trace it back to A. D. 130,'" read, "back of A. D. 130." In the fiftieth Apostolical Canon, instead of "Do ye, therefore, a bishop"; read, "Do ye, therefore, O bishops." Instead of reading that "trine immersion prevailed most extensively" "between A. D. 498 and 633," read 398 and 633. M. G.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 13th, 1874, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

TRACTS.

L. BOUTELL.

In our tent and other meetings in new places, we find it indispensable to the advancement of the cause; to have tracts to distribute. It creates an interest to read, also an interest in the meeting, and gives opportunity to spread the truth and light, where no other means could reach the people.

In our recent tent-meetings, we have scattered many. We bid them welcome to the tracts, if they will read them; but the tract fund runs low. The means must come, or the tracts cannot be had. Now, shall we not forthwith have some liberal donations to the fund? We voted, at our last annnal meeting, to make an effort to increase the fund. The Lord's cause needs and demands it of us. We must have the little two-winged messengers to visit needy, lost man, and urge him to the fountain of living water, where he can quench his dying thirst and live forever. Now is the time to make the sacrifice for the purpose of saving souls. Bring your tithes into the store-house, and prove God, that he may pour you out a blessing.

O that we might have a revival from the Spirit of God that would reach our heads, hearts, and pockets, then there would be no lack of men or means, books or tracts, but a tidal wave would move this gospel into all the waste places, and songs of joy would be heard.

TENT-MEETING IN GRANVILLE.

The tent-meeting recently held in Granville, N. Y., was a success. It commenced Sept. 19th, as was appointed, and continued for ten days. The weather was fine during its session, which contributed largely to the comfort and prosperity of the meeting.

Granville is a quiet village, located on the Rutland and Washington R. R., a few miles from the State line dividing New York from Vermont. This town abounds largely in State quarries, making it an enterprising business community. Slate from this and adjoining towns in Vt. is sent all through the New England, Northern, and Middle States. Large slate stones taken from these quarries will split as fine as a block of pine from the "Pine-tree State," making a durable roofing for buildings.

The people of Granville treated us very kindly during our stay with them. Bro. H. H. Stoddard, who lives in the place, invited us to his house, and cared for us after a godly sort. Brethren from Poultney and Hebron were at the meeing a part of the time, and helped in the good work. Bro. D. B. Mackenzie, pastor of the M. E. church, was present a part of the time, and did all he could to make the meeting a success, both in preaching and exhorting the people to prepare to meet their God. Bro. M. invited us on the last day of the meeting (it being rainy) to hold our service in his church, granting us all the liberty that we could ask for to speak out plainly our views on the great truths due this generation. Bro. M. believes with us in the final destruction of all wicked men and devils at the coming of our Lord to this earth.

During the meeting, some for the first time started to serve the Lord; others who had been on the back-ground started anew. Many resolved to study the Scriptures more than they ever had before. The evidences of the near approach of the kingdom of God was the subject made especially prominent during the meeting. We trust there was an impression made on the minds of the people that will be productive of good.

A. W. SIBLEY.

FROM EASTERN MICHIGAN.

DEAR EDITORS:—Obtaining leave of absence from my circuit for a few weeks last spring, I held a series of meetings in the village of White Rock, which resulted in the organization of a church of sixteen members, chiefly heads of families. This is the only Christian church in the place. On my arrival, I found there were but two families that professed religion in the entire village of about two hundred inhabitants. Our meetings were largely attended, and characterized throughout by the most respectful attention; and best of all, the Lord Jesus stood by me by his sweet Spirit to bless the word spoken.

It will be remembered that this village, with several others on this shore, were completely destroyed by the great fire in Northern Michigan in 1871. Men, women, children, and animals, both tame and wild, fled to the lake to save their lives. In visiting from house to house during my stay with them, I listened to many a thrilling account of remarkable escapes, one of which I will relate. Said a mother, "After all hope was gone to save our home, I took one child in my arms and husband another, and started for the lake, half a mile distant. I had gone but a short distance, before I sank down exhausted, surrounded by fire, and gave up to die. Pressing my child to my bosom, I commended my life into the hands of God, and calmly awaited my fate. As husband could not help me, I begged of him to fly with the other two children, which he did, and, I thank the Lord, was saved. The fire burnt all around me, and even burnt through my clothes in one place, and yet I was saved. We all look upon it as a remarkable providence." After commending this dear family to God, I left their humble roof with my faith strengthened in the providential care of our dear Father in heaven.

Since our organization, additions have been made to the number, and we hope for still more blessed results, in gathering out those that shall be ready for the return of the Master, and escape the fire of the coming day. Yours affectionately,

Lexington. GEO. W. WRIGHT.

"AS YE WOULD, . . . SO DO." Matt. 7: 12.

Sr. Mary Ongley, since the death of her husband, Elder Wm. Ongley, has gone to Elmira, N. Y. Mrs. Mary A. Howard, 511 Main St., Elmira, N. Y., takes special care of her welfare, to whom all may send on Sister Ongley's account. She is infirm with age, exposure and toil in the Master's service, and in caring for her late husband's three years of suffering. She needs enough to pay her board, $10.00, and $5.00 for medicines, etc.,—$15.00 per month. This is the arrangement, as Sr. Howard informs me. The terms are very moderate, but need to be furnished before the twelfth of each month. The appeal belongs in this case. Amen. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." Jesus.

J. B. COOK.

THE "HISTORY of the Second Advent Message," by I. C. Wellcome, I consider to be an interesting and instructive work. It is a well arranged history, interspersed with incidents and sketches of men, and influences connected with the times from the commencement down through the Advent movement to near the present time. It will be read with interest by those who were connected with the early movement, as well as those who have come into the ranks since. Many, no doubt, will be encouraged by perusing its pages. God has stood by and blessed those that have held fast and proclaimed the glorious truths of the Bible. The book I think worthy of a wide circulation, not only among Advent believers, but among the nominal churches and the world. Scatter light and truth far and wide, and the Lord will bless. N. B. MCMURPHY.

Correspondence.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

Dearly Beloved in the Lord:—I am glad that we have a medium through which we can communicate our thoughts to each other, and thereby encourage one another in the narrow way that leads to eternal life. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." And, notwithstanding all their afflictions, they have peace and joy, that the world knoweth not of. It has been my blessed privilege of late to meet with the people of God in the tented grove, and enjoy their society a few days, and to hear their songs of praise, and listen to their testimonies. Although I could not engage in the services as in days that are past, yet I was with them in sentiment, and in spirit. Yes, blessed be God, God's children are one,—one in faith, and one in love. Paul said, "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." It is so blessed to feel this oneness, and to enjoy its power, and to get a foretaste of the joys that await us when this earth is renewed and brought back to its Eden-like beauty.

"My willing soul would stay
In such a frame as this."

Oh yes, my heart is full. The love of Christ cannot be told. Its depths are unfathomed. For such love,

"Let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break;
And all harmonious human tongues
The Savior's praises speak."

It is blessed to know that we are his, and that he is ours; to feel the warfare will soon be ended, deliverance given, and we saved in his kingdom, which knows no end. Here, disease invades our frame; there, the country will be healthy. Here, our joys are mixed with sorrow; there, there will be no sorrow. Here, is blight and mildew; but there, will be beauty unfading, joys untold.

"O hail, happy day!"

Well, dear ones, I hope to behold that city, where there is no need of the sun by day, or the candle by night;

"Where no death nor dismay,
Neither trouble nor sorrow,
Shall be felt for to-day,
Nor be feared for to-morrow."

The Psalmist said, "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord"; and I join in the number here, and hope to praise him in his kingdom, when the curse is removed, faith lost in sight, and prayer turned to praise. Hold on, ye suffering and sorrowing ones, ye weak ones in Christ, and ye strong ones. I am with you, and will try to meet you—

"Where no tears shall ever fall,
Nor heart be sad;
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. R. H. GRESHAM writes from Asheville, Buncombe county, N. C., Aug. 22nd, 1874:—"Dear brethren of the 'one faith,' 'one hope,' scattered through the United States, I send you christian greeting. Since I last addressed you through the World's Crisis, which appeared July 8th, I have been endeavoring earnestly to continue the good fight of faith, and have not shunned to stand in humble boldness for the truth at all suitable times and places. If I did not know to a certainty that I am on the scriptural highway that leads to endless life (if I continue faithful to the things I have learned), I might be discouraged. I have had letters from several brethren, but none of them have said to a certainty that they will (Providence permitting) come this way shortly and assist me in teaching the truth. I have some reason to expect that Bro. J. J. Smith of Long Island, Jackson Co., Ala., will arrive here about the 22nd of Sept., and tarry a few days."

SR. S. CONDELL (over eighty years of age) writes from Canada:—"Dear Editors, writers of the Crisis, I have long had it in contemplation to write a little for your valuable paper. You will please look over mistakes, considering my age—over eighty. I think the Crisis is steadily advancing in a deeper knowledge of divine truth as recorded in the holy oracles; the importance of which cannot be estimated for its sterling worth. It gave me pleasure to see the only one true baptism, as in the Holy Scriptures, so ably handled. It has been a long time needed. It is only a few, if I mistake not, who have even given it its due prominence. May we be enabled to add 'to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity'; 'for if these things be in' us 'and abound, they make' us that we 'shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, . . . for so an entrance shall be ministered unto' us 'abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.'"

Bro. R. W. Warner, St. Johnsbury, Vt., writes:—"The good Lord is still at work here. Two weeks ago last Saturday night, one man, over forty years old, started to serve the Lord; and the next night his mother started. The man used to threaten his wife if she did not keep away from our meetings he would fasten her out doors. But there is a happy change. He is doing very well, and growing rapidly. He is bold as a lion. Last Saturday one more young man started, and last night seven rose for prayers. I cut the following from the last week's Caledonian: 'Adventists hold meetings a portion of the time at the school-house in Paddock village. Last Sabbath Elder Shattuck, of Great Falls, baptized three persons in the Passumpsic river,—making sixteen immersions in this church this season.'"

Sr. Emma I. Crouse writes from Presque Isle, Me.:—"I do believe that Jesus is soon coming, and I want to be ready to meet him in peace, if I live till he come; and if I am called to sleep in the grave for a short time, I want to be sure that I shall 'awake in his likeness.' From childhood, I was taught to believe in the immortality of the soul, and eternal torment. But thank God, I have been led to embrace the truth; and though it is very unpopular, I am willing that all should know my faith, and that I am looking for the Lord. There are quite a number here who are looking for the coming of the Just One."

Bro. Jas. J. Edmonds writes from Freemansburg, Pa.:—"At a meeting held here Oct. 3d and 4th, Bro. I. N. Wilfong preached four able sermons, whereby many were convinced that we were advocating the Bible truths. In the afternoon, on the banks of the river Lehigh, Bro. W. delivered another sermon to about four hundred listeners, and after the sermon one came forward for baptism. The candidate received the gift of the Holy Spirit in a full measure. If we had more preaching, much good could be done."

Bro. N. Wheeler writes:—"I have just returned from the conference in P. Q. It was a success. The blessing of God rested upon the people; hence union prevailed."

Obituaries.

Hutchins. In East Boston, May 9th, Marcillus, son of Sr. Hutchins, aged twenty-five years.

Marcillus was naturally of a skeptical turn of mind, and not until his long last sickness was he led to believe in Christ as a Savior of men, and the Bible as the word of God. When he saw the principles of the gospel lived out by believers in Christ, he became convinced of the power of Bible religion, and gave his heart to the Lord. Two days before his death, a few of the brethren and sisters gathered in his sick room, and we celebrated the Lord's supper. It was a rich feast to him. As he drew near the dark river of death, he was calm, and at last fell asleep in Jesus, and as we consigned him to the grave, we felt no doubts but what we shall see him in the earth restored with the shining throng. His widowed mother wishes through us to thank those who so kindly remembered her in her sickness, and in the sickness and death of her son. C. G.

Daniels. In Lee, N. H., Feb. 27th, Sr. Margaret A. Daniels, aged sixty-five years.

Sr. Daniels was a devoted christian. She emphatically lived for others, but she has fallen asleep in Jesus. How sweet, how blessed, such a sleep! Bro. D. Churchill attended her funeral, and at her request, before her death, she was brought to Lawrence, Mass., and laid in the burial lot of Bro. Geo. H. Churchill, that he, like Abraham, had bought, that he might have a place to bury his dead. O how joyful the thought that when the Lord himself descends from heaven, no part of the renewed earth will ever be bought or sold for a place to bury the dead, for "there shall be no more death." Amen and Amen. C. G.

Gates. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Bridgewater, Vt., Oct. 2nd, 1874, Sister Hester A., wife of Franklin Gates, aged sixty-one years.

Our dear sister was sick only four days, with what seemed to be a sore in the head, which affected the brain and bronchial tubes. She leaves an afflicted husband, two sons, and five daughters to mourn her absence. She was a faithful wife, mother, and neighbor, and more than this, she was faithful to Christ and his service. She was ever at her post in the prayer meetings in storm or fair weather, and always had the spirit of praise to God. She embraced Christ by faith at the age of seventeen, and was buried with him by baptism, and has rejoiced in hope of the glory of God unto the end. Quietly, yet mournfully, we laid her away to rest from all temptation and sorrow until Michael shall stand up.

May the heart-stricken children of this mother, who have been the subjects of many prayers and tears, be ready to meet the King in his beauty when he shall come to destroy death, and him that had the power of death, which is the devil." Discourse delivered by the writer, from Heb. 13, last clause of the 5th verse. Allen Damon.

Weaver. In Erving, Mass., Sept. 27th, 1874, Eddie Mathews, son of D. J. and M. M. Weaver, aged five months and eleven days.

The little sufferer sleeps, and angels watch his sweet repose. Sweetly he'll sleep till the last loud trump shall sound; then, with all the sleeping ones, he will come up from his dusty bed, more bright and fair than mortal eyes ever beheld. Funeral services conducted by Eld. G. A. Streeter, assisted by Eld. Collar, who endeavored to speak words of comfort to the mourning circle.

"Sleep on, sweet babe, and take thy rest,
Till thou shalt wake among the blest."
L. B. Weaver.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, Oct. 14. Ex-empress Eugenie and her son have telegraphed thanks to the people of Ajaccio for having elected Prince Bonaparte to the Council General over Prince Napoleon. It is announced that Prince Napoleon will become a resident of the Department of Chasente Inferieure, one of the strongest of the Bonapartist departments, in order to become elected to the Council General and National Assembly.

Oct. 15. A Paris special states that Gens. Chauzy and Bourbaki have been summoned to consult with President McMahon, supposed to prepare for possible contingencies that may arise from the note of the Spanish Government relative to the conduct of France in favor of the Carlists.

A despatch from Berlin says that the Queen dowager of Bavaria has been converted to Catholicism, and will shortly enter a nunnery.

Santander, Oct. 5. Reports have reached here that a mutiny has broken out in the Carlist army at Durango, and Don Carlos was wounded by one of the mutineers. In official circles here it is stated that Don Carlos' wound is serious, the ball having penetrated the stomach.

Madrid, Oct. 5. A Carlist force 4000 strong, attacked the town of Vich, in Catalonia, and met with a decided repulse, suffering a heavy loss in killed and wounded.

Constantinople, Oct. 13. The Turkish town of Akhiolyi, containing five thousand inhabitants, and situated on the Gulf of Burghas, in the Black Sea, has been totally destroyed by a conflagration.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Oct. 5. Panama papers to the 26th ult. contain the follwing: Everything is quiet on the Isthmus. C. F. Arosemena has been chosen President of the Panama Legisture.

Advices from Guatemala confirm the reported earthquake on the 3d of September. The oscillations at Antigua were very violent from west to east, added to a vertical motion.

The people fled from the houses to the court-yards, and the air was filled with the screams of affrighted women. None could keep their balance without great difficulty. Houses and walls fell, and there were many shocks during the night.

Thirty-two lives were lost, and many houses will have to be taken down. At Guatemala, the capital, the shocks were only slightly felt, but the Indians report that three villages at the foot of the volcano del Fuego were destroyed.

The people are mostly living out of houses at Outigua and Guatemala, fearing a repetition of the earthquake. There is nothing new from the other points.

New York, Oct. 15. Later developments in regard to the Western railroad alliance are made public to-day.

This combination is, in brief, a union by which twenty-three large railroads, forming a complete chain of communication between New York and Omaha, bind themselves to adhere to uniform rates of tariff as fixed from time to time by seven commissioners selected from among the companies.

The alliance thus formed is one of the most stupendous in its magnitude that has ever existed in this or any other country. The number of roads included is larger than that composing the entire railway system of many States of Europe.

The actual paid up capital which the great alliance represents amounts to over $685,000,000. This total of more than half a billion dollars, represents the sinews of war with which this alliance offers battle to competing roads.

In Brief.

— Europe has at this moment 142 iron-clads fit to be placed in line of battle. Of these England owns 38; France, 28; Austria, Russia, Italy and Turkey, 15 each; Germany, 8; Spain, 7; Denmark, 3; Greece, 2. The tonnage of the German ships and the size of their guns are however, so uncommonly great that they are supposed to be more than a match for any navy, excepting those of England, Russia and France.

— The city of Rome contains 248,307 inhabitants, who occupy 11,950 apartments or houses. There is room for more, as 890 apartments are standing vacant.

— It is computed that within the last sixty years 25,000 Jews have been converted to Christianity. Missionaries are now welcome in Jerusalem.

— When a person has to stand up in a Paris horse car no fare is collected by the driver.

— The first Universalist sermon ever preached in America was delivered by John Murray, at Cranberry Inlet, N. J., on Sept. 30, 1770.

— Twenty-one foreign Governments have thus far accepted the invitation to participate in the Centennial at Philadelphia.

— There are 940 Young Men's Christian Associations in this country, and forty-eight of them have buildings to the value of two million dollars.

Western Conference.—A General Religious Conference for the promotion of piety among believers, and conversion of unbelievers, will be held in the Green Street Tabernacle, Chicago, Ill., commencing on Wednesday, Oct. 21st, at 7½ p. m., and continuing over the following Lord's day. It is expected that Elds. Miles Grant, S. G. Mathewson, and John Couch, from the East, will attend this meeting. We invite all to attend who can come, from far and near, and we hope all who come will bring with them a holy zeal for God and Jesus Christ. We specially invite brethren and sisters in the west to come up to this feast, and help in the cause of Christ. Let there be a general rally. For the church, Frank Burr, Pastor.

Protracted Meeting.—The Lord willing, a protracted meeting will be held at the meeting-house in Porter Village, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 12th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands. It is expected that Brethren E. S. Moulton, and J. T. Jordan, will be present and assist in carrying on the work. Come, brothers, come, sisters, come one and all. Wm. T. Sawyer.

Where shall our New Hampshire State Conference be held? The time has been set for the conference to convene, but no place fixed to hold it. If there is a church within the limits of the State that is unanimous in requesting the conference with them, let them inform the Secretary, C. H. Fletcher, at once, that the appointment and arrangements may be published. Otherwise, we shall be under the necessity of indefinitely postponing the meeting. A. Ross, President.
C. H. Fletcher, Sec.

A series of meetings will be held in Depot Hall, Steep Falls, Me., commencing Wednesday evening, Nov. 11th, at 7.30 o'clock, and continue over the following Sunday. Eld. B. S. Emery and J. Hill are expected to be present and preach the gospel. Come all who can, and lend us a helping hand. We need your assistance.
C. H. Sweet.

I have a tent fifty feet in diameter, only used this season, and is in first rate order. I will sell low to go south, or I will let competent brethren have it to use this winter. Some good young men say they will go with others. Let me hear from any interested in the above missionary work. Direct H. B. Sevey, Mt. Vernon, Me.

Conference at Melvin Village, N. H.—The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Melvin Village, commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 22d, to hold over the following Sabbath. Brn. E. A. Stockman, J. Parsons, and D. Churchill are expected to preach the word. A generous invitation is extended to all. T. W. Piper.

The first session of the Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will meet with the church at Brunswick (Gardiner school-house), Thursday, Oct. 22d, to hold over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, to work for the Lord and to save sinners. H. D. Reed, President.
H. S. Mitchell, Secretary.

To the Brethren in Kansas.—I would respectfully call your attention to the following proposition.

Resolved, That the churches throughout this State of Kansas call a special conference to meet on or about the 23d of Oct., 1874 to be held where there is a body of believers, and as near central among the churches now organized as circumstances will admit of. That the meeting be composed of ministers of the Kansas Advent Christian Conference, and delegates from the different churches; also that all lovers of the cause throughout the State be invited to attend.

The object of this meeting to be for the special benefit, and cheering up of all those interested in the proclamation of Bible truths, and to devise plans for a more vigorous fall and winter campaign. That the meeting commence on Friday, and continue over the following Sabbath.

Now I simply make the above proposition as one among the many interested in the cause of truth and its general prosperity. And I desire that all who read this that are interested, immediately write to me, giving their opinion in full. Also that the churches who desire the meeting to be held with them, and are willing to feed the hungry ones during the meeting, mention it in their letter. Respectfully, V. F. Hunt, Box 104, Wellington, Sumner Co., Kansas.

The Delaware District A. C. Conference is hereby called to meet and hold its second semi-annual session at the Second Advent Christian Hall, on Seventh street, below Poplar, Philadelphia, Pa., commencing Friday evening, Nov. 13th, and continue over the Sabbath. This conference embraces the District of Columbia, Delaware, New Jersey, and Eastern Pennsylvania. It is earnestly hoped that every church sympathizing with us will be represented, either by letter or delegates. Every church or religious body co-operating with this conference, is entitled to one delegate, and an additional delegate for every ten members. All letters of correspondence for the conference can be addressed to Edwin King, 1716 Francis Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
A. G. Jayne, President.
Edwin King, Secretary.

The next Maine Central Quarterly Meeting will be held at Belgrade Mills, commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 22d, and continue over the following Sunday. A general invitation is given to brethren and sisters to unite with us in preparing a people for the coming of Jesus. Homes provided for all. Call on Charles Austin, Wm. Hersom, C. H. Kelley, Edwin J. Farnham, F. E. Blaisdell, and others. Per order, H. B. Sevey.

Dearly Beloved, the Mass. Mission Tent is in the field. We have no funds in the treasury. Shall it stop, while the calls are being made upon us, for lack of means? L. Boutell.

To Vermonters.—At our annual conference at Bethel, the State Committee were urged to carry the gospel of the kingdom into every new field which opened a door, and especially to offer a week of labor for any five dollars pledged by an isolated brother or sister living in a new field. This was to encourage individual effort and sacrifice on the part of the isolated. We want to hear immediately from those places where labors are desired, that we may make due arrangements to meet the demands. If you are too poor to raise five dollars, and yet the door is open for a meeting, write us just the same as though you raised the money. Write to me at Waterbury, Vt., or to A. A. Hoyt, Plainfield, Vt. Write full particulars of circumstances, people, time, and place. Write soon.
H. F. Carpenter, President of Conference.

Hoosick Valley Conference.—The annual meeting of the Hoosick Valley Adv. Chris. Conference will be held with the church in Hoosick, N. Y., commencing Oct. 21st, 1874, and continue over the following Sunday.

Let every church and locality within the bounds of this Conference be represented at this meeting by delegates duly appointed. We hope to see a large gathering of the friends of Jesus at this meeting. The church at Hoosick have kindly invited us to hold this annual session with them, and as ever they will provide for and entertain at their homes all who come. Come therefore to this annual feast. Come from the hill top and valley, from the cities and the rural districts. Let us go to Hoosick and worship the God of our fathers in spirit and in truth; go to impart good and get good. Let us have this year less form, and more devotion; less debate, and more of Christ; less strife, and more peace; less of the external, and more of the internal; that whatsoever is done may be done to the glory of God.

Purchase tickets at the R. R. stations for Hoosick Corners, and there will be teams on the arrival of the train from Adams at one and half-past two p. m. from Troy, each day of the Conference, free of charge. A. W. Sibley, President.

There will be a meeting of days at Bonny Eagle, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 22nd, at seven o'clock, and holding over the following Sabbath. A general invitation is given to all the friends to come and worship with us. It is expected that preaching brethren will be present to preach the word. In behalf of the church,
Jesse Gay.

The Lord willing, we will commence a meeting at Woodhull, Steuben Co., N. Y., Oct. 29th, and continue over the following Sunday. Hope the brethren and sisters will pray for us, that good may be done in the name of the Lord. A general invitation is given to attend.
John T. Ongley.
E. H. Eggleston.

J. G. Smith and J. W. White will preach in Farmington, N. H., two Sundays in each month, as long as it seems duty. J. G. Smith the first, and J. W. White the third.

P. S. As there is an appointment for the first Sunday in Nov., J. G. Smith will be there the second. Will preachers coming to Farmington please notice this arrangement. J. G. Smith.

Protracted Meeting.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting held in Salisbury, N. H., at the Union meeting-house, commencing Friday, Nov. 27th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands.
C. H. Fletcher.
D. F. Leavitt.

The Second Quarterly Meeting for the Eastern District of Wisconsin A. C. Conference will be held with the church at Fairfield, Sauk Co., Wis., commencing in the evening of Oct. 23d, and holding over the Lord's day. Every church in the district is requested to send one or more delegates. We hope to see a large gathering. Come in the name of the Lord, and to work for him.
E. P. Graves.

The Ministerial Committee having been called to investigate difficulties at Rochester Village, N. H., hereby recommend that all ministers who are members of the New Hampshire Conference decline to minister to either party until a full investigation can be had, or until the next session of the conference. E. A. Stockman.

I expect, if the Lord will, to visit Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Mass., and perhaps other States, the coming winter. Any one wishing an appointment, or protracted meeting for their place, please drop me a line on a postal card, with a one cent stamp on it, to Richmond, P. Q., Box 31, and I will endeavor to supply them as far as I can. Our work is almost done, and soon the Lord will cut it short in righteousness. F. M. Drake.

Having supplied the church in East Concord one half of the time during the past year, I intend closing my labors with them on the first Sunday in Nov. After which time I shall be at liberty to labor in places as the way opens.
Enoch Morrill, South Deerfield, N. H.

Notice.—As I expect my labors in this section will soon close, I would say I shall be ready to go and preach "the gospel of the kingdom" anywhere, as the Lord may open the way, the coming fall and winter. Any wishing to correspond with me can direct for the present to A. P. Moore, Linden, Genesee Co., N. Y.

To Preaching Brethren.

Those wishing to preach in Manchester, N. H., please correspond with Bro. Henry J. Hicks.

THAT BOOK,
"History of the Second Advent Message, Doctrine and People."

This work is now ready for all. It contains the history of the rise and progress of the proclamation of the Second Advent of Christ, near at hand, from A. D. 1820 to the present time, in America, Europe, Asia, and Africa; with sketches of the great reformations accompanying it; of many of the chief pioneers associated with it; the great opposers, and their futile efforts to defeat the work. Records of its rapid progress, and of many of the remarkable manifestations of God's guiding hand in the work. Discussions, lectures, sermons, dialogues, and chief points of doctrine advocated by the various classes of believers in the Lord's soon coming.

Records and tables of the prophetic times of Daniel and John, as advocated by the chief Protestant writers, all of whom terminate the periods between 1836 and 1880. A sketch of Luther and his times, compared with ours. His portrait, and portraits of twenty Second Advent pioneers, with discourses on Daniel 2nd, 7th and 8th chapters, illustrated with fine wood cuts, with much other valuable matter.

Our subscribers will be supplied at prices agreed on when orders with cash (and 20 cts. for postage) are received. All who wish to buy the work will be supplied, postpaid, at $3.50. As our object is not to make money, but to have this message and its history go as far and as cheap as possible, we put it as low as we can. We have endeavored to make it a book that all who are really associated in this great movement will buy, and that real inquirers will think best to buy. The book contains 711 octavo pages, neatly bound in cloth, gilt side.
I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

A NEW BOOK.
"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."
An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"
BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.
Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express. Ag't.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.
BY HENRY CONSTABLE, A. M.

We have this valuable work in its unabridged form of 330 pages, neatly bound in cloth, for sale. Price $1.00; postage, 16 cts.

WHO SHALL BE THERE?

E. E. MILES.

Who shall walk the golden pavements
  Of that city built on high?
View with rapture Eden's glories,
  Never seen by mortal eye?
Who shall wear the crown of glory?
  Wave on high the victor's palm?
Who shall see the King of beauty,
  And unite in life's sweet psalm?

Who shall walk by life's cool river?
  Who shall meet the loved again,
And united part, no never?
  Never feel one throb of pain.
Who shall be where sin and sorrow
  Are forever passed away;
Where shall dawn no sad to-morrow,
  But shall reign an endless day?

Tell me, shall the proud and haughty,
  Shall the rich and vain be there?
Can none without gold to offer,
  In that city have a share?
Can no poor one, sad and weary,
  Who in anguish sighs for rest,
Ever hope to reign immortal
  In that land so fair and blest?

Lo! the answer cometh to me,
  "Blessed are the pure in heart";
All good things the meek inherit,
  In Christ's kingdom have a part.
Poor and lowly, though the owner,
  And despised by rich and great,
They can claim far greater riches
  Than the proudest man's estate.

Farnumsville, Mass.

WHO DID IT?

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

(Concluded.)

I will now give some historical facts to prove that the object of king Artaxerxes, in assisting Ezra, was because of an awful plague then raging in his empire; and give dates that establish the fact that this pestilence was visited upon Judea, and the Persian empire, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes king of Persia. This plague broke out in the first year of the Peloponesian war, B. C. 431. Of the date of this war there is no dispute among historians or chronologers. This war was between the Athenians and Lacedemonians. Both parties sent their ambassadors to king Artaxerxes to engage him on their side. About the same time, says Prideaux, "there broke out a most grievous pestilence, which did overrun a great part of the world. It first began in Ethiopia; from thence it came into Lybia and Egypt; and from Egypt it invaded Judea, Phœnicia, and Syria; and from those parts it spread itself through the whole Persian empire; from thence it passed into Greece, . . . destroying a great number of people." There was at this time an eminent physician residing at Athens, named Hippocrates; and Artaxerxes sent for him before he went to Athens, with the promise of great rewards, to come into Persia during this plague to cure those that were infected with it in his armies. Upon Hippocrates refusing to comply with the request of Artaxerxes, the king, "in the highest transports of rage, sent to the city of Cos, the native place of Hippocrates, and where he was at that time; commanding them to deliver up to him that insolent wretch," and threatened them with the destruction of their city and island in case they refused to comply. "However the inhabitants of Cos were not under the least terror. They made answer, that the menaces of Darius and Xerxes had not been able in former times to prevail with them . . . to obey their orders; that Artaxerxes' threats would be equally impotent," let the consequences be what they might.

I give these quotations from Rollin and Prideaux, to show that this Artaxerxes was successor from Darius and Xerxes, and therefore the same Artaxerxes whose record is in the seventh chapter of Ezra. Hippocrates went to Athens the second year of the Peloponesian war to attend the sick, as the plague had now reached Greece, and his services were needed among his countrymen. Now it is evident, from these historical facts and dates, that the seventh year of Artaxerxes corresponded with the time that this plague raged in the Persian empire. From the expression by the king to Ezra, chap. 7:23,—"For why should there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons?" This explains the reason of the speed that the king required of Ezra in making preparations to offer sacrifices on the altar in Jerusalem; i. e., to turn away the wrath of God, and stay this awful plague that was so terribly ravaging the Persian empire. Now as this plague raged in Persia in the time of Artaxerxes, and in the first year of the Peloponesian war, which was in B. C. 431; and as we have proved that this Artaxerxes must be the one whose record is in the seventh chapter of Ezra; and that this plague occurred in the seventh year of his reign; it is evident by the date, and by the facts stated in said chapter, that they cannot correspond with the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, to fulfill Dan. 9:25.

That we are correct in placing the seventh of Artaxerxes in B. C. 431, will again appear by its exact harmony with other events and dates in prophecy connected with this same king. In the thirty-second year of this king, the "wall" of Jerusalem was finished and dedicated; and as Christ was prophesied to be cut off after sixty-two weeks from this period, or date; and as facts show that he was cut off in A. D. 30, the sixty-two weeks, or 434 years, dated back from A. D. 30, carries us to B. C. 406, as the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes' reign. Now deduct the seventh year from his thirty-second, and we have the number 25. Add this to B. C. 406, and we have 431 as the seventh of Artaxerxes. Also in the twelfth year of the same king, he signed the death warrant of the whole Jewish nation, which synchronizes with B. C. 426, the twelfth year, being five years later than the seventh, therefore added to 426, gives us 431 again as the seventh year of Artaxerxes. Now, as we have proved, there is nothing in the language of Scripture, in the seventh chapter of Ezra, that intimates any such thing as restoring and building Jerusalem; for Jerusalem and the temple were at this time already built; this fact Prideaux himself acknowledges; and he no doubt would have accepted the decree of Cyrus as the only decree to fulfill Dan. 9:25, had he not supposed that the chronology of the Bible for the first of Cyrus, based on the canon of Ptolemy, was strictly reliable. But even accepting this false chronology, there was no way to make out his case, but by making a figure of speech of prophetic statements; i. e., that by the phrase "restore and build Jerusalem" did not mean, restore the captive Jews from Babylon and build Jerusalem literally; but simply meant a civil and ecclesiastical reformation among the Jews at Jerusalem! But we will let Prideaux speak in his own words. He says:—

"And that this figurative interpretation of the word, and none other, must be the true meaning of them, appears from hence, that they cannot be understood in a literal sense; for, if they are so to be understood, they can be applicable to no other restoring and rebuilding of Jerusalem, than that which was decreed and commanded by Cyrus at the release of the captivity; for this prophecy was revealed to Daniel before this release, and therefore, when it is said therein that the epocha of these weeks was to begin from the going forth of the commandment, or decree, to restore and build Jerusalem, of what decree can it be more properly understood, than of that which should first be granted next after this prophecy for that purpose, and by virtue whereof this city was accordingly rebuilt, after its having been destroyed by the Babylonians, and was again repeopled and inhabited by the same people who had been its former inhabitants? And that this was done by virtue of Cyrus' decree, appears from many passages of Scripture. We are told in Isa. 44:28, that it was Cyrus that should say 'to Jerusalem, Be thou built, and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid.' And again (45:13), it is said of the same Cyrus that God 'would raise him up, and direct him, that he should build this city, and release his captives'; where it is to be observed that he that released God's captives, and laid the foundation of the temple, was to be the person that was to rebuild Jerusalem; so that he is not only by name, but also by this character and description, plainly pointed out to be the person that was to do this work. For that Cyrus did release the captive Jews, who were God's people, and that he did no more than lay the foundation of the temple (for it was not perfected till in an after reign), is well known. And therefore, according to these passages of Holy Scripture, it must be he only that did restore and rebuild Jerusalem. And so, accordingly, it was done by virtue of the decree which he granted for the return of the Jews thither; for can it be imagined that Cyrus should grant license for the Jews to return to Jerusalem, and rebuild the temple there, without allowing them to rebuild that city also? Ezra plainly tells us, that as soon as the Jews were returned into Judea, by virtue of Cyrus' decree, they dispersed themselves into the several cities to which they belonged, and again dwelt in them; and can it be thought that they did not then again rebuild them? For without rebuilding of them, how could they dwell in them? And if those who belonged to the other cities of Judah rebuilt and dwelt in them again, how can we think that those who belonged to Jerusalem did not do the same, and that, especially since it was the metropolis of the whole nation, the place where the temple stood, where all went up continually to worship, and where three times a year every male appeared before the Lord at the solemn festivals, and where the governor dwelt, where the council sat, and all matters of judgment were ultimately decided?

"The matter is beyond all dispute, that when the Jews on their return rebuilt their other cities, they must then most certainly have rebuilt Jerusalem also. The great concourse, which the reasons I have mentioned constantly drew thither, must have necessitated this, had there been no other inducement for it. It is easier to suppose all the rest of the cities of Judah to have been left still in their rubbish, after the return of the Jews from their captivity, than that this city alone should remain unbuilt. The rebuilding of it is not indeed expressly included in the commission of Cyrus. As we have it recorded in the first chapter of Ezra, that only gives license 'to the Jews to return into Judea, and there rebuild the house of God which is in Jerusalem.' But the license to rebuild the house of God, which is in Jerusalem, must either imply a license to rebuild Jerusalem also, or else (which seems most probable) Ezra gives us in the place mentioned only an abstract of the chief things granted by that license, and not a recital of the whole, in which most likely many other things, and among them the rebuilding of Jerusalem, and the other cities of Judah, might be fully and expressly mentioned; for it is certain, by virtue of that license, they had power so to do, and accordingly executed it. For the complaint of the neighboring nations to the Persian court against them that were returned was, that 'they builded Jerusalen, that rebellious and bad city, and had set up the walls thereof, and joined the foundations of it'; and the order from Artaxerxes (so the Magian who then reigned called himself) was, 'to cause the Jews to cease, that this city be not builded.' However, from the first of Cyrus till the time of this order, fourteen years having elapsed, the rebuilding of Jerusalem had by this time gone a great way; for, within two years after, we find the prophet Haggai complaining of the Jews at Jerusalem, 'that they dwelt in ceiled houses, while they let the house of God lie waste.' From all this, it plainly appears that Jerusalem, after having been destroyed by the Babylonians, was again rebuilt, by virtue of the decree which Cyrus granted, in the first year of his reign, for the release and restoration of the Jews. And, therefore, if these words of the prophecy, 'to restore and build Jerusalem,' are to be understood in a literal sense, they can be understood of no other restoring and building of that city, than that which was accomplished by virtue of that decree."

We give this long quotation from Prideaux in confirmation of several points in the argument, in verification of the truth. 1. Prideaux's argument in confirmation of the fact that, if the literal statement of the prophecy, "to restore and build Jerusalem," is to be received as the meaning, then it refers to the decree of Cyrus, and that only; as he was the only king that restored the Jews from their captivity. 2. His argument proves that Jerusalem itself was rebuilt by virtue of said decree. 3. That God had declared by the mouth of Isaiah that Cyrus should build Jerusalem, and let his captives go. After Prideaux had set forth the literal view in this strong light, he rejects it as being true, because he saw no way to reconcile it with the chronology of the first of Cyrus, as based upon the canon of Ptolemy.

Now, in view of the honor of God, we ask all candid Bible students, Can you set aside the literal declarations of all these prophetic statements, with their literal fulfillment, and accept of the prophecies and their fulfillment as being figurative? If so, you are throwing away all argument that proves that Christ was literally predicted to come into the world, and all the scriptural and historical evidence that he did so come, or was literally born of the Virgin Mary, and that he literally died on the cross at Calvary, and was literally buried, and literally rose from the dead, and literally ascended into heaven, and that he will literally come again the second time. Beware, my brethren, of setting forth any FIGURATIVE fulfillment of the prophecies as being a fulfillment of the word of God. Now, as Prideaux gives us an irrefutable argument for the literal application of the prophecies under consideration (although he rejects it on insufficient grounds), shall we also compromise the truth, in order to sustain the traditions of men? especially when, as in the present case, a defective chronology is all that is in the way?

Now as this defect can be made so clearly to appear, who that loves the truth will not open their eyes and behold it shining in its effulgent splendor? Sha the false teachings of men, and their traditions, that we profess to ignore, still hold us under their power and sway, while the household are famishing for meat in due season? I beseech of you, my brethren, let not prepossession nor prejudice so influence your mind that you shall fail to discover the truth, in any of its parts; therefore, while you are careful to reject the dogmas of men, be careful that no part of the word of life go with it.

The household need meat in due season. The time has come when every word of God, bearing on our present condition and prospects, should be brought forth to the rescue, to help the faint, the weak, and those now almost discouraged. We need something more, as a people, at the present time.

"The serpent's brood increases,
  The powers of hell grow bold;
The conflict thickens, faith is low,
  And love is waxing cold."

Should not the church then cry—

"How long, O Lord, our God,
  Holy and true and good,
Wilt thou not judge thy suffering church,
  Her sighs and tears and blood?"

We need a more distinct and definite understanding of the sure word of prophecy and chronology, as revealed in the Sacred Scriptures. Therefore, while we are situated, in some respects, as the captive Jews were in Babylon, after the city had been taken, and Belshazzar the king slain, and Darius the Median had taken the kingdom, the Jews still in captivity after they supposed the seventy years were expired; may a second Daniel be found, or some servant of God, who by fasting and prayer may discover the true light on prophetic chronology.

DOES MAN DIE?

A. F. MOORE, M. D.

(Concluded.)

Men say with Plato that our desires, opinions, and longings for immortality, are good evidence that man, the possessor of those affections of the mind, will realize the fruition of his desires and hopes, and the truth of his opinions; which is like supposing that when a child in its cradle desires and longs to possess the moon, and has an opinion that for a little crying its father will cause the said luminary to be given it for a plaything, it is to be called good evidence that the father will do so. Desires, opinions, hopes or longings, are no evidence that the possessor of them will be satisfied with regard to them, else why so many disappointments in this world; why so many shattered frames and maniacal minds, on account of ruined prospects and blighted hopes? Surely, if the above orthodox reasoning upon the evidences of natural, inherent immortality is correct, the brave man need never despair of winning the fair lady. He has only to desire her, and she must by force of circumstances become his wife. Alas for the theory! Some men's desires have proved unavailing, and the desire for immortality, for something beyond death, will prove unavailing, unless those who desire it take the right method to obtain this great gift.

It was the devil who said, "Ye shall not surely die," and Christ says the devil was a "liar, and the father of it," evidently from the beginning of the world, or the time when he lied to Eve about dying; for it is hinted (Jude 6th) that in the beginning of his existence, he had a better estate than that of a liar. But however that may be, it is pretty certain that he has made the world believe his lie down to the present time, and people sing about a "never-dying soul to save," and say, "It is not death to die," etc. "Never-dying soul," "immortal soul," etc., are not found in the Bible, nor does it design to convey that idea to God's people.

But let us look a little further at man's nature. Matter, and the forces derived from it, make up the sum total of man, and what physiologists call reflex action suffices to explain mental phenomena. For instance, if a frog's brain be taken from his head, he will still, for a certain length of time, continue to push from him with his claw the pin which pricks him, the sensation, being reflected through the spinal cord to the leg, causes it to act, even when there is no brain to give him conscious knowledge of the pain. The brain is nothing but an enlarged and complicated spinal cord, consisting of cells much like those of a galvanic battery, according to Gray the standard authority in anatomy; and they are used for the same purpose; and electricity will supply the place of the impulse which they produce, and even restore the brain to activity when its action has ceased, as was done in one instance after the sheriff's surgeon had pronounced the man to be "dead, dead, DEAD!" See Medical Investigator, Vol. 9. External objects act upon the brain the same as upon the spinal cord. One sees certain objects and they excite certain emotions. So with hearing and feeling. These emotions are unavoidable. The drunkard sees the fluid he loves so well, or hears conversation concerning it, and the influence is irresistible; he must drink. He has formed the habit of drinking, and habit comes from repetition. But repitition strengthens electrical currents. Indeed, there is a certain battery which at first is weak as a child's brain, but after standing in working order for a certain length of time, the current becomes strong, and this by repeatedly flowing in the same course. So, nervous impulses are strengthened by repitition or habit, and that which will have no effect upon a man at all at first, becomes an irresistible power over him at last. A strong or weak will depends upon the size of the brain, as also the strength of the electrical current depends upon the size of the battery, or rather the size of the cells.

By will is meant force of character, rather than "mulishness." Memory is but the recalling of former sensations or impressions, and none can recall every fact at will, but by aid of certain other sensations or impressions. As no one can create or conceive of anything totally unlike what he has seen, so we are not the arbiters of our own thoughts. We never remember a scene but we see it over again more or less clearly defined on the canvas of the mind's eye. We do not remember the old familiar sounds, except we seem to hear them in imagination.

The philosophy of this all is the tendency of electrical or nervous currents to take the same old circuit in which they have passed before; and the surplus nervous force of the system tends to tread in the old paths and produce the same pictures on the retina, or the same sounds in the ear, which have been seen and heard before. So the Epicure tastes in advance the viands upon his table, and his very mouth waters; for the gustatory nerve is traversed by little galvanic currents of nervous fluid, which produce the sensation of taste. If these things are not so, why cannot this mind, which is said to be so independent of matter, act for itself, and control these tastes and the propensities produced by them? On the contrary, nothing but the power of God's Holy Spirit is sufficient to change a man's desires and longings many times.

But by changing a man's physical organization, antidoting the force of habit, and destroying the ruts in which these nervous forces have run, God "changes our hearts," as it is said, and we are new creatures. Sometimes, drugs are sufficient to make some of these changes. Now as to proof of these statements, I will add that by stimulating certain nerves, or the parts of the brain from which they arise, certain sensations and their resulting propensities ensue. And when certain diseased states are found, which are accompanied with perverted mental operations, the mind may be reformed by regulating the nourishment or stimulus afforded to certain nerves. Strange as it may seem, a malicious disposition may be cured by the use of certain drugs. Whoever heard of a dyspeptic who had a good, christian disposition? Hence the quality of the mind must depend upon the quality of the organization which produces it. How beautiful is the idea, when we come to understand it, of the nature of man and the plan of salvation.

Man was made with a mental phenomenon which seems as much an entity as does electricity, and when the organization which produces it is impaired or ruined, it is perverted, or ceases to be the same, as electricity is weakened or its waves of motion cease, when the battery is injured. God, knowing these facts, of course, tells poor fallen man that if he will strive to be as near right as may be, that is, avoid those things which will injure him, and cleave to those which will benefit him, that he will give him another life, in which he shall be a "new creature." His nature shall be "born again," and made perfect, and his organization shall be such as shall produce right mental manifestation, and then he shall not be shut out from the tree of life any more, but shall have access to it, and shall not die any more. "And neither can they die any more."

When the first mental philosophers of the age, such as Maudsley and others, accept such views in whole or in "part," when the views are found to harmonize and explain God's word; when all the rules of analogy uphold and verify them, and no scientific facts disprove them, it is hardly the time for people to ignore them, because they were taught differently in their childhood. The writer well remembers how, when a boy, he used to wonder why Lazarus, whom Christ raised from the dead, had nothing to say about heaven, when his soul had come back, and he was alive again; and also where the soul was when people were apparently drowned, and before they were brought back to life; and it has been almost a life study to find out. It was a very easy task when he came to read the Bible as he would any other book; and it was then a pleasure to trace the harmony between our knowledge of God's works and science, as it is called, and his words which he revealed to man.

One Professor of Anatomy, under whom the writer studied, suffered great distress of mind because his knowledge of the anatomy and physiology of the human frame, together with other facts of science, drove him to the same position advocated in this essay; and he, being a Presbyterian, felt himself guilty of heresy. Whether he has since become satisfied of its harmony with the Scriptures, deponent knoweth not. Yet, no body of learned men were ever more interested since Christ preached to the Hebrew doctors, than were the faculty of the Medical College, when he delivered, by request, a lecture before them, giving his views of the anatomy and physiology of the brain. I would like to give names, but have no authority to do so.

A Professor of Physiological Chemistry, after considerable discussion with the writer, assented to the proposition, that "Life is Motion." That is, that "Nerve Force" is not a separate entity, or soul, but vibrations similar to, and subject to the same laws as electricity, light, heat, and sound. We even say a person is lively when he is active. If these propositions are true, then, when the organism which sets these waves or vibrations of nerve force in motion ceases to perform its function, the waves cease to flow, and vitality is at an end.

As the galvanic current assimilates the silver to the baser metal, and gives it a beautiful shining covering; so does the nervous current originating in the brain and spinal cord, select and assimilate various substances, and fit them to their places in the human frame, and continue its form in that of its Maker. But when, through feebleness, this power ceases to act, the ever ready oxygen, greedy for gain, takes to itself the task of undoing the work of long years of industry, rifles the precious casket of all that is good, and leaves the rest to vanish in the air, or moulder in the ground, an unsightly thing, which men shun to look upon. And so man returns to dust, but his spirit (breath) to God who gave it.

RELIGION AND BUSINESS.

This precept of holy writ, that we "be not slothful in business," lays it stress upon every son and daughter of Adam, and especially upon every redeemed child of God. And the full command: "Be not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," shows there is no discord between business and religion; but on the contrary, that a man may be devoted to his business, diligent and active therein, and thereby serve the Lord. It is a proof that men may be honest, honorable, and Christ-like in their daily calling; and the statement in another portion of the Bible, "Seest thou a man diligent in business, he shall stand before kings," shows us religion and success in business are in harmony.

It is therefore weak and useless for men to say they cannot succeed unless they adopt the doubtful and even underhanded methods of their unscrupulous competitors. To be honorable, manly, and true in all one's business dealings is to gain the confidence of the community, and with such a man they will prefer to do business. It is a man's most sure and reliable capital, even as Solomon has said: "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." Unscrupulous methods may sometimes bring a more rapid success; but it is like the blazing, brilliant flower that springs up quickly out of its thin soil on the rock—lacking the depth and strength of earth—it is sure to be short-lived. Better in every respect to be honorable and wait if need be, a little longer for a rich and more permanent success.

But not only is business success in harmony with religion, but, more than that, religious enjoyment and service are directly in the path of business. We believe the truest conception of the christian's life makes it a steady, unbroken outflow and onflow of the spiritual life. It draws no separating line, on each side of which there shall be found only worldly duties, and on the other the so-called spiritual or religious duties. It is a unity, and religion enters into all our work and duties, and glorifies and beautifies them all; and we believe our Lord accepts one as gladly and as fully as another. Does there but appear the light of a devout purpose, the breath of a life hid with Christ in God, then, be the work what it may, and where it may, it is God's service. The farmer who keeps up his fences, cares well for his stock and crops, is not behind-hand with his work, may therein be pleasing his Master no less than he who serves at the altar.

The prompt, reliable, energetic, and honorable business man may be a shining witness to the blessedness of religion in the daily life.

The mother in her quiet home, making that home bright and cheerful, keeping the children tidy and well behaved, and looking faithfully after the thousand and one little daily duties, has a place of christian labor that shall have the plaudits of heaven, if not of earth.

And so, wherever the Lord places one of his children, it is for him to be diligent and faithful there, and so to find therein his growth in piety and his truest success.—The Contributor.

ONLY ONE REMEDY FOR SIN.

E. A. BOYNTON.

Suppose a fatal malady is raging through the land, and a skilful physician employs me to administer a remedy, which is a certain cure for the disease, but which many refuse to take, because of its bitter taste, will it be advisable for me to spend a portion of my time in administering another remedy, more pleasant to the taste, which may afford some temporary relief to those who will not use the true remedy, but which can never cure the disease? I think not. For, while I was thus employed some might die, whom I could have been the means of saving, if I had devoted all my time to the use of the true remedy. The leprosy of sin has seized upon the whole family of man, and, without a remedy, all must perish by it. But the great Physician has provided one which is a perfect and permanent cure for the dread disease, in all its multiplied forms. He furnishes this remedy to all his people freely, and requires them to use it faithfully, to save their fellow-men from death. However, the majority of men have a strong dislike for it, and refuse to make use of it. Consequently, other remedies have been invented by men, better suited to their natural taste; but none of them can afford more than a partial, temporary relief. Can it be possible that the Lord's people can do more good by spending a part of their time in the use of these remedies, than they could by using only the one which God appointed? Let us consider this question a little.

Societies are formed whose special object is to check the evil of intemperance. The christian religion, God's great remedy for all moral evil, is a perfect cure for intemperance of every kind. Therefore the devoted christian need not join a temperance society for his own good. He trusts in the power of God to keep him safe from this, and all other sins. Moreover, he will constantly seek to persuade and assist others to lead holy lives, and thereby do all in his power to promote their present and future welfare. Consequently, he need not join a temperance society for the good of others.

Then, again, societies are organized to remedy the evil of selfishness, and secure to their members prompt assistance in time of need. Some christians claim that their brethren in the secret societies are much more ready to aid each other than their brethren in the church. If this be true, it is not because Christianity fails in this respect, but because it has not been kept pure and unadulterated. When the religion of Christ gets full possession of men's hearts, it roots out all selfishness, and makes them feel as the disciples did when "they had all things common," and "neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own." They will do to others as they would have others do to them. Such have no need to join worldly societies of any kind. Would it not be much better for christians to labor to raise the standard of religion in the churches to its proper place, than resort to the use of that which men have invented as a substitute for it? All reformatory societies, except christian associations, are intended to accomplish a part of the work which the Lord designs the religion of Christ to accomplish. Moreover, they are composed largely of men of the world; whereas the Lord's people are told to come out from the world and be separate; and not be unequally yoked together with unbelievers. It appears to me that it would be far better for the Lord's people to unite themselves together in the strong bonds of christian love; keep aloof, as much as practicable, from the world and worldly institutions; confine themselves wholly to the work of the Lord, and trust in the Lord to take care of them.

AN English paper has the following:—"It is now stated that the Jesuits and Ultramontanists are secretly plotting to promote the restoration of the Napoleon dynasty over France, on the understanding that it will then commence a war or Ultramontane crusade for the restoration of Rome to the Pope as his throne of temporal sovereignty."

A SKEPTIC who was trying to confuse a colored man by the contradictory passages of the Bible, asked him how it could be true that we were in the Spirit and the Spirit in us. "Oh," replied he, "dar's no puzzle 'bout dat. It's like dat poker; I put it in the fire till it gets red hot—now de poker's in de fire and de fire's in de poker."

HOME AND HEALTH.

EVILS OF TOBACCO USING.

From Health Reformer.

We feel no hesitancy in making, without qualification, the statement that tobacco ruins a man physically, mentally, and morally, and is a social nuisance and a national curse. To make good this claim we shall present a series of well-attested facts, arranging them under the following separate heads: Physical Evils, Mental Evils, Moral Evils, Social Evils, and Political Evils.

PHYSICAL EVILS.

1. Tobacco is a deadly poison.

One hundred ounces of Virginia tobacco contain seven ounces of nicotine, a poisonous oil whose deadly properties are second to no other known substance but Prussic acid. A single drop on a cat's tongue produces death in two minutes! The vapor alone will kill a large cat. Many cases of death have occurred as the result of applying to a cut or bruise a little of this oil from an old pipe. Its application to the skin as an ointment has frequently been fatal. It is to the presence of this terrible poison that all the virtues of tobacco are due; and it has been estimated that the amount of poison contained in the annual crop of tobacco is sufficient to exterminate all animal life from the globe if rightly administered. The reason why tobacco-users do not die immediately is because they do not take the poison in fatal doses. But it is no less sure in its results. Like opium, arsenic, strychnine, corrosive sublimate, and other poisons, it may be tolerated for years; but its sure and awful consequences come at last, and, indeed, are manifested all along to him who has learned to discern them. A single cigar contains poison sufficient to kill two men, if concentrated.

Hundreds of cases of fatal poisoning by tobacco might be cited from numerous medical works. Only a few years ago, a homicide was committed in England, by means of nicotine, the murderer crowding a few drops of the oil into the mouth of his victim. A Turkish slave once killed his master by dropping into his ear, while he was sleeping, a few drops of the oil from his pipe.

2. Tobacco-using is an unnatural habit.

There is not one man in fifty who cannot remember the peculiar effect of the first quid of tobacco he placed in his mouth, or the first pipe he essayed to smoke; and we hazard nothing in premising that the remembrance of that experience recalls anything but pleasant sensations. When a lad makes his first attempt at tobacco-poisoning, what do we observe? A deathly pallor overspreads his face; his head swims; a feeling of indescribable agony seizes upon him; he reels, perhaps falls, and sheepishly drags himself away into some secluded nook where he can enjoy the beauties of tobacco unobserved and unmolested, meanwhile beguiling the agonizing hours with the amusing pastime of rolling on the grass, or the more serviceable one of tickling his throat with a feather to induce his stomach to turn out what he has himself put in.

How would it be possible for nature to express in more forcible terms her repugnance to the filthy weed? Does she not say, in language unmistakable, I have no use for tobacco? there is no room for it in my dominion? it interferes with my operations? do not insult me with the disgusting, poisoning stuff?

Very rarely, indeed, can a man be found who did not have to learn to use tobacco. This alone is sufficient evidence of its anti-vital, unnatural character; and whatever is unnatural, that is, repugnant to natural, unperverted tastes, is evidently a thing unfit to minister to the wants of the human body.

MEDICAL VIEW OF SPIRITUALISM.

Of all mental ailments, none seem to yield to treatment so reluctantly as Spiritualism. I have watched many cases of genuine spiritualism, but do not remember to have seen a chronic case permanently cured. I have seen typical cases pass regularly through their successive stages and terminate in open insanity, and have never been able to mitigate the symptoms nor avert the result. Spiritualism is the most uncompromising complaint with which the psychologist is called to meet. No epidemic of modern times can compare with it. It is a delusion which has existed twenty-five years, and attacked in the United States alone nearly three millions of people. The last census informs us that there are in the republic twenty-four thousand insane, setting aside idiots; and it is believed that out of this number seven thousand and five hundred cases may be traced directly to Spiritualism.

The delusion does not appear to be decreasing, though fortunately its victims are now almost altogether from the vulgar and illiterate classes, and scientific men do not seem to be liable to the contagion. It numbers among its victims a few men and women of talent and genius, but they were attacked years ago; and we venture to say that, had they remained free from the disorder up to the present day, they would not now be very susceptible to its influence. The fact is, Spiritualism has lost its hold on the higher classes, and is spreading with fearful rapidity among the rude and illiterate. Whole communities are given over to its influence. Its believers have their organizations, places of worship, mediums, books, papers and asylums; they are as sincere, earnest, and fearless as were the Fagellants, Lycanthropes, and Crusaders of the middle ages; but, alas! they are even more deranged.—New York Chemical Review.

QUANTITY OF FOOD FOR WORKING MEN.—Individuals whose organs of digestion, secretion, and respiration are weak, need food different in quantity and in quality from that of persons in more robust health. For every stage of life a certain mixture of food alone is fitted; and what we all consider as a matter of course for the infant, is, strictly speaking, applicable to every period of life. The evil is that every one has not the free choice of what he will eat; but by learning what is especially suited to his wants, or what is hurtful for him, he may help to lengthen his life a short while. The daily work performed by an individual bears relation to the mass of his muscles, as this depends on his nutrition in relation to his food. Two individuals with muscles unequally developed, cannot perform daily the same amount of work. A badly-fed individual has little muscular formation, and requires less food than one well fed. With the same quantity of food which would keep the badly-fed individual up to his weight, the better-fed man with greater muscular formation would lose weight. The English railway contractors measure the capacity for work of their men by their appetite.—Dr. Lankester.

TONICS AND STIMULANTS.—The question is constantly being asked by correspondents, How do tonics and stimulants give strength to the system? The answer is, They do not. Stimulants, and those articles commonly called tonics, instead of giving vitality, they always consume it. But if this be true, says one, how does the patient seem stronger after taking these things? Just exactly as the horse seems stronger when lashed by his master's whip to induce him to draw a heavy load up some steep declivity. When the task is accomplished, the poor animal stands trembling like the aspen, plainly exhibiting a fearful expenditure of vitality.

No one will claim that the whip imparted strength to the animal, even although he might not have otherwise accomplished the work. Nor will any one deny that the task was performed at the expense of vitality. So it is in the use of tonics and stimulants. They do, indeed, produce results which seem to indicate an accession of strength, but this is never really the case.—Ex.

SPRAINS AND BRUISES.—The best treatment of sprains and bruises is the application of water, of such temperature as is most agreeable. The degree of temperature varies with the temperature of weather and the vigor of the circulation. In a hot day use cool or cold water. If the circulation is low, use warm water. The bruised or sprained part, may be immersed in a pail of water, and gently pressed and manipulated with the hand or soft cloth, for ten or fifteen minutes, and even longer in severe cases; after which, wrap up the parts in cloths wet in cold water, and keep quiet. This treatment keeps down the inflammation, and in nine cases out of ten proves a speedy cure. The liniments and filthy ointments so much used for sprains and bruises, do not compare with this simple treatment in efficacy. —Ex.

A NEATLY kept cellar is a pretty good guarantee of health of the family whose members are breathing the air from it day and night. Everybody believes in having pure air to breathe; but we are sorry to tell the truth, that thousands are breathing impure air on account of foul cellars. What are the essentials of a good cellar? It must be dry; it must have stone walls outside and division walls of either stone or brick; the floor of cement upon a foundation of cobble stones previously imbedded into the earth by means of a heavy maul, handled by two men; plastered ceilings and walls; complete ventilation by means of large windows. If these points are secured, the cellar becomes one of the most important rooms in the house.—Phrenological Journal.

AMONG the great men of our country who did not smoke, were Washington, Franklin, and Jefferson. Washington Irving was not a smoker. Goethe never smoked, nor could he have smoked, and remained Goeth. The man so perfect in body, so lofty and splendid in intellect, and so grand in character, could not have been a smoker.

"THE OLD WOMAN."

It was thus, a few days since, we heard a stripling of sixteen years designate the mother who bore him. An old woman is an object of reverence above and beyond almost all phases of humanity. Her years should be the surest passport to courteous consideration. The aged mother of a grown up family needs no other certificate of worth. She is a monument of excellence, approved and warranted. She has fought faithfully "the good fight," and come off conqueror. Upon her venerable face she bears the marks of the conflict in all its furrowed lines. The most grievous of all the ills of life have been hers; trials untold and unknown only to God and herself she has borne incessantly; and now in her old age—her duty done, patiently awaiting her appointed time—she stands more truly beautiful than he who has slain his thousands, and stood triumphant upon the proudest field of victory.

Young man, speak kindly to your mother, and even courteously of her. But a little time, and you may see her no more forever! Her eyes are dim, her form is bent, and her shadows fall grave-ward. Speak gently, then, and reverentially of your mother, and when you too, shall be old, it shall in some degree lighten the remorse which shall be yours for other sins, to know that never wantonly have you outraged the respect due to old women.—Selected.

LOVE MAKES THE DIFFERENCE.

"Oh, it's just as different as can be?" said one of my young friends.

"What is it?" I asked.

"Why, being a christian. Everything is so different from what I expected."

"What did you expect?"

"When you used to talk with me about being a christian, I used to say to myself, 'No, I can't now; for I should have to do so many hard things! and I never could do them.'"

"What hard things?"

"Oh, I used to think, 'Now, if I become a christian, I shall have to walk just so; shall have to go to church and prayer-meeting; shall have to pray, and read the Bible.' It is so different from what I thought."

"Why, James, what do you mean?" I exclaimed. "You go to church and to prayer-meeting; you do read the Bible, and pray; you do try to walk just right, do you not?"

"Oh, yes! but then I love to do them. That makes all the difference. I love Jesus and I love to do as he wishes me to."

"WHAT is your plan in life?" I asked a small boy, turning from his big brothers, who were talking about theirs, to which he had been listening. "What is yours, Neddie?"

"I am not big enough for a plan yet," said he, "but I have a purpose."

"That is good. What is your purpose?"

"To grow up a good boy, so as to be a good man, like my father, said he. And by the way he said it, was plain he meant it. His father was a noble christian man, and Neddie could not do better than follow his steps. A boy with such a purpose will not fail of his mark.

"BE STRONG."

MARTHA S. HORNE.

Ye weary, waiting ones,
By trials sore oppress,
Take courage, press with vigor on
Towards your promised rest.

Stand boldly for the truth,
Be valiant and be strong;
Be firm and steadfast for the right,
Sin will not triumph long.

Though oft in angel guise
The arch deceiver comes;
If possible he would deceive
The Savior's chosen ones.

But with the faithful word,
And the Holy Spirit's aid,
You will detect him in his wiles,
Therefore be not afraid.

But with your eye on him,
From whence your strength doth come,
You need not fear,—his word is pledged,—
He'll lead you safely home.

Rochester, N. H.

THE PRESENT CRISIS.

When I look up, and behold the blackening heavens above concealing the throne of the eternal, but revealing, through chinks and crevices, some glances of the frowning countenance of him who sits upon the throne, and see the clouds still gathering, in which lie sleeping the thunders and the lightnings of Jehovah's ire, ready in a moment to be let loose, not only on the open transgressors of his holy law, but on the open and obstinate neglecters of duty, more especially "at such a time as this"—such a terrible crisis as the present in the destiny of the world and its inhabitants—oh, it is this that alarms me; it is this that appals me: it is this which frightens me; it is this which, at times, almost stuns me into utter insensibility!

Why, in the very midst of such a mighty crisis, threatening daily, almost hourly, to precipitate itself into a catastrophe which holds out no prospect of recovery, to be necessitated to turn aside from it, by our own doings and voluntary choice; and, in regard to it, allow ourselves to sink down into a state of apathy and unconcern, sleep and slumber; relieved, it may be, only by some airy dreams and baseless visions—were nothing wiser and nothing better than to lie down and sleep on the very edge of the crater of a volcano, when the earthquake's rumblings underneath, and the frequent jets of sulphurous smoke and burning ashes above, are loudly pealing the alarm that the grand eruption is at hand which may upheave the whole mountain from its foundations, and hurl the hapless sleeper a thousand fathoms down into the depths below. Why, the stark, staring incongruity of all this, to say nothing of its sinfulness, is such that I would not be in the condition of any of those represented by these sleepers, no, not for a thousand worlds.

Never, never since the world began, were the forces of evil so multitudinous, so universally diffused, so completely panoplied in choicest armor—offensive and defensive,—so plausible in device and policy, so cunning in stratagem, so satanic in subtlety, so exasperating in insolence and scorn, so gigantic, and apparently resistless in power. But all this goes for nothing in the estimation of the enlightened and firm believer in the eternal verities of Jehovah's holy oracles!

Nay, more. Bad as things now may be, they may yet become infinitely worse. And that such is the probability, as regards the future, is my own decided conviction and belief. But what of all that to him who calmly and securely rests on the immovable rock of Jehovah's promises?

Though to the eye of sense or of finite understanding it might look as if the powers of evil now at work really threatened to extinguish every luminary in the firmament of divine truth, and leave the world, morally and religiously, in a state of darkness and of chaos as complete as it would be physically, if sun, moon, and stars were wiped away from the canopy of heaven, not even then would the true believer in the Bible—that blessed book of books—be for a moment staggered. He could still cheerfully hold on his way, and exultingly sing—

"Faith, mighty faith, God's promise sees,
And looks on that alone;
Laughs at impossibilities,
And cries, 'It shall be done'"

And done it shall be assuredly, in God's own good time. When the great world-wide crisis shall have reached the zenith of its development, and the hope of all but the true believer has given place to the wildest despair, as if the Lord had forsaken or forgotten the world and his own along with it, then, oh, then, will be his time for effectual interposition—

"Just at the last distressing hour
The Lord displays delivering power;
The mount of danger is the place
Where we shall see surprising grace."

Surprising grace, indeed! For then will He, who is King and Governor among the nations, and, as such, has never for a moment relaxed his hold of the reins of mediatorial government, in ways of mercy and of judgment inscrutable to us now, usher this sin-laden and sin-distracted world, purged and purified, into scenes of glory surpassing fable.

And when the great design, purposed from all eternity, shall thus be consummated—when creation, providence, and redemption shall be brought to their final issue—when the decrees and dispensations of the Almighty shall be triumphantly vindicated—when Satan—the grand adversary of God and man, with his rebel angels and the incorrigible unbeliever and hardened reprobate, with sin, and death, and hell, shall be cast forever into the bottomless pit of perdition—when the meditorial kingdom, or kingdom of grace, consisting of all the members of the redeemed church—a great multitude, praised be God! as represented to the holy seer in the Apocalyptic vision, which no man could number of all nations and kindreds, and people and tongues—reigning with Christ as kings and priests, shall be delivered as trophies of victory to the Father—the former to remain everlasting monuments to the praise and glory of God's power and justice, and immeasurable hatred of sin;—the latter eternal monuments to the praise and glory of God's love and mercy, and the inexhaustible treasures of his wisdom and grace;—then shall stability and righteousness, harmony and peace be restored, aud forever perpetuated through the rejoicing universe of God!

Then shall it be conspicuously and eternally made manifest to all holy intelligences that the great Creator originally made all things for himself—for the illustration of his own glory, more especially in the connection with the holiness and boundless felicity of his redeemed creatures—that he is, in the absolute fullness of its significancy, the "All in all—and that, in the triumphant issue of all his plans and purposes, and, most signally, in the exaltation and glorification of countless myriads out of the wreck and ruin of the fall, he shall himself be infinitely and forever glorified! And then, if through believing acceptance of the offered salvation we are privileged to secure a valid title-deed to an inheritance so transcendant in glory and infinite in duration, through the victorious sufferings and atoning death of our adored Immanuel—the second Adam—the Lord from heaven—we shall have abundant reason to rejoice that for us the cool shades of paradise lost have been exchanged for the never-ending sunshine of paradise regained.—Prophetic Times.

THE END OF THE DISPENSATION.

It is a matter of congratulation that, amid the many hues of thought which complete the Rainbow, its most distinctive coloring has not been permitted to fade out—viz., those thoughts which specially point to the coming of the Master. The darkness around is still such as to require the Rainbow in all its vividness, and if the light fade not, it will so continue. . . .

Surely the signs of the times, the condition of the nations, the direct and indirect Bible evidence, indicate very strongly that the coming of Christ is imminent, very imminent, all but upon us. Has not the "evening-time" long passed, "the midnight" also? Did not the time of the "cock-crowing" cease with 1870; and is not the dawn of "morning" approaching? Is it not at very early morning that he will come? Where are we?

It may be that we have reached unto the very last days of the present dispensation, just concluding the lapse of years known in the language of Daniel the prophet as "the time of the end." If so, we are entering upon a most momenous period; the time of the resurrection of those who are Christ's; the change of the living, and the time of trouble, such as never was, nor ever shall again be; with the manifestation of the literal lawless one.

We think we are close upon the period when Jesus will fulfil the promise: "I will come again." Of course there is a possibility of mistake, but we cling to the promise that "the wise shall understand at the time of the end," that which David could not, and what the other prophets could not; though the apostle informs us that "they searched diligently what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it prophesied beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into." 1 Pet. 1: 11–12.

May we not judge from such language that even the prophets thought much about the time of Christ's glory, but that to them, even as also unto the apostles and the church, the time has been hid, and was intended to have been hidden until these last days? Scripture certainly intimates that as the period of our Savior's coming draws nigh, so the church shall be gradually enlightened as to the very time. Absolute statement of the time of Christ's coming is not given in Scripture, but there are certain landmarks and types given, by which the believer may know that his Lord is near.

It is the great Master's will that they only shall know who will search—as those who would search for hid treasure, and alone indicate that they care much about it, that their hearts are set upon it. The great majority even of those who are believers in the Lord's second advent rest satisfied with the reply, "Well, it becomes us to be always ready." But such, alas! are never ready. No; they are quite content to remain as they are, so long as they think that by and by they shall be safe. It does not at all concern them whether the Lord comes this time two or twenty years, and as to the possibility of its being within twenty days or two months, the thought can scarcely be endured. Such ought not so to be. The Bride ought to be ever most anxiously desiring the presence of the Bridegroom; and only such will, even when the time is come for the vail to be lifted from the prophetic Scripture, understand these things; but the wise shall understand. Yes, they "shall"—then they must. God's word cannot fail. Understand what? Why just that concerning which Daniel inquired (Dan. 12: 8)—"concerning the end."—Rainbow.

COMMISSIONED BAPTISM.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

"Go ye, therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Jesus, MATT. 18: 19.

In considering the subject of Bible baptism, we have proceeded so far as to examine the texts which relate to "John's baptism," and we have noticed two important facts,—first, that the words, nouns and verbs, which are employed to designate it, are uniform and belong to the same class, there being no words ever employed except the noun baptisma, and the verb baptizo, to designate it, except the noun Baptistes, which is used to represent his official name, and his employment, as The Baptist; or, one who baptized." Secondly, we have noticed that these words were selected because of their fitness to express, correctly, the sense intended, and that, on this account, they must have the same meaning after they become scriptural terms which they had before; and so there can be no authority for changing them, either in meaning, or by substituting any other word or words for them, or any of them, or, by calling any other practices by their name.

"John's Baptism" must, therefore, have been just what the word indicates—"an immersion"—whatever the object of it may have been. The question is sometimes asked, "whether he baptized by immersion?" but as well might one ask "whether he baptized by baptism?" for the word itself is proof of the mode, and we must insist on maintaining its proper meaning at all hazards. The Father sent him "to baptize," as he testified in John 1: 33; and, therefore, he had the highest authority for doing as he did. But there came at last, and after a brief period, an end of his mission and his work. It was abruptly terminated by the order of Herod, by which he was beheaded in prison. The work of baptizing was not therefore to come to an end, however; for, after Jesus had arisen from the dead, just before he went away, he gave his disciples the commission which we have quoted, and so perpetuated "baptism" to be, always, an institution of his church. This is the baptism which we call "commissioned baptism," because he thus commissioned by the commission recorded in Matt. 18: 19. "John's baptism" was certainly authorized, as we have noticed. He speaks of "Him that sent" him "to baptize"; but, the verbal commission is not recorded. That commission which Jesus gave his disciples is a remarkable one. We have no doubt that "John's baptism" held an important relation to it, as we shall notice; but, in some important respects, it was unlike it, which we shall see. But the baptism, as commissioned by Jesus, is what now specially concerns us. There are several essential concomitants of it; things necessary to it, to make it baptism, or the true gospel immersion.

1. It must have Divine authority.
2. It must be immersion in water.
3. It must be "one baptism," or immersion, in three names,—"of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."
4. It must be administered by a properly authorized person, to a suitable subject, at the proper time, in a proper manner.
5. It must have an object.

On the first point there is no difference of opinion. The commission is believed to be sufficient proof of this. It is the recognized Heaven's authority, and makes baptism Heaven-recognized, and clothes the church of God with power to administer it in the way in which Jesus intended it should be observed. "Go ye, therefore," he said, "and teach," and baptize, and whosoever observes the institution, as it should be observed, can feel as though inspired to do it, that he has high authority, that its object is high and holy, and that in doing it he is performing no mere secular and commonplace thing, to have only a low, groveling aspect; to be subject to the caprice of men and under human control, and made mean by human contempt; to be modified, or set aside, or treated as men may please; but to be held and esteemed as sacred, and used as God, by his Son, gave it to him, and intended it should be used; by carefully and faithfully and boldly attending to it, considering that, as it is "from heaven," it is important in all its particulars, and so rigidly to be enforced as that no one's conscience can be put upon the judgment-seat to render judicial opinion of the importance or manner of it, aside from what God says of it.

No one can say, therefore, to the candidate for baptism, "Satisfy your own conscience." If one should, acting under such advice, begin to say, "I believe that the act itself is spiritual; that, if I have the Holy Spirit, it is enough," then his adviser must be content, and can say no more; because, if the form of the thing is a matter of conscience, then the fact of it is, likewise; and after giving such advice, one cannot point to the word of God and say, "Thus saith the Lord," but he must say, "Do this thing that I think you must, or not, just as you feel; and if your conscience is satisfied, it is all right." He, certainly, must say this, and as truly must he, the moment he allows conscience to be the guide in the matter in the least, sink the institution to the dead level of a human contrivance, about which men may properly differ, and quarrel and be at variance, and one be nearly as correct as the other, both as to the form and fact of the ordinance.

One cannot be allowed to let conscience be guide, except as the Word guides it. We know there is a great amount of talk about being "charitable," and some would have you be even so charitable as to recognize as Christianity whatever is called such; and all those, as christians, who profess to be, whatever may be the status of the thing, or the acts of such claimants of your charity; but christian charity allows of no such rubber-like elasticity; and such a course is not that of "charity," but is unwarrantable looseness, and deserves the Divine rebuke, and receives it. If we were asked "whether conscience has not a place in the matter," we should answer, that "undoubtedly it has; but that it is not the supreme dictator, so that one, exercised by it, can do with the institution of baptism as he pleased, and go away satisfied that he has done his duty and is justified in the sight of God, because his conscience is satisfied. This is because conscience is not a safe and sure guide, and because God has not made it the authority in the matter. Some may say, and do say, we know, that God has made the duty of doing the thing apparent; that he has not left us to go unbaptized; but then, the manner of doing it is left discretionary with the subject, and to be settled by his conscience. This might be true if the manner was not a part of the thing; if that could be done or not, as thought best, then the question would be settled; but if it is to be done at all, it must be done right, as itself, and not as something else called it, to take away the reproach.

As the case now stands, God, and not conscience, must tell us what and how to do, and we must be careful and not pervert what he has delivered us to keep inviolate. God, and a conscience properly educated, are in harmony; but conscience is not reliable alone, as we have noted in a thousand instances. The heathen mother is conscientious in that devotion which prompts her to cast her child to the crocodile, but who dares to claim that she is right in the matter? It will not do to say that she is right for her, for it is not true that conscience makes a thing right. If she who does such an act is justified at all, it is because she is ignorant, and knows no better, and not because she is conscientious.

People often seek to transfer their responsibility to the heathen, and leave it there; but those who have God's word are certainly without excuse. If their conscience is properly educated, they will never feel at rest until they do as God bids. It will be tender, and quick to prompt them to duty, and to do it with exactness too. But people should never allow any risks about the matter. It is too grave a matter for God to command the performance of a duty which he marks out, and then leave it to the conscience of one who may be in the wrong, and need enlightenment. He never does so. The Bible is given us to enlighten us, and if those who are the best capable of knowing it are true to their responsibilities, then all may know, even what "baptism" means, and what it is both in its form and manner of administration; and can attend to it, as the Divine will indicates and directs, and may say—

"In all my Lord's appointed ways,
My journey I'll pursue;
Hinder me not, ye much loved saints,
For I must go with you.
Through floods and flames, if Jesus leads,
I'll follow where he goes;
Hinder me not! shall be my cry,
Though earth and hell oppose."

We would not say to any one, certainly, "Be more nice and particular than God would have you be about baptism"; but, "be as particular." There is no danger of doing what he says too exactly, but one is in danger of being too slack, and of perverting grossly His institution; and this danger we must carefully guard against.

Jesus said, "Go ye, . . . baptizing"; and certainly one could not go "rantizing," even though he called it "baptizing," and obey the command; but he must have it in fact, what it is in name; and its name, as we have said, indicates nothing else but immersion—not sprinkling, or pouring, or anything but immersion; and the early church never thought of doing anything else than just this very thing; and even the strongest advocates of other modes, or who call other things "baptism," are obliged to admit the fact, and, so, to admit that sprinkling is an innovation and a perversion of the rite, and, therefore, admit that men have set aside the earliest recognized testimony of the church, and the Divine authority, and substituting human expediency and human conscience in the place of it.

The earliest case of sprinkling was clearly one of human expediency. It occurred in A. D. 251. Novatian, a Roman, as his name indicates, was taken sick, and on his sick-bed was converted; or, at least, embraced Christianity. It was thought he was going to die, and he had never been baptized. What should be done? The prelates of the church gravely consulted about the matter, and at last hit upon the expediency of sprinkling him on the face, and using at the same time the formula, "I baptize thee," etc. It was done, and Novatian was pronounced "baptized." But he recovered from his sickness unexpectedly, and, after a time, it was proposed to make him a bishop of the church of Rome. But a difficulty arose. He had only been sprinkled, and what should be done? To ordain him a bishop would be to sanction fully his "sprinkling" as valid baptism. They might immerse him, but that would have the effect to annul what they had done, for they had called it "baptism," and it would not do to reverse their claim; and so they refused to make him a regular bishop, and the case stood thus: Novatian had been baptized, so that he could not be baptized again; for he had been sprinkled; so he must not be immersed. But he had not been baptized, for he had only been sprinkled, and so could not be a bishop. How much better would it have been had Novatian died unsprinkled, or even unbaptized, if that must have been the case, than that men should have been so false to the charge of Christ, as to allow human expediency to set aside the holy command of the commission he gave them. "Let God be true," and let his word stand, though man be false, and fall under condemnation.

TRIALS.

GEO E. LEE.

Who is there in this world who does not have trials? Who is there that can hope for salvation through faith, without a trial of that faith? What though the child of God is "in heaviness through manifold temptations?" know ye not that "the trial of your faith" is "much more precious than of gold that perisheth?" And that though "it be tried with fire," it is that it "might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ?"

If there are those who have no trials, it must be others than the "beloved" disciples of our Lord; for all such are given to understand that trials are among the accompaniments of the christian race. And hence, knowing it is so, it is useless to continually dwell upon our personal trials in relating our experiences, but look beyond these to the crown, trusting that He who was "tempted in all points as we are" knows all our griefs, and doth not afflict willingly. And as the apostle exhorts us, we are "not to think strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."

We know that we have great need of patience in these last days; for, as the dawn of day advances, in which shall be known "no night," the darkness which precedes the light shall seem to increase, and at times it may seem as though all was obscurity. Yet if we suffer for well-doing, it is better if the will of God be so, than for evil doing; and we may well be happy, if we be reproached for the name of Christ. Let us, then, gird on the whole armor, and stand up boldly for the truth, and He whom we serve will bring us the victory. When we "yield ourselves servants to obey," and exert ourselves in every good work, we need not fear the results of our labors, for they will certainly be for good. Our responsibility is for the most part ended, when we can feel that we are doing all we can, and the best that we can. And then, "having a good conscience," we need not be ashamed, "whereas they speak evil of you as of evil doers, that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ."

O that exceeding joy! With what gladness we hail that day of bright glory! Who does not want to be a participator in that joy? Can any afford to trifle with earthly joys at a loss of those which are heavenly? No, there are none who can afford to, and they only will lose the eternal, by neglecting or refusing to look away from that which is temporal. For my part, give me the trials of this life, with the peace of God, and then "when he, who is our life, shall appear, I shall appear with him in glory." May all my readers be there.

Springfield, Mass.

"AN ADVOCATE."

We are helpless. Christ is our helper. He is our Advocate. There is infinite comfort in that. He takes us in charge, saves, makes our case his own, gives us the full benefit of his wisdom, love, patience, power, skill. It is exceedingly sweet to be in his hands; to be saved, kept, moulded, sanctified, sustained by him. He has set his heart on saving; gives his blood to cleanse from sin; is resolved to expel all unrighteousness, and will not fail if we only believe.

Unbelief is a fatal hindrance. We cannot receive if we fail to believe. Salvation is not an arbitrary gift, a fortune bestowed, but fellowship of heart, life imparted, and there can be no fellowship without faith. Christ cannot unite his soul to ourselves, expel our death by his life, our selfishness by his love, our darkness by his light, if we do not believe, or confide in him. The state of believing is essential to receiving, not as arbitrary law imposed, but from the very nature of spiritual being. Hence, those who believe least, receive least, and those who believe most, receive most.

Conversion is strong or weak, according to faith. A little faith brings a feeble experience. Christ does for each soul all that it can receive; saves those who have just a little faith, gives a little light where there is a feeble trust, and increases it as faith gains strength. The smallest beginnings are often followed by a rapid growth; the power of the new life is measured by the growth of receptiveness; a great salvation enters by the gate of a great faith. Some learn rapidly to receive, others learn slowly; some have a genius for faith, others are dull and sluggish. Capacity shows itself in believing as much as it does in science, business, or mechanism. Blessed is the man who can believe like George Muller; but all cannot. Believing souls are like birds. Some fly above the mountains and sail among the clouds; others flutter near the earth, and some merely leap, and walk, and swim. But Jesus accepts them all, cares for all, saves all; forgives sins, washes away sin, keeps from sin.

If we sin he is our advocate. Christians sin. They ought not to sin, and need not sin, but they do. Sometimes they sin deliberately, with forethought, as David did. Usually they sin thoughtlessly, in weakness. Often they sin unconsciously. Our acts are so complex, motives so mixed, impulses so subtle and various, that we scarcely know ourselves. We may be pure in our own eyes and yet impure in the eyes of God.

It is seldom safe to assume that we are sinless; it is always safe to confess imperfection and crave forgiveness. It is an unspeakable privilege to know that "if we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." This cleansing is needed every day and every hour to keep us clean; to remove detected and undetected sin, imperfections seen, and imperfections unseen, and maintain a healthy tone of spiritual life. If we are wholly saved to-day we shall need the same to-morrow. We are not stationary. The teacher attacks weakness and ignorance; the pupil gains strength, wisdom, and skill by continual use of the teacher's riper life. So christians use their advocate.

Moral imperfection has its root in sin; ignorance and weakness are children of sin, and if not regretted when discovered, and brought to Christ for correction and removal, they become sin in fact. Having laid every perceived infirmity on our Lord, our vision always brightens and other blemishes appear, These are not sin, though born of sin, yet they will be sin if not quickly laid on Christ. While thus uncovering errors, revealing blemishes, correcting mistakes, it is unwise to excuse our faults, or strive to prove our innocence. With Paul we should say, "I judge not mine own self, for I know nothing of myself, yet am I not hereby justified; but he that judgeth me is the Lord."

It is wise and safe to bring all to Jesus and crave his pardon, grace, help, just as he sees we need. He is our advocate; he understands our case better than we do ourselves; he can manage us better than we can manage ourselves. This is the lesson for us to learn; to commit all to him; commit ourselves to him; make him the guide of our lives, the keeper of our souls; our teacher, leader, helper, Savior.

"If we sin!" How precious to have a remedy for all sin! This never excuses effort, never engenders indifference, but always begets hatred of sin, and love of purity, because the advocate works through our hearts to make us feel as he feels, love what he loves, hate what he hates. So we become "workers together with him;" he keeps us and lets us help him; he redeems us and allows us to do a little in the glorious work.

A PREDICTION.

In addition to the recent utterances by Mr. Disraeli and other political thinkers, upon an appalling religious war, looming in the distance, Pere Hyacinth has spoken to the same effect at a recent meeting at Geneva. He foresees international, civil, and religious wars to be at hand. The Empire newspaper says:

"Pere Hyacinth lent to the debate the light of his bright intelligence and the fire of his kindling eloquence. 'The great cause of war, he said, 'was to be found in the moral perversity of man. To destroy war we must destroy evil; to abolish war, first must come the abolition of the sins of individuals, and more especially of the sins of nations. To fight against wars and slaughter, we must first essay to regenerate the world, to subdue in man his pride and his ferocity.' He agrees with Mr. Disraeli and Dr. Cumming in painting a dark and bloody future. He said, 'When he considered the actual state of our great and unhappy Europe he saw general peace at the present moment, but in the future he saw menaces of strife. He saw in the horizon, war raising its hideous head. International war, civil war, and religious war.'"

It has been said that wars of the last kind—religious wars—had vanished from the world, but struggles which were out of place in the sixteenth century were cropping up again to-day. He could not deny that that was in a great measure the fault of the church, but he had a right to add that it was also the fault of the State. The State and the church fought each other of old, and they were doing so again to-day, mixing the duties of the christian with those of the citizen. The result would be war—a religious war; but civil war was close at hand. Equality had been proclaimed as existing in the world; it was glorious in the abstract, a sham in the reality. In the place of equality were poverty on the one side and riches on the other—a monstrous inequality of society. Then there would be international war, led on and fostered by the jealousies of nations and the rivalry of peoples. He could see these great wars in the distance, and though he was no prophet, he could see for Europe an appalling spectacle in the future.—Signs of Our Times.

FLIGHT OF LIFE,

This world is turning round on its axis once in four and twenty hours; and, besides that, it is moving round the sun in three hundred and sixty-five days of the year. So that we are all moving; we are all fitting along through space. And as we are traveling through space, so we are moving through time at an incalculable rate. Oh! what an idea it is could we grasp it! We are all being carried along as if by a giant angel, with broad outstretched wings, which he flaps to the blast, and, flying before the lightning, makes us ride on the winds. The whole multitude of us are hurrying,—whither, remains to be decided by the test of our faith and the grace of God; but certain it is, we are all traveling. Your pulses each moment beat the funeral marches to the tomb. You are chained by the chariot of rolling time. There is no bridling the steeds, or leaping from the chariot; you must be constantly in motion.—Spurgeon.

TARRYING FOR THE BAPTISM.

Is it needful to tarry? It is true the apostles were ordered to tarry and wait, but is the command to them applicable to all disciples? Are the circumstances the same now as then? Then the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified; but now he has descended on the church. Then the church did the right thing in tarrying at Jerusalem, their whole thought centered on themselves and the expected blessing, without any concern for outsiders; but when the day of Pentecost was fully come, then the tarrying command ceased to have force—it became obsolete—and should be allowed to take its place on the shelf amongst other historical facts of the Bible. The Holy Ghost is now given. He has descended, and remains on the church; he penetrates and fills every heart that will open to his influence. Once for all the mighty rushing wind has been heard by the church, and the cloven tongues have been seen, attesting, sensibly, the permanent advent of the Comforter, and he has never yet taken his departure. Christ said; "he" (that is, the Comforter) "will abide with you forever." It is clear, then, that the action of the christian church between the days of the ascension and the pentecost need not be repeated. They waited, as commanded, for a blessing not yet bestowed on man, and God's time had not yet come. Now the church waits, if she does wait, for a blessing which has been received, and God's time has come. Then the command to the church was tarry and wait; now it is, "Go!"

Then Christ was making his triumphant entry through the crystal gate into the city, dragging death and captivity captive, or was preparing to send forth the promise of the Father. Now our Jesus has ascended the mediatorial throne, now to make intercession for us, and has sent forth the Spirit in our hearts crying, "Abba, Father." Now there is no command to wait; there are many commands enjoining immediate reception and activity, but none, we repeat, calling for a waiting attitude.

Why, then, it is asked, are not all christians possessors of this gift of power? The reply is, not that they do not tarry at Jerusalem till they receive, not that they do not wait God's time, but because they do not take in faith what God offers every moment during their probation. The influences of the Holy One stream forth continuously, and to all, individually and collectively, the invitation is given, Come and drink of the waters of life freely.

Is there no benefit, then, resulting from individuals in the closet, or the church as a whole, tarrying and waiting for the baptism of the Holy Ghost? Certainly not in the sense of waiting God's time, for that time, as is clearly taught in the Bible, is now. How illogical to wait for the present moment! It is the undoubted privilege of the believer, anywhere, under any possible circumstances, to open his heart to the reception of the baptism of the Holy Ghost in all its plenitude of power; therefore to wait for it, either in the closet or sanctuary, is to act without sanction divine. But if through ignorance of the way of faith, if through partial fear of the highway of holiness, if through hesitancy and doubtfulness, the christian or the christian church fails to go up and possess the good land, then let them either individually or in companies wait on God in self-examination and prayer as a means, not of bringing God's time near, but of bringing near the time of their willingness to cross the Jordan of faith. In place, then of being a praiseworthy act, such waiting should cause shamefacedness for its necessity. When the trumpet of our great Leader is sounding the charge, the christian soldier who is only looking after his armor, may well blush for shame; but better that than desertion or inactivity,

Let it then be understood that we do not altogether condemn this tarrying and waiting; it is better than indifference, but we wish if possible to give it its proper place. We fear it has come unbidden to a higher place at the gospel feast than it is entitled to, and many persons lay so much stress upon it, that they are content to keep tarrying and waiting, deaf to the trumpet-calls of Zion for activity.

How many persons tarry and wait for the camp-meeting, expecting there to receive the gift of power, in place of taking what is freely offered at home—even the baptism of the Spirit—and then going up in the Spirit and power of the Master, not to wait, but to do battle against Satan's kingdom.

This idea of preparation to receive, preparation to do, by a process of waiting, is the human mixed into the plan divine.

The Spirit ever is crying, "Come," and it is the one great business of the church—the bride—to swell the volume and intensity of that cry. And when the bride, in place of sitting in an attitude of expectancy towards the Spirit, seats herself by his side, one in spirit and sympathy with him for a lost world, so that the gospel invitation will not be simply from the bride, but from both as one,—when the Spirit and the bride together as one sound out over the nations the glorious "Come!" then will the word preached, penetrate the heart, then will it reach the ear of the world, and then will there no longer be an infant of days, for each new hearer will be a doer; will at once shout out the invitation to others—he that heareth shall say, "Come!"—until whosoever will, the world over may come and partake of the water of life freely.—Guide to Holiness.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Oct. 28, 1874.

☞ Please Remember!

☞ All remittances to this office, in the form of Drafts, Bank Checks, and Postal Money-Orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ THOSE who send articles for the "CRISIS," should direct them to the "EDITORS OF WORLD'S CRISIS," Boston, Mass.

PLEASE READ, REMEMBER, AND ACT ACCORDINGLY.

The brethren, sisters, friends—one and all—whoever may write to this office, sending articles for insertion in the Crisis, or subscriptions for the same, notices, appointments, reports, or orders for papers, books, tracts, or anything of the kind, will confer a favor and do the right way by directing their letters in either one of the following ways:—

"EDITORS OF WORLD'S CRISIS, Boston, Mass."

"WORLD'S CRISIS, Boston, Mass.," or

GEO. T. ADAMS, Agent, Boston, Mass.

Those who send articles for the Young Pilgrim should address—

"EDITOR YOUNG PILGRIM, Boston, Mass."

In no case address letters on business connected with the papers, or office, to any of the clerks, compositors, or helps in this office.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

The provisions of the new postal law, requiring pre-payment of postage on all newspapers, go into operation on the first of January next. After that date all postage (excepting on newspapers within the County in which they are published) will have to be paid at the Office from which the paper is mailed. This change relieves the subscribers from the care and trouble of postage payment, placing it upon the publishers, and making the expense, which is quite an item, to come directly upon the latter.

To meet this (in regard to the Crisis), the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society, at a late meeting, voted to add twenty five cents to the price of our paper; so that from Jan. 1st, 1875, the World's Crisis will be $2.25 per year in advance. And hereafter, all monies received at this office for advance pay on the Crisis will be credited from Jan. forward at the rate of $2.25 per year. And if any, who have already paid for the paper in advance, are disposed to send us what they would have to pay at their Post Office, under the old law, we will thankfully receive the same; and so of those who receive the Crisis FREE.

"OUR PAPER."

In view of the startling fact that we are near the second coming of Christ, ought we not to make more effort to put into the hands of the people such reading matter as is calculated to awaken an interest on the subject? How can this be done more easily and successfully than by persuading them to take "our paper," "The World's Crisis"? We would urge all preachers to make a special effort the coming season to get new subscribers, as a means of stirring up the people to a sense of the solemnity of the hour in which we are living. M. THE FALLS OF NIAGARA.

The Falls of Niagara present to the mind of the lover of nature the magnitude, grandeur, and sublimity of God's works, one of the most impressive and never-to-be-forgotten scenes ever witnessed. It is one of the wonders of the world,—a grand exhibition of the power and magnificence of nature's operations. Millions of the human family from all countries and nations have gazed upon this wonderful cataract with inexpressible emotions of awe and admiration. Here the aboriginal inhabitants, doubtless, built their camp-fires, and received an indelible impression of the vastness of the Great Spirit's works.

The following touching legend strikingly represents their superstitious devotions, great sacrifices, and expressive adorations: "In days of old, long before the deep solitudes of the West were disturbed by white men, it was the custom of the Indian warriors of the forest to assemble at the Great Cataract and offer a human sacrifice to the Spirit of the Falls. The offering consisted of a white canoe full of ripe fruits and blooming flowers, which was paddled over the terrible cliff by the fairest girl of the tribe who had just arrived at the age of womanhood. It was counted an honor to the tribe to whose lot it fell to make the costly sacrifice; and even the doomed maiden deemed it a high compliment to be selected to guide the white canoe over the Falls. But in the stoical heart of the red man there are tender feelings which cannot be subdued, and cords which snap if strained too tightly.

The only daughter of a chief of the Seneca Indians was chosen as a sacrificial offering to the Spirit of Niagara. Her mother had been slain by a hostile tribe. Her father was the bravest among the warriors, and his stern brow seldom relaxed save to his blooming child, who was now the only joy to which he clung on earth. When the lot fell on his fair child, no symptom of feeling crossed his countenance. In the pride of Indian endurance he crushed the feelings that tore his bosom, and no tear trembled in his dark eye as the preparations for the sacrifice went forward.

At length the day arrived; it faded into night as the savage festivities and rejoicing proceeded; then the moon arose and silvered the cloud of mist that rose from out the turmoil of Niagara; and now the white canoe, laden with its precious freight, glided from the bank, and swept out into the dread rapid, from which escape is hopeless. The young girl calmly steered her tiny bark toward the center of the stream, while frantic yells and shouts arose from the forests. Suddenly another white canoe shot forth upon the stream, and, under the powerful impulse of the Senaca chief, flew like an arrow to destruction. It overtook the first; the eyes of father and child met in one last gaze of love, and then they plunged together over the thundering cataract into eternity."

The great lakes of North America—Superior, Michigan, Huron, and Erie—the great basins of the North West, into which are drained the waters of a vast territory sufficient to make an empire, roll their mighty tide from Erie into Lake Ontario, through a channel thirty-six miles long, called the Niagara River. This river is a part of the boundary between Canada and the State of New York. The wonderful Falls are twenty-two miles below Lake Erie, and fourteen above Ontario. They are divided into two parts by Iris or Goat Island. Those on the New York side are called the American Falls, and are two-hundred feet wide, and one hundred and sixty-four feet high. The Falls on the Canada side are called the Horse Shoe or Canadian Falls, and are two thousand feet wide and one hundred and fifty-eight feet high.

The origin of the name Niagara is not certainly known, "but is supposed to be of Iroquois extraction, and to signify the Thunder of Waters." The channel of the stream varies much in its width, but at the head of the rapids, a mile above the Falls, it is about three miles wide. The entire fall of water from Erie to Ontario is three hundred and thirty-four feet. It is computed that the great friction of these vastly heavy, rushing waters wear back the precipice towards Erie from one to three feet per year. As the velocity of the current of the stream increases, approaching the cataract, the friction increases, wearing the stone pavements of the channel, making a fall of sixty feet in one mile above the cataract.

History says that the first white man who looked upon these Falls was a French missionary, called Father Hennepin, in the year 1678. Below the Falls the river narrows abruptly, and passes with a very rapid current through a deep gorge, varying from six hundred to eight hundred feet wide, and three hundred feet high. The great wonder of the place, produced by the art and skill of man, is the two suspension bridges hanging across the river. The upper bridge, nearest the cataract, was designed for foot passengers and light carriages, and stands in full view of the Falls. The lower bridge, two miles below the cataract, was built for the passage of railroad trains, and is principally controlled by the New York Central and Great Western Roads. These bridges are supported by vast wire cables hanging upon towers standing on the solid rock on each bank of the river. These cables appear like large ropes suspended over the roof of two high houses standing far apart, and hang down between them near the ground, fastened firmly near the ground. The towers of the upper bridge are one hundred feet high on the American side, and one hundred and five on the Canadian side. The space between them, from center to center, is one thousand two hundred and sixty-eight feet, six inches. The distance between the anchors of the cables is one thousand eight hundred and fifty eight feet. The cables are composed of nine hundred and thirty-one No. 9 wires. The supporting strength of the cables and stays is computed to be sufficient to support a load of three thousand tons, or six million pounds. The fact expressed by these figures does not appear to the eye of the beholder standing upon the center of the bridge, as it swings in the wind and quiveringly vibrates by the moving carriages and passengers; one moment rising under your feet, the next sinking as if the frail looking cables were giving way, and you might be plunged into the angry waters foaming and leaping one hundred and ninety feet below you. The sight is awfully grand and fearful at that point. The wildly rushing maddened waters, as they tumble over the ragged rocks on the mile course of the rapids, apparently quieted into a little smoother current, as if overwhelmed with fear as they approach the precipice where they take the terrible leap into the boiling chasm below, presents a scene of indescribable grandeur, which mightily impresses the heart with the power of the great Creator.

Here we stood with the broad, deep, unbroken sheet of green-tinted waters majestically rolling over the high precipice, while the falling flood looked as if painted by a skilfull hand into delicately shaped belts, from a beautiful green to snow-white foam. The solid sheet is here and there broken by the resisting atmosphere, which carries the spray in a constantly rising cloud far up into the air, producing a continuous shower of gentle rain.

The Niagara suspension bridge, or R. R. Bridge, is two miles below the falls, and is of enormous strength. It is the work of Mr. John Roebling, of New Jersey, and was begun in 1852. The cost of its construction was five hundred thousand dollars, and the first cars crossed it on the 8th of March, 1855. The height of the towers on the American side is eighty-eight feet; those on the Canada side seventy-eight feet. The bridge is eight hundred feet long, twenty four feet wide, and two hundred and fifty feet above the water. The water under the bridge is three hundred feet deep; making a vast chasm under the bridge of nearly five hundred feet in width, and five hundred and fifty in depth. It has four enormous cables of about ten inches in diameter, which contain about four thousand miles of wire. The ultimate capacity of the four cables is about twelve thousand four hundred tons. The total weight of the bridge is eight thousand tons.

CAVE OF THE WINDS.

This is one of the most grand and wonderful sights at the Falls. It is one of nature's strangely located, curiously built, and grandly furnished halls. It is an excavation made by the boiling waters in the soft substratum of the precipice, leaving a portion of the hard limestone rock arching overhead as a roof, thirty feet beyond the base. On the other side is a high wall of falling waters. This falling flood looks like a quivering curtain, presenting in the sunlight beautifully variegated hues, with a grand arch of a brilliantly tinted rainbow. The cave extends down the stream one hundred feet in length, one hundred and thirty feet in height, and thirty feet in width. It is unceasingly filled with an awe-inspiring music of hoarse thundering melody, which awakens all our latent energies of mind, and fills the heart with fear and adoration. This body of water, falling with such weight and velocity, causes rushing currents of air, which, throwing a drenching spray in all directions, produces a scene like a howling tempest of terrible sublimity.

The awful grandeur of these Falls is best realized, standing beneath the vast floods as they shoot far out from the dizzy cliff, and fall with crushing weight into the vortex of roaring, thundering anarchy below. The vastness of these Falls may be more fully comprehended when you understand that it is computed that above seventeen hundred thousand tons of water fall perpendicularly one hundred and sixty feet every minute. Their mighty weight falling such a distance produces a crushing, thundering sound unlike anything we ever heard. Standing under the cliff, looking at this immense sheet, twenty feet deep, and more than a thousand feet wide, shooting like an arrow out over the high, projecting stones, forming an arched roof, makes it seem as if the Almighty was throwing a great lake with terrible power from some vast force-pump into the boiling, foaming abyss below.

The atmosphere has not ceased to vibrate with the deep-toned music of this waterfall for unmeasured ages in the past. The rushing waters have not ceased to leap from the dizzy height into the deeply excavated chasm, and hasten to the calmer bosom of Ontario, through the historic ages of empires and dynasties. They heed not the march of time, the enactment of kings, or the tramp of armies. The rising sun awakens no new echo, nor does the silver moonlight hush one in silence. In vain do the frosts of winter challenge its onward flow, or the heat of summer attempt to exhaust its unfailing fountains. Its thunder and foam will doubtless continue until Jehovah shall suddenly evaporate its vast supplies with the fires of the last day. J. C.

BUCHANAN, MICH.

We left Lockport, N. Y., Friday morning, Oct. 2nd, and passed through Canada, P. Q., from Suspension Bridge to Detroit, a distance of two hundred and thirty miles, on a mail train. It was slow and tiresome. This part of the country in Canada is very level, and appears to be good farming land, some of it well cultivated; but the buildings and artificial improvements are quite deficient compared to many parts of the States.

We took a night train from Detroit, and arrived at Buchanan, Mich., a distance of one hundred and forty-eight miles, about six o'clock in the morning, and found Bro. D. Mathewson waiting for us at the depot. It seemed good to see, among so many strangers, one smiling face of an old friend and christian brother, ready to conduct us to his open door, where Christ's weary pilgrims are always received to share his abundant hospitalities. Wr found Sr. M. a true helpmeet to her husband, and an affectionate sister in Christ; so that we enjoyed with them the sweetness of home and the happiness of christian associations.

The church at B. is one of the largest and strongest, financially and spiritually, in the West. They have a good house of worship, which is a very great advantage to any church; and are enjoying faithful pastoral care and labor, which we think is essential to the permanence and growth of all christian churches. Eld. D. Mathewson has been Pastor of this church for about a year and a half. His labors have been blessed of the Lord to their union, strengthening, and spiritual advancement. They have a good Sabbath school, in which adults and children are all interested; this makes it efficient in labor and influence, and causes it to become a powerful auxiliary to the church and meetings, in bringing the young to a saving knowledge of the truth. This church is blessed with a few members of excellent executive abilities, and they are put in their proper places, which constitutes a great element of strength in the body. Many of our congregations are suffering a serious lack in that department; some, because they have no such members, and others, because jealousy or envy crowd such out of their proper position. When a christian church has all of its members occupying their respective places in the body, according to their high calling (and God will call none to a position they have not ability to fill), it is strong to accomplish the great work of evangelizing men and honoring Christ as a leader. Satan, understanding this, labors to displace the members of christian churches by exciting some with a false ambition to occupy higher positions than they have ability to fill, and crowding others out of places to which they are called of God. All should make it a subject of earnest prayer, to ascertain their calling of God, and labor earnestly to faithfully fill it in the fear of Him who hath appointed them to a holy work.

We enjoyed very precious seasons of worship and communion with them for four days, when we left them to be immediately plunged into deep mourning by one of their oldest and most respected members being instantly killed by a locomotive on the railroad. About one hour after we left B. for Union Mills, Ind., Bro. Weaver attempted to drive across the track, when a stray engine, without a train, struck him, dashing out his brains, giving him not a moment's warning of the approach of death. Who can tell the anguish of grief that tore the hearts of his loving family when the news echoed, in the home he had just left, that husband and father was dead? May God bless the weeping widow and fatherless children with the glorious assurance that the grave will not long hold its captives, but that families now cruelly scattered will be gathered to the land where bitter partings and woeful absence will not be known.

ADDRESS TO MISSION SOCIETY,

The importance of the truths committed to our trust affords a reason why we should do more than any other corresponding number of people, with the same means. We think it is not arrogance, nor boasting, to say this. The light seen in the prophecies relating to the coming of Christ, also on the nature of man, the destiny of the wicked, the inheritance of the saints, the end of sin and Satan, should cause us to put forth every energy we possess to spread these glorious truths wherever the children of men dwell. We have reason to praise the Lord with all our hearts for showing us how to obtain immortality, and for the exposure of Satan's lie to Adam and Eve, on the belief of which is based every false system of religion in the world.

Consecrated, holy men, having a single eye to the glory of God, who love the work, who are not ashamed to tell the whole truth; prudent men, kind, unsectarian, are needed to spread this gospel of the kingdom among all nations. Men who love the work more than the wages; the Giver more than the gift; the sinner more than the honor of being instrumental in his salvation; men dead to flattery and frowns, but ever true to Christ; humble, patient men, governed by principle and not by policy. Men as true in the dark, as when watched in the light by the multitude. There is a wide door for such men, and an abundance of work. To all such, the Lord has promised to be their "sun and shield." Let them put on their armor, and go boldly forth like David to meet Goliath, and their success is certain, their triumph glorious.

In looking over the world to-day, taking a glance at the hosts of Satan marshaled and marshaling with defiant advance for the final conflict, we may well say, in the language of the youthful David, as he met the giant Goliath at the head of the Philistine host, who had defied "the armies of the living God," "Is there not a cause?" Is there not a good reason for this assembling to devise means to meet the embattled legions of the powers of darkness? What is

THE OUTLOOK?

Let us take a bird's-eye view of the present state of things on our planet, and the omens for the immediate future. Morally, as just before the flood and the destruction of the cities of the plain, the aspect is alarmingly dark, and daily becoming worse. Paul's prophetic description of the last days is now historic and, present:—"This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false-accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away." This prophecy is definite, its fulfillment accurate.

Said a writer in the London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy: "The religion of the day is . . . easy-minded," "second-rate," "hollow," "feeble," and "uncertain." Said Cotton Mather: "When the Lord shall come, . . . what else will he find, almost, but the whole church as it were a dead carcass, miserably putrified with the spirit and manners and endearments of the world." Said a writer in the Christian Era: "At the present time there seems to be a most universal conformity to the world on the part of many professed christians." He goes on to say: "I have never known a time when there was so much to sadden the heart, and wound the feelings of the true disciple." Said Robert Atkins, of Liverpool, Eng.: "Holiness of heart, and Christ's example, are the only things that Satan fears; and all partial piety, and half-hearted christianity, are Satan's glory, and the church's shame." He also says: "Apostasy, APOSTASY, APOSTASY, is engraven on the front of every church." Says Dr. Stevens: "We confess to the grievous inroads which conformity to the world has made in our members, not merely a conformity of our lives to the fashions and frivolities of the world, its spirit of selfishness, its spirit of covetousness, its spirit of recklessness, its spirit of enmity towards the truth, its spirit of living for the present, irrespective of the great hereafter; the form of godliness, indeed, has not been cast off, but the life of godliness has departed."

Fifteen clergymen in Rochester, N. Y., have published the following conclusion: "The prevailing standard of piety among the professed people of God is alarmingly low." Any amount of facts might be presented to show the prophecy of Paul is now fulfilling. Fashion and folly, vanity and vice, boasting and backbiting, pride and poverty, lying and licentiousness, are all covered with religious cloaks to hide their deformity and deceive the people. The perils of "the last days" form our surroundings, and afford an imperative reason for increased missionary labor. The life-boat is required in the storm; the fire engines should be where the flames are sweeping through our dwellings; the light-house should illumine the darkness when the storm rages on the coast of danger; the watchman is most needed when the foe is near and strong. Spiritually, the storm, the floods, the flames, the artful foe, are bursting forth with fiendish fury against all that is pure and holy, in order that the broad way may be filled, and the narrow path deserted by Zion's faithful pilgrims.

With the infernal perils staring us in the face, what is the duty of the hour? Shall we hide? Shall we desert? Shall we be silent? Nay, but sound an alarm from the hill-tops and valleys, north, south, east, and west. The King of kings leads the way, and says: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." "Is there not a cause?" Is this the time to sleep? to rest? to lay aside our armor? just as we are to engage in the last great conflict that shall decide the fate of a thousand million of human beings? Is this the hour to confer with flesh and blood? or to seek to save a good name by withholding the present truth? Is this the time to lay up treasures on earth to be devoured by moth and rust? Shall we now fold our arms in quiet ease, while our fellow beings are struggling with the foaming waves, dashing on the rock-bound shore? or shall we stretch forth a brotherly hand to rescue them from the agonizing perils of these last days? Shall we have the Meroz curse upon us for not coming up to the help of the Lord against the mighty?

This is not the hour to cry "peace and safety." The alarm should be sounded every where,—"Behold, the Bridegroom cometh!" Our papers, tracts and books, should be scattered in all directions like autumnal leaves; and every watchman should have the trumpet to his lips, standing on the watch-tower, echoing the warning notes that proclaim the approaching dawn of the coming morning of eternal glory. It is a blessed privilege to have a share in the closing work of earth's eventful history. It is truly a "high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

"SERIOUS DECAY."

It is certain that, amidst the assumed prosperity claimed by different denominations, there is truly a "serious decay" in the spirituality of the various evangelical bodies. Increase of numbers is not sure evidence of an increase of vital godliness. And the fact that a serious decay was apparent was what aroused some sixteen earnest ministers to start the campmeetings in 1867 for the promotion of holiness. Since then twenty-one National meetings have been held for this object, accompanied with wonderful results.

The Christian Standard, published in Philadelphia, and ably edited by Dr. Lowry, one of the campmeeting association, has an editorial in the number for Oct. 17th, in which it is said:— M. G.

"There is serious decay in our church. Notwithstanding our brilliant successes which have shot like beams of divergent light through a hundred years—notwithstanding our material prosperity,—our numerical strength—and our high consideration and respectability in the nation, and among the churches, yet there is insidious decay, both at the heart, and the extremities of our ecclesiasticism. Many of our members never were converted. Others who have been justified, have relapsed, and are now living in actual sin and condemnation. Others are only spasmodically spiritual and devout. Their religion is fitful, superficial, and badly intermixed with the alloy of worldliness. Nor are they in such relations to our peculiar means of grace, as to create a probability that they will gradually thicken into living christians, by the use of only ordinary agencies. The great majority of our members have totally abandoned that institution, in which the question is propounded, how does your soul prosper? As a consequence, most other services which are a test of spiritual life are given up.

If this be so, are we not in many places like the tree, which is being girdled at the root by an unseen worm? How shall we counteract this decline, except by the multitude of holy experiences? And can this be done without a resort to extraordinary appliances? Has it been done by our ordinary ministrations during the last quarter of a century? Much good, no doubt, has been accomplished; but has the work of scriptural holiness, according to the Wesleyan idea, been perceptibly advanced during that period? Have not the books, the nomenclature, the meetings and the spirit of this great perfective, and powerful salvation, been gradually disappearing during all this time, within the sacred fane of Methodism?

Where are the saintly witnesses, and burning testimonies of other years, that "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin?" Where are the crowded assemblies all aglow with love and bursting with irrepressible desire to speak a word for the Master? Is there no decline in our aggressive temper and action? Has the spirit of sacrifice suffered no abatement? Is there no more conformity to the world or connivance at fashionable sin now than in primitive times? But if there has been no impairment, no wasting or decay in our church life; yet is it not true that we stand on the border of a new and epochal development of spiritual religion? Are not sister churches feeling a holy uplift? Are they not striving to put themselves permanently on a higher plain? Has not the Lord made the church at large hungry for the bread of sanctified life? And does not a special demand need a special supply?"

INFORMATION FOR THE CURIOUS.—As some have desired to know the design of the "T. C. A." brotherhood, we would say it is for the same object as were the "Band Meetings" among the primitive Methodists, in Wesley's time,—the spiritual benefit of its members. This was its only object, and it has been used for no other purpose. We have seen it stated that its members had "grips and pass-words." If this is so, not one of its members knows what they are. Will some one, who does know, please give the desired information, that we may make it public. M. G.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 13th, 1874, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

FROM BRO. J. C. SMITH.

Dear Editors, and all the saints scattered abroad, Greeting:—Peace be with you all, from our Father in heaven, and his dear Son, in whom all the fulness of God dwelleth.

The Crisis has come this week laden with good things, as usual. It cheers my heart to press forward toward the land of promise, when reading the many letters and articles found in its columns. I do praise the Lord that there are men who are willing and able to defend the cause of Christ, and who do not shun to declare the "whole counsel of God," whether men will hear or forbear.

The Advent Christian Mission Society is doing a noble work. Hundreds, yea, thousands, are being enlightened and brought to the knowledge of the truth through its instrumentality. I know, by observation and experience, something of the work being wrought. The millions of pages of tracts are having their designed effect, as they are scattered by thousands of seed sowers. How clear their explanations of the "gospel of the kingdom," "saints' inheritance," "coming of Christ," "signs of the times," "state of the dead," "prophecy," "resurrection," "judgment," "destruction of the wicked," and "the glorious reign of the saints made immortal on the earth." O! what stirring themes these all are; and what a power, by the accompaniment of the Spirit of God, these great truths are having all through the land wherever they are scattered. And my prayer is that a more earnest effort may be put forth in these last closing moments of time. All through this great western field doors are open for laborers; thousands are perishing for lack of knowledge. O that more seed sowers may be sent forth to scatter the "word of the kingdom!"

Since our last letter to the Crisis we have had three tent meetings and two protracted efforts, one of a week, and the other of four evenings and over Lord's day. Bro. Sheldon was with us at the three tent meetings, at Topeka, Manhattan, and Clyde. The word spoken by him was of divine origin, and had its designed effect. Every point advanced was made clear and plain. Night after night, and day after day, he set forth the truth in its true light, warning the people of their imminent danger, of the near approach of the day of the Lord. I wish all in the State could have attended the meetings. At Clyde, our last tent meeting, we had a blessed season in the Lord.

Bro. Godfrey and wife, from Nebraska, came down to help in the work. We found them to be true-hearted followers of Jesus, and ready at all times to speak a word for him. Bro. Sheldon returned home with them. A number of brethren and sisters came in from a distance to enjoy the feast, and went home well paid.

We parted at this meeting with reluctance and a sad heart, yet hopeful of meeting again in paradise restored. O! what a joyful meeting this will be—

"When salvation is completed,
And tribulation ended,
And the spotless robes prepared,
For the bride to be adorned,
In the jasper walls be crowned,
Saying worthy is the Lamb,
In the New Jerusalem."

From our Clyde meeting we went with Bro. Roberts and wife to their home at Lake Sibley, Cloud Co., where we labored a week for the Lord. And we believe results for good will be seen when Jesus comes. We found a good home with Bro. R. and wife, and they love the truth and the precious cause of Christ, and are anxious to behold its prosperity; and we do believe that if some judicious laborer would go there, a good work might be wrought in the name of Jesus, and they would receive a hearty welcome.

Our next meeting was at Dickinson Co., where we labored last spring. Were with them four evenings and over Lord's day; had good attendance and good meetings, and the little company were once more cheered on their pilgrimage journey. Many of our brethren and sisters are moving out of the State on account of the great dearth, and the grasshopper raid, which took almost everything in many portions of the State.

From Dickinson county we came to our brother's home—Arvonia, where we found all well. Sunday, Oct. 11th, went to Melvern, Osage Co., ten miles away, and had two meetings. The Lord blest, and the glory be his. We commence a series of meetings there next Sunday evening, and continue over the following Sunday. Pray for us, that we may do all for Jesus. From your Bro. and Sr. in mission work,

ANOTHER GOOD BOOK.—We put upon our table this week, fresh from the press, Rev. S. H. Platt's new book, "Power of Grace." It is the most complete setting forth of the power of divine grace to save from acquired habits, special inborn perversities and the natural appetites, that has ever been published in this country. That the book will meet with a large sale there can scarcely be a doubt.—Christian Standard.

TENT MEETINGS.

Monday morning, Oct. 19th, finished our tent meeting at Fall River, Mass., after a successful meeting of ten days. The people came out, and, as at all of our meetings, the interest increased from day to day. Although the weather was cold and uncomfortable at times, still the people would come to the tent, and we did not fail to have a good congregation each evening. Not knowing of one of our faith in Fall River when we commenced, the meeting developed the fact that there were numbers scattered about the city not known to one another. This gave them a chance of seeing each other, and exhorting one another, "and so much the more as they see the day approaching." The meeting was a good one. By the help of our brethren the seed was thoroughly sown, and the gospel of the kingdom, with a soon coming Lord, was attentively heard by many who never heard it before.

The last Sunday it rained in the morning, deterring some from attending; but it cleared off, and the tent was filled with people, deeply interested to hear the signs that our Eden home is soon to be enjoyed by the true Israel of God. It was with deep regret that we left them in this interesting state of things, but duty seemed to demand, and the cold weather compelled us to take down the tent, and leave the field for the time being; but I hope it will result in the establishing of a meeting where the freedom of the gospel may be enjoyed by the lovers of Jesus and his coming in Fall River.

Thus ends our State Conference Mission Tent Meetings for this season. I have never felt more the assurance of obeying the will of my Master on my thirty years' pilgrimage than while laboring under the tent in these new places. The Lord has in a special manner said—This is the way, this is the work; go teach all nations I am soon coming, and convert all you can under this gospel commission, and bring them into love with Jesus, and a loyalty to his government, and a waiting for his Son from heaven.

We have found good people wherever we have been, who were weeping between the porch and altar, and praying that some door of hope and light might be opened where the power of God could be brought to bear upon the people, so as to sweep away the refuge of lies by this last-day false standard of religion. The disciples are not few who are groaning and praying for a better state of things—a lighter atmosphere, and more heated with the Holy Spirit of God and his living word. Shall we not help them?

This mission work must be kept up. You that have helped in this Godlike work, by your prayers, words, money, and influence, have done well. The Lord will, or has rewarded you. God bless you all with more of the Spirit of the Master, and help us to be awake to the wants and needs of the perishing. Thus end our never-to-be-forgotten tent meetings for the season.

THAT SECRET SOCIETY.

A report is being circulated that a few leading men among us have organized a secret society, with signs and grips known only to them. Evil hearts will surmise, and designing men delight in circulating reports calculated to injure others, that they may better carry out their purposes.

As my name is used in connection with the report, I feel that duty demands a statement of the facts.

About six years ago a brother suggested that the preachers form a society for mutual watch-care over each other, and that any report injurious to the character of any member should be investigated, and that any member of the society, hearing a report detrimental to the character and influence of any other member of the society, should report such to him personally, or by letter.

The members of this society were to look after the interests of each other as public men. All preachers in good standing among us were to be invited to become members.

Nothing secret was planned or purposed. Members were to have a pass-word by which they should be able to recognize each other when desired.

The proposition did not meet with the general approval of the preachers, therefore the society was never organized, never had a meeting of any kind; in fact, the society never existed. A constitution was drawn up, a few names were signed, and that was the end of it.

After about six years, for some object best known to the parties, this thing is thrown into our ranks, and the cry is raised—a "secret society" exists among our leading men; look out for them.

I have only to say, men who have done this ought to blush with shame, if they were acquainted with the facts, and if not, Christianity would require them to become acquainted with them and state things as they are. Evil surmising, and backbiting, and busy-bodies in other men's matters, are an abomination to the Lord and to all good men.

The only object in the above statement is to inform the uninformed, that they may not be misled by insinuations, and answer letters received upon this subject.

Let us be men, brethren.

FREE CHURCHES AND CHURCH FINANCE.

What do you suppose Christ thinks of the present mode of conducting church finances? If Jesus were now to alight upon earth and build a church, and assume its pastorate, would it be necessary for men to pay money in order to have seats in that church? From what you know of Christ's treatment of the widow with two mites, and of Mary Magdalen, and of the poor man by the wayside, do you think that a man's position in that particular church of Christ would be regulated according to the number of dollars that he could pay? No, says every man, that idea would be abhorrent to Christ. Well, then, I say it ought to be abhorrent to us. Do you wonder that there have been so many troubles in the churches—that many of them have fought like beasts at Ephesus, fought about the architecture, fought about the choir, fought about the minister, fought before church, fought after church, fought all the week?

Some of you know that the greatest conflicts of the last fifty years have been church troubles. If our churches were all regulated by the principles of Christ's religion, do you not believe that there would be a cessation of such combats? "But," says some one, "we must stick to the old plan, lest we shall not get on successfully in our finances," as though the present mode of conducting church finances were a success. Far from it. Three-fourths of the churches of Christ in this land are in debt, and in three-fourths of them the income does not equal the outgo, and, at the end of the year, a few generous men have to come together and make up the deficit, or some general effort is made on the part of the congregation to regulate the indebtedness. Ay, the regulation of church finances by the past mode is a positive failure.

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

Everybody knows that churches are the poorest pay, and that if a bank or an insurance company were conducted in the same slipshod manner, so thoroughly inefficient, that it would be discredited and wiped out of existence. If the old mode of conducting church finances in the religious organizations had been thoroughly successful, then we might be on our guard; but as the fact is, in nine cases out of ten, it has been a failure; I say there is no danger in floating off from it.—Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

CONFERENCE REPORT

Of the Advent Christian Conference of Northern Pa., and Southern New York, held at Little Marsh, Tioga Co., Pa., Sept. 25th and 26th, 1874.

Conference called to order by the President. In the absence of the Secretary, A. H. Briggs was elected Sec. pro tem.

DELEGATES—H. Head, Tremont; A. Mallory, Westfield; O. Conley and C. Avery, Little Marsh; Sr. A. More, South Creek. The Troups Creek, Turner Creek, Hornellsville, Woodhull, Ripley, East Brookfield and Ward churches were not represented.

MINISTERS PRESENT—Benj. Butler, D. B. Hunt, E. H. Eggleston, A. H. Briggs, E. C. Cowles, J. T. Ongley, C. F. Sweet, and W. Fletcher. Ministers not present—Ira Slocum, W. Marlatt, J. W. Taylor, J. D. Chamberlain, J. H. Sawyer, and J. H. Benson.

The following committees were appointed: Business—C. F. Sweet, Benj. Butler, and J. T. Ongley. Devotional—E. H. Eggleston, S. Gardner, and H. Head. Tellers—R. Kelsy, M. Gardner.

Officers elected for the ensuing conference year: President, E. C. Cowles. Vice President, E. H. Eggleston. Secretary, A. H. Briggs. Treasurer, S. Gardner. Adjourned.

Afternoon session. J. W. Taylor's resignation and withdrawal were presented and referred to the business committee. Adjourned.

Conference met at 10 o'clock A. M., Sept. 26th. Minutes of the last session read and approved. Brn. Seymour, Moore, and H. Zeigenfuss were received into the conference by vote. The business committee presented the following:

Whereas J. W. Taylor, by acts both cruel and void of natural affection, together with acts of perfidious treachery towards his wife, Lucy Taylor, has, in the mind of this conference, of which he has been a member since its organization; and

Whereas, he has offered to this conference his resignation, and also a proposition to withdraw, in which proposition he indirectly confesses his guilt, but persists in it; therefore,

Resolved, That this conference cannot give him an honorable withdrawal, but feel it to be a solemn duty to God, to themselves, to J. W. Taylor, and to the world, before whom he has disgraced himself and them, to discontinue his membership of this conference; and as he is determined in his evil course towards his family, let him be to us as a heathen man and a publican; willing, however, to forgive when he shall return to his deserted and deeply aggrieved wife, and do deeds to prove his repentance to be genuine, and from the heart.

Resolved, That we, as a conference, do hereby withdraw our hand of fellowship from him forever, unless he by a genuine repentance and retraction shall do his duty to his now deeply aggrieved family. C. F. Sweet, J. T. Ongley, Benj. Butler, Committee.

The above report was unanimously adopted. C. F. Sweet and J. T. Ongley were appointed as a committee to correspond with Eld. W. Marlatt in regard to his membership with this conference.

Churches reported: Tremont, Westfield, Little Marsh, South Creek, and Ward. Not reported: Troups Creek, Turner Creek, Hornellsville, Woodhull, Ripley, and E. Brookfield. The Troups Creek church was dropped from the roll.

E. C. Cowles, A. H. Briggs, and J. T. Ongley, were elected ordination committee. J. T. Ongley and E. H. Eggleston were elected a committee to visit the Woodhull church. The committee on ordination reported in favor of the ordination of Bro. Wm. Fletcher. The report was approved by vote of conference.

After services in the evening, Bro. Fletcher was set apart to the work of the ministry in the following order: Introductory remarks by Bro. E. C. Cowles; prayer by Bro. J. T. Ongley; right hand of fellowship by A. H. Briggs; charge by Bro. C. F. Sweet.

The treasurer reported fifty-five cents now in the treasury. The right hand of fellowship was extended to Brn. Henry Zeigenfuss and Seymour Moore.

Eight sermons were preached during the session, two social meetings held, and the Lord's Supper celebrated.

Conference voted to publish the minutes of this session in the World's Crisis and Advent Christian Times. Adjourned to meet at the call of the President.

A. H. BRIGGS, Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Bro. T. L. Waugh.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—We are exhorted to stir up each other's pure minds by way of remembrance; and especially is this necessary now that we are so near to the end of all things, when the standard of living is so low, and so many have lost their first love. How glad I am that Jesus never forsakes those who trust in him. He knows how weak we are. He is willing to forgive and cleanse from sin, even after we have wandered far away from his loving arms. Oh, the wondrous love of Jesus! It is past our comprehension. And I would nevermore grieve him by any act of disobedience, or refuse to do his bidding.

I feel more than ever determined to live in harmony with the word of God, and to accept it fully as the "man of my counsel." I know it is a strict rule, but none too strict. I must be holy if I live a christian life; and I exhort all to seek a state of entire conformity to the divine will. Get the old man of sin entirely destroyed. It is sin that mars our peace, and keeps us in bondage. When Jesus comes in and takes up his abode in our hearts, how we rejoice! What peace we feel where once was condemnation. I have felt of late that I must and will have this fulness in Christ, this enduring power, to enable me to live as I should live. I am getting nearer to him, I believe. Be faithful a little longer, and we shall have our just reward.

West Morris, Ct.

From Sr. Martha Knowlton.

As you have requested short letters on experience, I thought it my duty to tell a little of the Lord's dealings with me. I am a sufferer from nervous disease, and at times it deprives me of sleep for a number of nights in succession, so that I am brought very low in consequence. But what I want to testify to is the sustaining grace of God in these deep trials. For indeed they are the deepest I have to endure, but praise the Lord, he sanctifies to me my deepest distress. Yes, verily it is a fact that I get my greatest blessings out of these fiery trials. I never get blest however until I am perfectly patient and submissive to the will of the Lord. Then he pours his blessing upon me, and soothes my disordered nerves, and gives me sleep. And he has taught me, too, that nothing can befall me without his permission. So I have to cease reflecting upon the causes of my troubles, knowing that I have committed myself and all my interests into his care and keeping.

"Other refuge have I none,
Hangs my helpless soul on thee;
Leave, ah! leave me not alone,
Still support and comfort me."

I have at times gloried in my infirmities, and felt the power of Christ rest upon me. I have also had all irritableness removed at once that was caused by sickness. Praise the Lord.

I saw a piece in the Crisis some time since, in which the writer makes some inquiries about these nervous troubles, in connection with enjoying the blessing of full salvation. So I write this for those who, like me, are suffering with like disease and infirmities.

"Salvation, oh the joyful sound!
What pleasure to our ears;
A sovereign balm for every wound,
A cordial for our fears."

May the Lord bless it to such. I am now in the evening of life, and looking forward with joyful anticipation to that day when sickness and sorrow will vanish away.

Portsmouth, N. H.

From Bro. C. L. Percival.

I had fondly hoped to be at the Alton Bay meeting this year, but, as before, was disappointed. An important change took place in my circumstances, which resulted in my leaving my home in Canada once more, and removing to this western world, for how long Father only knows. If I can only be enabled to do all his holy will, and honor the blessed Savior as he deserves, and be found in the work when he comes, it is all I really care for. It is a fearfully benighted place here in relation to present truth and present duty, and I am looking earnestly to the Lord for direction and help, that I may do my duty, and let my light shine, if possible, to save some.

Nothing gladdens me so much at present as the news I get in reference to the work of full salvation, which is moving, it seems, in all directions. I attended one session of a meeting with this object in the city of Bloomington, near here. It was a precious season. This work points unmistakably to the fact that the Master is coming speedily. God speed the work.

Do you remember, Bro. G., what you said to the people of the Baptist church in Nevada City, Cal., two years ago last spring? It was to the effect that if they received the message, God would bless and prosper them beyond all they had ever enjoyed; but if they refused, he would forsake them, and they would be scattered and come to nought. I have just learned the full result. They refused to let you present your message in their house, and their pastor lost the light and spirituality that he enjoyed at that time, and left them, and went away to Oregon. The members became divided and backslidden, and now there are only three or four members left, and their house is in the hands of the Methodists. God will never let his word or his servants be despised with impunity.

PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

As it is getting late in the season, we shall not try to have any more tent meetings this fall. We closed up here in Fall River last evening (Sunday, Oct. 18th) with good feeling, and a strong desire on the part of the people to continue the meeting, but it is too cold to continue longer under the tent.

Now is the time for protracted meetings in meeting-houses, halls, school-houses, or kitchens, or any comfortable place where the people can be gathered together and benefited. Now is the time to rally and work, The judgment is at hand. Let us be found working. Those in new places who desire a protracted meeting in their vicinity, write immediately, and we will try and do what we can. ENOCH MORRILL, for the Com.

APPALLING FAMINE IN SYRIA.

A gentleman resident in Damascus writes: "The money sent was a most opportune assistance. We were giving and giving out of our own purses. I had resolved, if necessary, to become bankrupt rather than see my fellow beings perish with starvation. When those ten liras came I felt like falling on my knees to thank God. And now we are caring for the very worst cases, the actually starving, who are to be numbered by hundreds in this place alone.

You have no conception of the miseries of the famine. To the south whole villages are being depopulated; they pour out their famished inhabitants, who come in troops upon us—haggard, ragged, emaciated beggars, some of them almost in a dying condition when they get here. And we see the heavens again becoming brass and the earth iron—there is appalling fear of the repetition of last year's dearth! If we have a failure of crops again this year in Asia Minor, unless the benevolent world wakes up, the people must perish by scores of thousands. And, heaviest of all, the animals have died, so that there is no mode of conveyance for supplies."

The Rev. Mr. Farnsworth, of Cesarea, writes;—"A region at least two hundred miles square is now suffering from actual starvation. Thousands of the inhabitants fled before winter came on to the regions to the south-east, but the great mass were unable to get away. The number of beggars that throng this city and larger towns is immense, and their condition very terrible. We are constantly giving money or bread at our door, and our hearts are pained at the very sight of the sufferers. The worst of all is that, while the country is almost destitute of all kinds of food, the future is yet more alarming. No rains. Burning south winds, clouds promising rain only to tantalize the starving people."—Signs of Our Times.

Notices.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—The Lord willing, a protracted meeting will be held at the meeting-house in Porter Village, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 12th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands. It is expected that Brethren E. S. Moulton, and J. T. Jordan, will be present and assist in carrying on the work. Come, brothers, come, sisters, come one and all. WM. T. SAWYER.

WHERE shall our New Hampshire State Conference be held? The time has been set for the conference to convene, but no place fixed to hold it. If there is a church within the limits of the State that is unanimous in requesting the conference with them, let them inform the Secretary, C. H. Fletcher, at once, that the appointment and arrangements may be published. Otherwise, we shall be under the necessity of indefinitely postponing the meeting. A. ROSS, President. C. H. FLETCHER, Sec.

A SERIES of meetings will be held in Depot Hall, Steep Falls, Me., commencing Wednesday evening, Nov. 11th, at 7.30 o'clock, and continue over the following Sunday. Eld. B. S. Emery and J. Hill are expected to be present and preach the gospel. Come all who can, and lend us a helping hand. We need your assistance. C. H. SWEET.

TENT MEETING.—The tent is up again in Fall River, Mass. Meetings afternoons and evenings the coming week, and as long as the weather will permit. Come, brethren, and help save men and scatter the light. L. BOUTELL.

THE DELAWARE DISTRICT A. C. CONFERENCE is hereby called to meet and hold its second semi-annual session at the Second Advent Christian Hall, on Seventh street, below Poplar, Philadelphia, Pa., commencing Friday evening, Nov. 13th, and continue over the Sabbath. This conference embraces the District of Columbia, Delaware, New Jersey, and Eastern Pennsylvania. It is earnestly hoped that every church sympathizing with us will be represented, either by letter or delegates. Every church or religious body co-operating with this conference, is entitled to one delegate, and an additional delegate for every ten members. All letters of correspondence for the conference can be addressed to Edwin King, 1716 Francis Street, Philadelphia, Pa. A. G. JAYNE, President. EDWIN KING, Secretary.

TO VERMONTERS.—At our annual conference at Bethel, the State Committee were urged to carry the gospel of the kingdom into every new field which opened a door, and especially to offer a week of labor for any five dollars pledged by an isolated brother or sister living in a new field. This was to encourage individual effort and sacrifice on the part of the isolated. We want to hear immediately from those places where labors are desired, that we may make due arrangements to meet the demands. If you are too poor to raise five dollars, and yet the door is open for a meeting, write us just the same as though you raised the money. Write to me at Waterbury, Vt., or to A. A. Hoyt, Plainfield, Vt. Write full particulars of circumstances, people, time, and place. Write soon. H. F. CARPENTER, President of Conference.

THE Lord willing, we will commence a meeting at Woodhull, Steuben Co., N. Y., Oct. 29th, and continue over the following Sunday. Hope the brethren and sisters will pray for us, that good may be done in the name of the Lord. A general invitation is given to attend. JOHN T. ONGLEY. E. H. EGGLESTON.

J. G. SMITH and J. W. WHITE will preach in Farmington, N. H., two Sundays in each month, as long as it seems duty. J. G. Smith the first, and J. W. White the third.

P. S. As there is an appointment for the first Sunday in Nov., J. G. Smith will be there the second. Will preachers coming to Farmington please notice this arrangement. J. G. SMITH.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting held in Salisbury, N. H., at the Union meeting-house, commencing Friday, Nov. 27th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands. C. H. FLETCHER. D. F. LEAVITT.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—We commence a protracted meeting at Freemansburg, Pa., Saturday, Oct. 31st, and continue for two weeks, as the Lord may direct. I. N. WILFONG.

THERE will be a meeting of days in Jay (Bean's Corner), commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 19th, and continue as long as thought best. Brethren will call on Lewis Bean, and others, for homes. H. B. Sevey, F. E. Blaisdell, L. G. Martin.

AS I HAVE received many pressing invitations to visit Maine, and other parts east, and labor with the Lord's children in the cause of Jesus and the salvation of the perishing, I will, by the help of the Lord, arrange to devote from four to six weeks to this special work. I am preparing to leave about the 15th of Nov. All the brethren who are willing to lay aside side issues, wishing my labors, and who will in the name of the Lord work in this direction, and for the advancement of the truth, and the great cause of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, will please address me early at 135 North 22nd street, Philadelphia, Pa. After Nov. 20th, Crisis Office, Boston, that appointments may be made in time. I. B. WILFONG.

I EXPECT, if the Lord will, to visit Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Mass., and perhaps other States, the coming winter. Any one wishing an appointment, or protracted meeting for their place, please drop me a line on a postal card, with a one cent stamp on it, to Richmond, P. Q., Box 31, and I will endeavor to supply them as far as I can. Our work is almost done, and soon the Lord will cut it short in righteousness. F. M. DRAKE.

HAVING supplied the church in East Concord one half of the time during the past year, I intend closing my labors with them on the first Sunday in Nov. After which time I shall be at liberty to labor in places as the way opens. ENOCH MORRILL, South Deerfield, N. H.

WILL Elder N. G. Reed please send his post-office address to 85 Fifth St., Chelsea, Mass.?

Those wishing to preach at Bonny Eagle, Me., will please correspond with Orrin Smith.

THAT BOOK.

"History of the Second Advent Message, Doctrine and People."

This work is now ready for all. It contains the history of the rise and progress of the proclamation of the Second Advent of Christ, near at hand, from A. D. 1820 to the present time, in America, Europe, Asia, and Africa; with sketches of the great reformations accompanying it; of many of the chief pioneers associated with it; the great opposers, and their futile efforts to defeat the work. Records of its rapid progress, and of many of the remarkable manifestations of God's guiding hand in the work. Discussions, lectures, sermons, dialogues, and chief points of doctrine advocated by the various classes of believers in the Lord's soon coming.

Records and tables of the prophetic times of Daniel and John, as advocated by the chief Protestant writers, all of whom terminate the periods between 1836 and 1880. A sketch of Luther and his times, compared with ours. His portrait, and portraits of twenty Second Advent pioneers, with discourses on Daniel 2nd, 7th and 8th chapters, illustrated with fine wood cuts, with much other valuable matter.

Our subscribers will be supplied at prices agreed on when orders with cash (and 20 cts. for postage) are received. All who wish to buy the work will be supplied, postpaid, at $3.50. As our object is not to make money, but to have this message and its history go as far and as cheap as possible, we put it as low as we can. We have endeavored to make it a book that all who are really associated in this great movement will buy, and that real inquirers will think best to buy. The book contains 711 octavo pages, neatly bound in cloth, gilt side. I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

THE BIBLE BANNER.

This is a large, illustrated, monthly paper, conducted by A. A. PHELPS, A. M., assisted by an able corps of Contributing Editors. It contains various departments—Doctrinal, Prophetical, Practical, Bible Class, Miscellany, and Items of Interest. It is devoted to a critical exposition of Bible Truth, and an earnest advocacy of Bible Salvation. Only One Dollar a year, with a book or engraving free. Address THE BIBLE BANNER, New York City, Box 2289.

The World's Crisis and Bible Banner will both be furnished to one person for $2.75 a year. Address all orders for both papers to the WORLD'S CRISIS, 160 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

GERMAN TRACTS.

A new German Tract just out: "Does the Bible teach the Immortality of the Soul?" A reply to a letter from a German theologian in Prussia.

Other tracts as follows: "The Fifth Universal Kingdom, or Kingdom of Christ on Earth." "What is Man?" "Future Doom of the Ungodly." "Resurrection," etc.

LOUIS REIMER, No. 639 North Eighth Street, above Wallace, Philadelphia, Pa.

A NEW BOOK.

"THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul.—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express.

It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject. Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express. AG'T.

CHRISTIAN LABORERS.

Rise and labor for the Master;
Work while it is called to-day;
For our time seems flying faster
Every year that rolls away.

Be not idle nor half-hearted;
Up, and do with all your might;
Grace and strength will be imparted,
Making all thy burdens light.

Look! the fields are white already,
Far and near, in every land;
Come, be earnest, firm and steady,
Reap, and gather for the Lord.

Say not I am weak and feeble,
Others can do more than I;
Only try; do what you're able;
Use, not hide, the talents given.

'Tis no matter—precious saying—
What the talents, great or small;
Just improve them, no delaying,
This is all the Lord requires.

Cease ye, then, such vain excuses,
There's no time nor place for these;
They are only self-abuses,
View them in what light you please.

You can go through streets and alleys,
Lanes and hedges, by-ways, all;
Over hills and through the valleys,
Seeking for the poor and lost.

You can give to feed the hungry,
Clothe and shelter those who need;
Comfort mourners, calm the angry,
Help the weak, and cheer the sad.

You can seek, in dark, vile places,
To reclaim the fallen there;
Tell them, though of different races,
Jesus came to seek and save.

Thousands thus for Jesus labor;
You can do as well as they;
Every one can help his neighbor
In the straight and narrow way.

Rouse ye, then, the world is calling;
Sleep no longer by the way;
Thousands into line are falling,
Join the host while now you may.

STATEMENT BY BRO. COLEGROVE.

At the recent session of the Conference at Yorkshire, it was voted that the following, which was read by Eld. C. Colegrove, be forwarded to the Crisis and Advent Christian Times for publication:—

With regret for the burden and pressure of manual labor which somewhat unexpectedly prevents my attendance at the conference this evening, and regret for the disappointment felt by any on account of my absence, nevertheless I will seize the passing moment for a brief reference to some topics which may possibly be convenient or timely for mutual consideration.

For what are we convened? For instruction and for encouragement; to do and receive good, while we professedly engage in religious exercises; professedly seeking, and unquestionably needing, the divine blessing. How may we promote the welfare of men, advance the interest of truth, and gain strength and blessing as a conference? The people named "Adventists" hold some views unlike those of the vast majority of professed christians. They hold them with confidence and tenacity, building and resting broadly and explicitly on the word of God. How often, and how extensively, shall they advocate them in communities where they have already been thoroughly presented? How shall they administer the word with skill, with understanding, in right proportion and proper balance, without excess or exaggeration, in such a way as to enjoy the approval of the Master? How shall they evince absolute faithfulness, without either overmuch zeal and vehemence on the one hand, or overmuch modesty, reticence or timidity on the other?

Adventists are accustomed to think for themselves; they do not lean excessively on each other, or rely on precedent, tradition, learning, or authority of man. In view of this personal independence, connected with honest personal investigation and study of God's word, and almost entire freedom from the least obligation or restriction of a written chapter of beliefs, as embodied in a creed, are they sufficiently cohesive as a body? Do they love each other enough? Are they sufficiently sectarian? Or, if that is not the proper way to express the query, are they not too independent of order? Some see beauty and some deformity in the wonderful mechanism of Methodism. The discipline, the organization, the authority, on the one hand, and pretty general obedience on the other, certainly have advantages, though there may be some grave injuries sometimes involved, and new proof that the best of human devising is still imperfect.

Adventists often feel, and they may even say—"We expect the kingdom and coming of Messiah, Christ, so earnestly and so constantly, we have not time to organize." Shall each believer believe and live as one in a measure alone or aloof, for fear of, or through objection to, denominational connection? To leave an old church or denomination is a serious step. Some there are who scarcely know just what to do. They take time for deliberation. They would do good to all men; help in meetings of the orthodox of various shades of opinion, and still they find no home rest, or the quiet of satisfaction in any of the orthodox opinions or communions as a whole. So they live waiting, expecting, and undecided to some degree in regard to precisely what is the best course in the matter of external relations. But one thing seems evident. There is great danger and some inconsistency in the entire want of system, or in what we might term very defective cohesion. There is some need of precedent, some need of uniformity, some need of mutual understanding.

Take the case of a man who has some gift to preach the gospel. He must provide for his family, or he is worse than an infidel. What shall he do? A want of system, or order, or enterprise, or whatever you please to call it, leaves him as a pastor to reason in this way: I would like to engage to some extent in my appropriate work of preaching. My one talent, or two talents, I must not bury. I have an account to give, and time is passing on with steady tread. Days and weeks go irrevocably by. But I have a world at home, a world of my own, a wife and dependent children. Food and raiment they must have. Support for myself and them, I receive little or none. Is my preaching acceptable? Am I in my right place? A man of any self-respect, and a man of spirit and honesty, will abhor to sit idly and ignobly down. He will not surrender himself to become a slave of shameful inaction. He says—"I have hands, and I will work. Paul made tents, and I can wield the implements of husbandry, the axe and spade, the shovel and hoe." And yet he remembers it is written—"They that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." Is it any wonder he is perplexed, disheartened, and tempted, and all the more since he holds upon his honor to defend and maintain the great truths of man's true relation to God as a Maker, and Christ as a Savior?—a relation of entire dependence, forasmuch as God gives no creature on earth any fancied independence, through a fancied natural immortality.*

After a long hesitation, and some misgiving of duty or expediency, I have finally concluded to propose to unite with your conference. This is with the conceded consciousness of constant and constitutional imperfection, and a desire for greater usefulness nevertheless. If obliged to toil as arduously as in the recent past, I cannot promise to attend many of the sessions of your conference. All sessions of religious conferences ought, of course, as much as practicable, to be marked with harmony. An agitator or disturber is hardly capable of being viewed as a friend; and I would not wish to think myself likely to be an impersonation of unrest, or an element of disturbance, but rather would hope to help to promote the dignity, the steadfastness, and the prosperity of all the body.

If I may be allowed a word further of a personal nature, I may add that I have looked at the subject of a reunion with my former Baptist friends, and a union with valued Methodist friends, in almost every aspect. I see no open inviting door, in a sense compatible or consistent with truth, or the love and maintenance of it, though I were ever so welcome to join them in any so called church relation.

We hope your convening here will be a great, and a mutual, and a lasting profit. We open to your occupation our comfortable place of worship with pleasure. May your exercises and deliberations be excellent and edifying. May you who have come hither from abroad, whether lay or ministerial visitors, be both the administrators and recipients of a blessing. There is much wickedness and worldliness here, as elsewhere, but there are some grains of gold here also, we trust.

The times of peril are truly great in our day. An old classmate of mine, and a professor in Madison University, who has just returned from a tour in Europe and Asia, says that all through Europe the great American scandal is a very prominent topic. In Beirut, in Athens, and in Jerusalem, it is discussed, and with a bearing unfavorable to the great accused. What an age, what a day, for such an astounding development to transpire, in which distrust and confidence, doubt and conviction so alternate, and innocence and guilt are so oppositely viewed, or painfully balanced in the public mind. Surely we need strength from God. We are most dependent, and a word from Him who calmed the sea and raised the dead can help us. His power can forgive and keep us. And until he shall come to regulate and rectify affairs, the misery of man will be great upon him. Satan will stalk abroad, and the poor earth reel and stagger under the burden of human madness and impiety. Let us hope that a better day will soon come, and that we shall be prepared to welcome it with a true and upright heart, sanctified from all our transgressions, and fitted by Jesus' grace for a place of honor and delight with him.

Friday evening, Sept. 25th, 1874.

* Note. I have little doubt that it is exceedingly dangerous, if not positively wicked, for any man to receive ten or twenty thousand dollars a year for preaching the gospel, or what is understood or esteemed by those who hear it, to be the gospel, unless a large part of such an immense income were given to the poor, or devoted to some good and benevolent use; but if it is wrong and perilous to receive such a pecuniary inundation, is it right to receive no more than the fourth, or the sixth, or the tenth of an income that would keep one intact from the almshouse or above destitution? But I leave this rather unwelcome theme.

NOTES OF OUR TENT MEETING IN BOOTHBAY HARBOR.

As I concluded to spend the hot season near the sea-shore for my health, and to spread the glorious of the soon coming of Jesus, with other important truths due this generation, we pitched our tent in Boothbay, Aug. 12th. This place and vicinity are noted for pleasures in the hot season. Seven years ago, one man carried out the company in a small row boat, now three steamers daily, and fifteen sail boats were employed for that purpose, running to Boothbay and other places in the vicinity. We can see by this, that pleasure-seeking is on the increase. Boothbay harbor is one of the best on the coast. Many a sailor has thanked God when they cast anchor in this bay, secure from the surging waves. It is estimated that seven hundred have fled into this place for refuge at one time.

This was a new place for our faith. One Methodist and one Congregationalist church composed the religious element of the place. I met the Congregationalist minister, Mr. Pike, and told him of our mission and work. Said he would be thankful if I could wake up an interest, as religion was very low in that place. I asked him if he would unite with us, although he might not believe all we should preach, but take hold and do what he could? He said he would. We found him a true man and a christian. He worked the best he could, and said he was interested in our preaching, although on the nature of man we did not think alike, also on baptism; but to the coming of Christ, the inheritance of the saints on earth, he had no objection. He gained friends from outside of his church, although opposed by some in his church for his course. He was independent, and much beloved by many.

Our meetings were well attended, and made interesting by Brn. Church, Thomas, and Densmore pitching tents with us, and uniting in labor; also by questions being asked on the destiny of man, his state in death, etc. Many heard for the first time on those truths which we hold so dear, and which it is our work to make plain, and give to each a portion of the meat in due season. Three professed to find pardon of their sins by yielding themselves servants to obey Jesus; others were reclaimed, embraced the blessed hope, and rejoiced in the light; others were deeply impressed that our position is correct, and that we had the truth.

One interesting case we will mention. A lady from the town of G——, in Mass., who was spending a few weeks with friends, came to our meeting, and heard about Jesus' coming; sleeping ones living again; the living changed; earth made new, filled with the glory of God; saints reigning there forever without sorrow. She came to the stand, and introduced the subject, saying she had been to our meetings, and believed what she had heard. Said she was brought up to believe people went to their reward at death, but could not see a consistency in bringing them back to be judged again at the coming of the Lord. She then said, "I am a sinner; what shall I do to be saved?" I said, With the heart man believes unto righteousness, but with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. "Why," she said, "I want to do something great." I told her she could not obtain it by works. I asked her if she was willing to confess Jesus, and ask pardon? Said she was. The next evening she arose before a large congregation, and said, "I am a sinner. I believe what I have heard, and never before have I seen anything real. Now I can see a solid foundation. I want to be a christian. Will you pray for me?" When the invitation was given for those to come forward that wanted to become christians, she came and was blest, saying, "Oh, how easy, how blessed!" When baptism was mentioned, said she, "I was baptized in my childhood." I told her that was no baptism. I then turned to Paul's argument in Romans sixth chapter. She said she wished to be buried with Jesus in like manner. Many witnessed the scene. It was blessed to see such calm obedience. The peace of Jesus filled her heart.

Our meetings continued three weeks. The interest increased until the close. We found two, who, in their early life were interested in those truths, but by living away from meetings had lost their first love. One said it had been nine years since she had heard one of our faith. At our last meeting, one man confessed the truth, which made a deep impression on many. Several rose for prayers. The tent was full, and many outside.

As we parted, some men took us by the hand, saying, "I will try and meet you in the kingdom." We bade them farewell, not expecting to meet until Jesus comes.

When I think of the judgment, I ask myself if I did all I could? Did I warn them faithfully? Did I keep back anything profitable for them? Oh, what an account we must give, as the light has shone on our pathway. God help us not to keep it hid, and be found among those, saying, Our Lord delays his coming. I believe we have but a few months more to work. May it be all to the glory of God, is my prayer.

REPORT OF THE NEW YORK A. C. QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

The New York A. C. Conference met in its quarterly session, pursuant to notice, with the A. C. Church in Yorkshire, N. Y., on Friday evening, Sept. 25th, 1874. A good-sized congregation assembled on Friday evening, and attentively listened to a few remarks from Bro. R. H. Bateman, founded upon Matt. 18: 19. The evening services closed in a good spirit.

Business session convened on Saturday, at 10 A. M. Meeting called to order by Bro. A. C. Newell. After singing, prayer was offered by Bro. C. Colegrove. In absence of the President, Bro. A. C. Newell was chosen President pro tem. In absence of the Secretary, Bro. R. H. Bateman was appointed Secretary pro tem.

Ministers present: A. C. Newell, Darien; C. Colegrove, Yorkshire; M. Vreeland, Shelby Center; Jacob Blain, Buffalo; R. H. Bateman, Lockport. Bro. F. Douglass arrived in the evening, but too late to take part in business deliberations.

Delegates received; A. Wiley and F. M. Wait, Springwater; B. C. Simons, Darien.

Upon their request, the Yorkshire church was received into the Conference; Brn. Andrews and Pierce being their delegates.

Report of Churches.

Yorkshire church has a neat and comfortable chapel. For the last year the society has not been as flourishing as it should have been, but of late there are indications of better days. They have been without regular preaching for some time, but are now considering the subject of securing a pastor to labor among them.

Darien church is still holding fast to the blessed hope, though few in numbers.

Springwater church reports a generally good condition, though at times a discordant element is manifest by the agitation of the "time question."

Shelby church reports a flourishing condition. God is working among them with saving power. Prayer-meetings are well attended, and with a lively interest.

Lockport church reports as still holding fast. Has of late been somewhat afflicted. Several families have been subject to severe sickness, but fortunately no deaths have occurred.

Ministers' Reports.

Jacob Blain reports the cause in Buffalo languishing, on account of not having sufficient means to provide a permanent place for public worship, and for sustaining preaching. He is eighty-two years old, and still retains to a remarkable degree his powers of mind and body.

A. C. Newell reports he is still laboring as the way opens. He attended the Springfield camp-meeting and was much benefited. Said the spirit of unity pervaded the whole encampment, and so far as he could observe, it was working in the entire body of Adventists throughout the United States.

C. Colegrove read a short essay, which was full of rich thought and much experience, with beneficial expediency.

The conference requested Bro. Colegrove to prepare his essay for publication in the World's Crisis and A. C. Times. We desire all to read it with careful attention when it appears. Bro. Colegrove was then received as a member of the N. Y. A. C. Conference.

W. Vreeland reports he is still laboring with the East Shelby church as their pastor, and also preaching in several adjacent places, where a strong desire exists to hear more of the word of God.

R. H. Bateman reports he is still pastor of the church in Lockport, but that he has been preaching part of the time for the Rochester church, who are still holding fast to the blessed hope.

Owing to sickness in their families, Brn. Hobbs and Moore were not able to be at the conference, while Bro. Low was engaged in a meeting at another place. We did not learn why the rest of the preaching brethren were not with us.

There being no other business before the conference, it adjourned to meet the next quarterly session.

Devotional Exercises.

Saturday, at 2 P. M., Bro. A. C. Newell, held forth the word of life. In the evening, prayer and conference meeting, after which Bro. W. Vreeland spoke with telling effect to a very attentive audience.

Sunday morning, we had a love-feast, which was a season of rejoicing. The people came flocking in from all directions. At 10.30 A. M., Bro. R. H. Bateman spoke from the word of God. In the afternoon Bro. A. C. Newell preached to a full house.

In the evening Bro. W. Vreeland again spoke with much earnestness, after which we all gathered around the Lord's table and partook of the emblems of Jesus' broken body and spilled blood.

Monday being rainy, Brn. Vreeland and Bateman visited with the people, and in the evening had another prayer and conference meeting, at which one aged man arose and said there should be a reformation in his heart. Tuesday was spent in visiting, and in the evening Bro. Vreeland spoke on the subject of following Christ.

We believe the conference has been a blessing in the hands of God to the church and people of Yorkshire. A lively interest is awakened, which, we trust, will yet grow and bring forth fruit unto eternal life.

GLORY, GLORY BE TO JESUS!

ADAM FRIESE.

Air.—"Glory, glory, hallelujah."

Chorus: Glory, glory be to Jesus!
Glory, glory be to Jesus!
Glory, glory be to Jesus!
I'm trusting in his name.

I'm trusting him to lead me,
I'm trusting him to keep me,
I'm trusting him to give me
A crown of endless life.

Cho.—My hope in him is centered,
Within the vail 'tis anchored,
Where he for me hath entered;
But soon will come again.

My joy in him's abounding,
My praise to him resounding;
The glory all redounding
To honor his dear name.

His precious love I'm tasting,
All fear and doubt outcasting;
His promises are lasting:
He soon will come to reign.

"That blessed hope" I cherish—
Ne'er will I yield, to perish;
But, by the Spirit nourished,
Keep "looking" for the Lord.

He'll come in clouds descending,
Ten thousand saints attending,
With shouts the heavens rending,
To raise his sleeping saints.

Then shall our eyes beholding—
Admire the King in beauty;
His glory bright unfolding,
His reign on earth begun.

And through eternal ages,
With his redeemed ones reigning,
And higher bliss attaining,
That kingdom shall endure.*

HOLINESS.

N. D. BABCOCK.

We had the pleasure of attending a Union Methodist meeting on holiness in Providence, R. I., several days ago. It continued some eight days. We must say we never attended such earnest, heavenly, Holy Ghost meetings in all our life. The preaching on holiness, entire sanctification, and a clean heart, was certainly the plainest we ever heard. There were very rich and clear testimonies at the prayer-meetings. It was a "union meeting" indeed. While there were scores and even hundreds forward at the altar for this blessing, all denominations were among them, even to Catholics; also ministers of all denominations, and many Adventists, and Advent ministers,—all one in Christ our Lord.

Providence has really been shaken. Many have found that to have their sins forgiven is one thing, and to have a clean heart and be filled with the Holy Spirit is quite another thing. Many little children, that knew no sin, were filled with the Holy Spirit, and all present knew it. Many became satisfied that the religion they had could never satisfy or save them.

We had also the pleasure of meeting with the colored sister, Amanda Smith, of New York. We found her one of the most heavenly women we ever conversed with. It is worth a great deal to any one to hear her talk, sing, or pray. Such deep and rich experience she has had seems to shine all through and through her. Never did I hear our Savior extolled and praised more highly than at their last love-feast, on Sunday morning. I thought, while I was sitting there, should Jesus suddenly appear, what a shout would go up from that company, saying, "This is Him whom we love." It could not be otherwise. While there are thousands that will understand the theory of Christ's coming, whom we fear will never be saved, there are thousands who know nothing of the theory, who will understand it in a moment when Jesus appears. All our prejudice, if we ever had any, vanished like dew before the sun. Not once during the entire eight days did we hear about an immortal soul or eternal hell; but did hear of the coming judgment, last days, and the resurrection.

We do not wonder, Bro. Grant, you received an impression at their meetings at Round Lake you cannot get over. So have I. So would all honest souls could they hear them. May the Lord help us to take down our sectarian walls, and believe Jesus will save some not of our fold.

297 Friendship St., Providence, R. I.

PITTSFIELD (ME.) CAMPMEETING.

This meeting is now organized on a missionary basis, and we think this session of it one of the best and most important ever held. A good degree of love and union prevailed among the Lord's children, who gathered in goodly numbers in the consecrated grove, where the power of God was manifested in the salvation of sinners, and the reclaiming of wanderers. There was preaching by the following Brn.: S. R. Partridge, Geo. W. Weeks, F. A. Baker, Thos. Rhines, A. W. Taylor, J. R. Hall, M. W. Corliss, I. C. Wellcome, A. A. Phelps, and H. L. Hastings. A number who decided to be christians, were baptized. It was said to be the largest collection of people ever seen at the river in Pittsfield to witness the ordinance of baptism. Good order prevailed through the entire meeting. The high sheriff and other citizens of Pittsfield very kindly offered all the assistance we might need in keeping good order, for which we think an expression of thanks is due.

Sunday evening, Bro. Jonathan Lane, of Dexter, Me., was set apart to the work of the gospel ministry by the laying on of hands. Remarks and prayer by Eld. F. A. Baker, charge by Eld. I. C. Wellcome.

A missionary fund of about $364 was raised in cash and pledges, to be used in publishing in Maine the gospel of the kingdom of God at hand. This amount does very well for the few faithful ones who love to help on this glorious work, so very soon to be finished up by the second appearing of our glorious Redeemer, who will say well done to those who have been faithful stewards over their Lord's goods. But shall we not have the full amount proposed—$500, before the end of the year? We believe the brethren and sisters in eastern Maine will (when they properly reflect upon this matter put their hands in their pockets, and at once make up the amount proposed.

Suffer a word of exhortation. Do we believe that in a few short months, or years at most, Jesus is coming, when all the golden opportuntties with which we are now favored to labor for the salvation of our friends, and the loved ones on earth, will be forever past? Do we believe, and deeply reflect upon the great eternal truth, that then we shall stand at the judgment seat of Christ, and give an account of our stewardship?

If we believe all this in our hearts, shall we not act just like it by denying self in all unnecessary things, and being temperate in all things needful, so that we may have means to put into the Lord's treasury, to help keep all the available force we have in the field? Also, that we may have tracts and books to scatter judiciously in our work for lost sinners, and feeding the flock of God? Oh, let us all awake more fully to the great importance of being "workers together with God" in such a blessed cause as this. It will pay well in this world, a "hundred fold" in this life, "and in the world to come life everlasting." Blessed be the Lord forever!

One who has had but very little of this world's goods, and has given $5, proposes to give $1 more toward making up the $500. Now, dear brethren and sisters in eastern Maine, will you not act as though you meant to do business for God, and not for self? The poor, and the children can get the blessing of being a cheerful giver, as well as the wealthy, by putting in a little, which is just as acceptable to our heavenly Father as the abundance of the wealthy. It is according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not, that calls down the blessing of God upon him. The Lord help us to act as though we meant, not only to be saved ourselves, when the last final struggle of a doomed earth shall come, but then to have the blessed privilege of seeing those who have been brought to Christ through the means which we ask you for at this time to help in proclaiming this glorious message of salvation from sin now, and salvation from death and the entire curse when the King in his beauty shall be seen coming in his glory, and all the holy angels with him. We hope our brethren and sisters who were not at the campmeeting will think it a privilege to respond to this call, by sending in at once their dollars, or scrips, or pledges, payable within the year; that we may have means to procure tracts and books, and be able to help on the living preachers of God's word, who go forth to hold protraoted meetings this fall and coming winter, should time continue.

Dear friends of Jesus, bear with me if I press this subject, for I feel that we are not half as earnest as we ought to be, seeing Jesus has done so much for us, and loved us with an everlasting love. Only about $150 more are needed to make up the $500. Shall we not have it forthcoming? Just think how easy it can be done, if all will take right hold of the matter, and send in ten, five, three, two, one dollar, or pledges, and others can send in fifteen, fifty, twenty-five, or ten cents in scrip, and thus no one would hardly know they had done anything. This would give all the children a chance to do good, and become workers with the blessed Savior in saving lost sinners. The Lord help us to open our hearts and pockets in the matter while time lingers, and salvation is offered to the perishing of this world. Oh Lord, increase our faith, and give us to realize that we are but stewards over the Lord's goods.

When you have read this, just sit down and write on a piece of paper, or postal card, the amount you will give, and your post office address, sign your name, and hand it or send it by mail to one of the following names of the campmeeting committee for 1876: O. HE LEADETH ME.

How sweet to the christian heart to know that "God leads me," as he assuredly will and does every one who lies submissive in his hands, and who prefers to have God's will done concerning them. Under these conditions alone, may we all be able fully to realize its sweetness. Willing to trust to his guidance, in faith believing that guidance will be given, how calm the heart grows! how plain the way appears! how trustingly we go on! and in looking ahead, how can we be fearful, when we know we have a sure and safe Pilot, who knows all the rocks, and reefs, and breakers, all the safe channels and smooth waters, and that if storms do overtake, he has power to break their descending force, and temper the wind to our bark; and when our life-voyage is over, he holds the key of that fair haven we hope and long to reach. To so many the journey is long, and rough with tribulation; but if the peace of Christ is ours, we feel that it atones for all. It sweetens the cup we must drink, it smooths the path we must tread, it lights up all the dark hours, and when overburdened, is a sure relief.

Oh! he is insane who settles down to this life with no thought beyond, satisfied with his wealth, position, family and friends; wealth may flee away, position fall, family die, and friends forsake; where then is he? Poor, and naked, and miserable, life is no security, for this is not our abiding-place, rather the journey to our home. Not here can we know the depth of joy and satisfaction possible to all; not here are we to reap all the fruits of God's bounty and love. This life is but the foreground in the picture of eternity—but the forerunner of another that is surely to follow; the filmy curtain must sooner or later be withdrawn, and show us the design of our present existence. Here is discipline, there will be rest; here is labor, there reward; here is seed and bud, there fruit and blossom; here is decay, there renewing.

God our Author, King of here and there, permits care and sorrow, trial and affliction to befall us, because too oft it is through these alone we seek him who hath the keys of heaven. It is often through the mists of sorrow we see the unveiled face of our Savior. They may make the way rough and troublous, but 'tis over rough ways and stormy seas to heaven. Here we must not expect rest and calm outside the Savior's love; but, thank God, with that blessed possession we can, like Paul, rejoice in tribulation. So let not him be disappointed whose wealth departs, position falls, family declines, and friends forsake, for we are nowhere promised redemption from these; but faith, looking ever upward, sees his star of promise in the heavenly kingdom, knowing if he leads us here, and we trust submissively to his guiding, it will end in glory, where faith is sight forever, and prayer is praise. So amid the surges of life, if we keep our hand in the hand of our Savior, and say, "Welcome, Lord, thy will, 'since only that is best for me,'" that same loving hand will draw us yet within the golden radiance.—Advocate of Christian Holiness.

GOD'S WAY AND MAN'S WAY.

God says: Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness, and all these (earthly things) shall be added unto you.

Man says: Seek first worldly wealth and fame and power; religion you can get on a dying bed.

God says: Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it.

Man says: Let prayer go, and work for what you want.

God says: Give and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over, shall men give unto your bosoms.

Man says: Charity begins at home. Why give to others that for which you have toiled so hard? Your own family may want it.

God says: Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.

Man says: Each man for himself. Look out for number one.

God says: Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven.

Man says: Make sure your worldly treasures. Heaven is a long way off.

God says: Whosoever hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?

Man says: What guarantee have I, if I give my earnings to the poor, that I shall not come to want myself?

God says: There is that that scattereth, and yet increaseth.

Man says: It is only by saving and hoarding what you have that it will increase.

Reader, what says your conscience? Is not God's way better than man's?—Christian Standard.

You may pray for greater strength for greater duties, but your present strength is equal to your present duty. Your duty will be increased when greater strength comes. You may see before you some desirable object of accomplishment, and may know your inability to accomplish it. While your strength remains unequal to the task it cannot be your duty to accomplish it, but you may pray God to give you strength to do it, and if, in answer to your prayer, needed strength comes, it may be your duty to go on and accomplish the work.—Wayside.

HOME AND HEALTH.

EVILS OF TOBACCO USING.

Tobacco using is a great cause of intemperance.

The most observant workers in the temperance cause tell us that they seldom find a whisky drinker who is not also addicted to the use of tobacco. The significance of this fact is apparent. Tobacco is stimulating. At first, a small quantity will produce the desired effect. Pretty soon, as the system becomes accustomed to its presence so that it is in a measure tolerated, a larger quid or an extra cigar is found to be necessary. After a time, it is found very difficult with any amount of tobacco to obtain that degree of stimulation necessary to make the individual feel natural, and so some form of alcohol is resorted to, and the concluding step toward drunkenness is taken. Yes; tobacco-using is the broad road which leads to drunkenness; and it is a failure to recognize this fact which has been one of the chief agents in rendering so futile the attempts of our well-meaning and energetic temperance reformers in combating the great foe of society and religion—intemperance.

Thousands of men have been won from the paths of drunkenness and restored to society as useful members; but a few months later found them the same infatuated victims of strong drink as formerly. Why did they fall? The insatiable thirst for the fiery draught, the maddening desire for stimulation, was kept alive by the use of tobacco, and they became an easy prey to their besetting sin.

Drunkenness can never be cured until tobacco-using is eradicated from the land.

Tobacco intoxicates.

Alcohol is not the only agent which will produce intoxication. Inebriation is as plainly the consequence of tobacco-using as of whisky-drinking. To be drunk, it is not essential that a person should be wholly delirious or insensible. There are all degrees of drunkenness; and when a man takes into his system any given quantity of either tobacco or alcohol, he is drunk, just in proportion to the dose. A man is just as truly drunk when he has taken only sufficient tobacco to produce a feeling of pleasant exhilaration as when he has taken so much whisky that he will courtesy to a lamp post, and go to bed in a gutter. The difference is only in degree. No man can be wholly himself—entirely sane, we may say, while under the influence of any narcotic or stimulant.

Tobacco-using spreads contagion.

Many instances have occurred in which the infection which gave rise to one of the most direful and hopeless of malignant diseases, was traced directly to cigars which were manufactured by diseased persons. Not long since, an occurrence of this nature attracted attention to a large Chinese tobacco factory in San Francisco. Upon inspection by a physician, it was found that a number of the hands were almost putrid with that terrible disease which is the penalty of vice, and which is unknown except among civilized nations.—Health Reformer.

CARE OF THE HAIR.

A writer writes thus on the care of the hair: "Putting up the hair of children in curling papers, breaks it and checks its growth; often pulls it out at the roots. Curling irons are fatal to the hair of both children and grown persons. The heat saps up the juice out of the fibers as effectually as fire or frost saps the vitality of a green branch, leaving it but a dry, withered skeleton. The practice which hair-dressers have of frizzing out the hair with a comb, to make the most of it, is one of the most cruel injuries that can be inflicted on the living hair. The comb cuts it in the act of frizzing it. You can test the truth of this by combing out the hair after it has been so dressed. The hair sometimes comes out by handfuls; and further, this process tangles up the hair, and a great deal of it is broken and pulled out in trying to comb it straight again."

If it ever becomes fashionable to dress the hair beautifully, nearly all the methods now in use will be done away with. Women seem to vie with each other to see which can make the head look the worst. The hair needs little care, but that little should be of the right sort.—Herald of Health.

For Cold Feet the best remedy is to dip them every night and morning in a basin of cold water, and afterward rub them dry with a coarse towel. To harden the feet, tannic acid as been used with success. Employ it in the proportion of five grains to a fluid ounce of water. To correct offensive smell of the feet, bathe them in a weak solution of permanganate of potassa; one scruple to eight ounces of water. For absorbing excessive perspiration of the feet, mix together seven ounces of the carbonate of magnesia, two ounces of powdered calcinen of alum, seven ounces of orris root, and half a dram of powdered cloves.

Digestion.—Saturate a piece of bread or meat with gastric juice, and it will dissolve. This is digestion. Add to such a mixture a little alcohol, and it will not dissolve. This is indigestion. Beware, then, of tinctures, or tonics, or bitters, or decoctions containing spirituous liquors. Shun all rum "tonics," and rely solely on the gastric juice, the finest digestive substance known, and free from the fiery curse of alcohol or other poison.—Science of Health.

It is only when the body is racked with pain, the mind weighed down with the burden of an aimless and useless existence, that we can fairly compute the value of that best of earthly blessings,—good health.

There is wealth in health. The healthy man who is poor in pocket has more wealth than the bed-ridden man who has many thousand pounds in his possession.

DEEDS OF CHARITY TO THE POOR.

D. F. NEWTON.

Little boys and girls, do you think of the poor these hard, chilly times—how much they suffer with cold and hunger? In our cities, fuel is dear, clothing is dear, provisions are dear. Some poor people have scarcely a shelter, much less a comfortable place to lay their heads, and are ready to perish for lack of fuel, food and raiment. Some children are left fatherless, motherless, penniless, without any to provide for them; no one to care, either for their bodies or their souls. Do you think of this, young friends?

Have you a heart to pity, a tear to shed, a dime to give? Are you provided richly with the comforts of life—a good house to live in, plenty of food and raiment, parents and friends to care for you? Above all, have you the blessed Bible, to guide you to life eternal? And are you thankful? Who gave you these blessings—distinguished you thus above the miserable, suffering, and often degraded poor? God? Yes, God—and what does God say? "The poor ye have with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good." "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, and shall not be heard." "Blessed is he that considereth the poor." Do you hear this, little folks—what God speaks? Should not every one of you say, from the bottom of his heart:

"The Lord is kind and good to me,
And very thankful I must be:
He clothes my back and makes me warm,
He keeps my bones and flesh from harm.
He gives me bread and milk and meat—
All, all I have, that's good to eat;
Oh, let me not forget the poor,
Who beg their bread from door to door
Who have no fire, nor meat, nor bread,
And scarcely where to lay their head.
The Lord is good and kind to me,
Kind and good O may I be."

"I was a stranger, and ye took me in; I was naked, and ye clothed me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

"Be thine the joy that angels know,
Who visit oft the abodes of pain,
With interest list to tales of woe,
And bid the dying live again."

How to do God's Will.—A teacher was explaining to her class the words concerning God's angels—"ministers of his who do his pleasure"—and asked, "How do the angels carry out God's will?"

Many answers followed.

One said, "They do it directly."

Another, "They do it with all their heart."

A third, "They do it well."

And, after a pause, a quiet little girl added, "They do it without asking any questions."

Lazy boys and girls make lazy men and women, just as surely as crooked saplings make crooked trees. The great mass of paupers in our almshouses and criminals in our prisons, have come to what they are by being brought up in idleness. Those who constitute the business and virtuous part of our community, those who make our great and useful men and women, were trained up in their early days to habits of methodical industry.

WHOLLY THE LORD'S.

ADAM FRIESE.

Wholly the Lord's, so let it be;
Myself and all I've given to thee;
All that I am or yet may be,
Be consecrated unto thee.

My hands and feet be thine, to move
By the sweet impulse of thy love—
Ready and cheerful to fulfill
Good deeds, according to thy will.

My lips shall speak for thee, my Lord,
And from the riches of thy word
Proclaim thy truth, thy love so dear,
Which casteth out all slavish fear.

My voice shall of the glory sing
Of my soon coming Lord and King;
And in defence of truth and right,
Its influence exert with might.

My mind, my will, my heart I give,
Wholly for thee, dear Lord, to live;
Controlled and guided for thy use,
Thoughts, acts, desires as thou shalt choose.

My love, frail off'ring, I bring thee,
Who first didst love and pity me;
Oh, may I grow in love to thee,
Through time and in eternity.

My life, my all is wholly thine,
Devoted to thy will—not mine;
Let me be moulded by it still,
Like plastic clay by potter's skill.

WHERE AND WHEN

Did the Sixty-nine weeks of Daniel 9: 25, commence and end?

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

Having in our former article established the point that "the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem" was by the authority of Cyrus, king of Persia, in the first year of his reign; we are now prepared to show where the "sixty-nine weeks" alluded to begin. They begin immediately on the issuing of said decree by Cyrus, which decree was issued at the termination of the seventy years captivity of the Jews; a great national event to the Jews, from which they could easily and correctly compute the sixty-nine weeks. The end of those seventy years captivity must necessarily be an eminently noted and marked event in their national history,—the period of their return from their long captivity in a foreign land. This would be as certain a period to reckon from, as the date of our American Independence on the 4th of July, 1776.

As these sixty-nine weeks were to reach to an important event, one of the most anxiously-waited-for events ever looked for, —the birth into the world of Israel's Messiah and King, and our Immanuel, God with us,—surely this event so grand, so glorious, would be distinctly marked, especially when a definite period to its accomplishment had been announced beforehand in prophecy. This announcement was made by the angel Gabriel in the first year of Darius, after Babylon had been taken by Cyrus. This Darius the Median was uncle to Cyrus, and is known in history by the name of Cyaxares. Cyrus, his nephew, after having taken Babylon, and settled his affairs, made a tour into Persia by the way of Media, where he met with his uncle Cyaxares, and delivered the kingdom of Babylon to him and married his daughter, with whom he had for her dowry the kingdom of Media, as Xenophon relates. The Scripture says of this Darius, or Cyaxares, that he "was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans." This was done by Cyrus. Although Darius was then reigning in Media, he had now added to his empire the kingdom of Babylon; but dying in about two years subsequent, Cyrus became the sole monarch of the whole empire. This brings us to the period alluded to by the angel Gabriel, in his communication to Daniel—"Know therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks." Thus we discover that Cyrus issued this command in about two years after this visit of Gabriel to the prophet Daniel.

Now here are facts, taken from the Bible and history (both in agreement, for Cyrus did succeed Darius, as all concede), which prove that Cyrus issued the command to restore and build Jerusalem two years after Gabriel's visit to Daniel, recorded in the ninth chapter. Now let the reader turn to the first chapter of Ezra, and onward, and read of the issuing of this command, and its effect upon the captive Jews in Babylon, causing them to return from said captivity back to Jerusalem, to build their city and temple,—and then say if he thinks the word is now fulfilled as announced by Gabriel in the going forth of this commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. How preposterous, then, to reject this evidence, that Cyrus issued this decree, and travel down some sixty years after Jerusalem had been built, by virtue of said decree, to the time of Artaxerxes, and make a decree issued by him in the seventh year of his reign (granting Ezra his request to return to Jerusalem to look after the interest of the Jews already there, and seeking their reformation in the law of God), "the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem."

We think we have now clearly shown where "the commandment" went forth "to restore and to build Jerusalem"; that it was in the first year of Cyrus, and only there.

The second point in our inquiry is, When did the sixty-nine weeks commence? The chronology of the first of Cyrus, as generally received, fixes his sole reign to begin about B. C. 536. Now sixty-nine prophetic weeks, or four hundred and eighty three years, from B. C. 536, fall some fifty years short of reaching to the birth of Messiah; and this is the reason why the decree of Cyrus is rejected as the starting-point for these sixty-nine prophetic weeks. But we ask, Is this a sufficient reason, especially when said chronology rests merely on a human basis, and when conflicting statements among historians exist as to dates for past events; but more especially when this popular chronology is antagonistic to the express word of God? The express word of God pins this commandment (from which the sixty-nine weeks are to be computed) to the first of Cyrus, to agree with the prophetic utterances in Isa. 44 and 45. Now as the sum total of these sixty-nine prophetic weeks is but four hundred and eighty-three years, and scriptural statements of prophecy make it absolutely impossible in justice to compute them from any other event than the decree of Cyrus referred to, it follows that only four hundred and eighty-three years can elapse from the first of Cyrus to the birth of Christ; therefore the sixty-nine weeks must date from the first year of the reign of Cyrus, king of Persia, and at no other period or event. Then in order to show or point out accurately the exact date for the first of Cyrus, we must determine the exact date of the birth of Christ, and then reckon back four hundred and eighty-three years, and we shall find the exact date for the first of Cyrus. But here again we find a dispute of about four or five years as to the exact date for the birth of Christ; yet it is generally agreed that he was born in the fifth year before our A. D. If this date for his birth is correct, then the date for the first of Cyrus would fall in B. C. 488, or four hundred and eighty-eight years before our A. D. But in adjusting the vulgar with the true era for the birth of Christ, there cannot possibly be an error of more than four or five years; therefore, within this compass we may determine the date of the first of Cyrus, or of the sixty-nine weeks. If this be so, some may say, How can we tell certainly or exactly when any of the prophetic periods in Daniel's prophecy commence or end? We reply, we cannot, only so far as we can demonstrate exactly the number of years since the birth of Christ. While it is conceded and believed by us that Christ was born before the death of Herod, yet as to the exact period that intervened we cannot positively determine; there may have been two, possibly three, years; but this matter relates merely to the adjustment of the true date of the birth of Christ with our A. D; and there cannot possibly be but four hundred and thirty-three years intervene between the birth of Christ and the first of Cyrus, where the sixty-nine weeks begin.

That the sixty-nine weeks end at the birth of Christ, and not at any subsequent event, is the only natural and consistent conclusion to which we can come, in view of the evidence that Cyrus issued the decree for the return of the captive Jews from Babylon and the rebuilding of Jerusalem, from which event the angel Gabriel declares that sixty-nine weeks shall reach unto Messiah the Prince. The expression "unto Messiah" is the same as "unto Christ"; both mean the Anointed One; therefore the expression in Dan. 9: 25, "unto Messiah," is the same as in Matt. 1: 17—"unto Christ." In the latter instance no one will deny that the birth of Christ is referred to. Then why may not the former refer to his birth?

The same angel Gabriel who announced to Daniel the period to elapse from the going forth of the "commandment" "unto the Messiah," nine months before this sixty-nine weeks period expired, "was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to the virgin Mary," and announced to her that she should "conceive in her womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS"; and then at the exact termination of the sixty-nine weeks, the angel of the Lord again appeared unto the shepherds on the plains, or hills of Judea, saying, "Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Savior, WHICH IS CHRIST THE LORD."

Was not Messiah, or Christ, just as truly so at his birth, as at his baptism, or at his manifestation to Israel in his public ministry and miracles? Was he not adored and worshiped by the wise men from the east at his birth? And did not "all the angels of God worship him" when he was brought into the world? But, says one, Was he Messiah the Prince at his birth? Yes, just as much a Prince at his birth as at his baptism. He always was the Prince of life—before his birth, at his birth, and ever afterwards; for his "goings forth have been from of old, from the days of eternity." Isaiah prophesied of him as being "the wonderful, counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace." And the multitude of the heavenly hosts" that "suddenly appeared with the angel Gabriel, in their high anthems of praise recognized him as the Prince of peace at his birth. A Prince is a sovereign, a ruler, or a king's son. All these titles apply to Christ. He was the God man, the Immanuel, God with us, at his birth, as he has ever been since. The highest titles of eminence and distinction belong to Christ. Christ has been the "Anointed One" ever since he has occupied the relation to man as Redeemer, Deliverer, and Restorer, and that has been his relation to man ever since the fall in Eden.

It is true, at his baptism in Jordan, by John, the Holy Spirit descended like a dove and rested upon him, as an outward token of the divine recognition that he was the Messiah, the sent from God; as also the "voice from heaven"—"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. On two other occasions, a voice from heaven was also heard; one on the mount of transfiguration, the other just before the last passover, when he rode into Jerusalem. John 12: 28. In this latter case, Christ declared that this voice from heaven was not for his sake, but for the people's sakes that heard it; in confirmation that Christ was performing his official work with the divine approbation. The case of his being baptized by John, who remonstrated as being unworthy to perform the ordinance to the sacred person of Christ; but Christ said, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." None of these things affected or changed the character of Christ in the least, but, as our great Exemplar, he conformed to external ordinances.

He was just as much Messiah, or Christ, or the Anointed, before these external observances were administered to him as afterwards; therefore, when he was born into the world he was born Messiah, the Prince. This title of Prince he possessed before he was born; for Gabriel said to Daniel that none held with him in the great matters which he communicated to the prophet, but Michael, "your Prince"; the same as in Dan. 12: 1,—Michael, "the great Prince." In neither case can it apply to an angel, for an angel is not called a prince in the Bible. Therefore the sixty-nine weeks that were to reach "unto Messiah the Prince" found their fulfillment at the birth of Christ

We think we have now presented evidence sufficient to prove our points;—first, that the sixty-nine weeks commence at the first of Cyrus; and, second, that they end at the birth of Messiah; and therefore there can be but four hundred and eighty-three years between these two events, instead of five hundred and thirty-six; which latter date rests entirely on a human basis; and this human chronology has almost entirely controled prophetic expositors in their application of the sixty-nine weeks of Dan. 9. Therefore the large majority of the Christian church has been led astray into darkness.

It has been the confession of said expositors, as the strongest reason for evading and rejecting the decree of Cyrus, from which to compute these sixty-nine weeks, was this difficulty in chronology, which placed the first of Cyrus B. C. 536, instead of 483, the true date.

We wish to add, in closing this part of our subject, a word more on the expression, "Unto the Messiah the Prince,"—that it must refer to the birth of Christ: this is evident not only from the simple and natural impression produced on the mind in reading this expression, which applies it to his birth, but also from other prophetic announcements, where none will dispute that they relate to the birth of Christ. First, Isa. 9: 6—"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given." Here is all the manifestation of Christ that the prophet speaks of, while he was on earth; he passes over all other events, such as his baptism, crucifixion, resurrection, and strikes the point when "the government shall be upon his shoulder," touching the most noted and remarkable events concerning him: he makes the word "unto" apply to the birth of Christ in both instances in which he uses it.

Now if the Holy Spirit, speaking through Isaiah, attaches such importance to the event of his birth, is it consistent to suppose that the angel Gabriel in announcing the time of his coming beforehand, and in using the same word "unto" "Messiah," or Christ, passes over the great event of his birth, and makes the word "unto" refer to the period of Christ's baptism?

Again in Micah 5: 2—"But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall He come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Israel." Here, the coming forth, or manifestation of Christ was at his birth, as all concede. The word "unto," in this passage, none interpret as applying to the period of his baptism, although the word "born," as in Isaiah, is not used.

From these brief considerations it is evident that the expression in Dan. 9, "unto Messiah," must apply only to his birth;—here terminate the sixty-nine weeks, or four hundred and eighty-three years, of said prophecy. Amen.

CONFESSION.

True confession brings to light that which is down in the heart. If the heart be evil, then confession brings that evil to the surface, and acknowledges it before others. If the heart be true, then a confession brings out the truth to others. Our condition should always be that of willingness to bring to light and to the knowledge of others, that which we feel within our own hearts.

The unrighteous should confess his unrighteousness, and the righteous should confess his righteousness. None should be ashamed to speak the truth. If one's heart is the abode of unrighteous promptings, then a confession should be followed by a cleansing. And when cleansed, the person should confess the condition, and give praise to the power that hath made him thus.

It is a common thing among those who profess to be the children of God to confess unrighteousness in themselves, and to go no farther. This is an error. If unrighteousness dwells in us, it need not be our continual condition. We may be cleansed. We may be made righteous. Jesus has power to cleanse us. And if we doubt it we dishonor him. He can cleanse and keep us clean.

How many people doubt this. And because of their doubts they are constantly in bondage to sin, and always confessing unrighteousness. It is well to confess unrighteousness if it is within, and then it is well to find deliverance from this condition. The majority of the professed christian world to-day are but a mass of convicted sinners.

Their own confessions declare them to be thus. They seek forgiveness, and believe they have it, because God says he will forgive. They make a profession of belief in Jesus as one who will forgive sins, and they adopt a form of godliness, but they go no farther. They feel human emotions of gratitude to a Savior who died, but no heaven-born emotions of the Holy Spirit.

To all such Jesus is waiting that he may give the perfect cleansing. But it is esteemed by some presumption on the part of man, to claim purity in this life. If it were on the part of man to cleanse his own being, then it would be presumption, but when we come to Jesus, a confession of his ability must not stop short of a perfect cleansing. It is an act of presumption to refuse to allow the Savior to do a perfect work in our beings. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." Let it stand out clear in your evidence for Christ, and let it be known by all, that you are clean from sin. Be not afraid that you will go too far, if the glory is all given to Christ.

We were conversing with a stranger not long since, and we took occasion as we frequently do, to inquire if he was a child of God. He hesitated, and said he hoped he was. "Don't you know that you are," we inquired? "I think I am trying to be one," said he. We pressed him still closer with questions, and made some remarks that such confessions were dishonoring to God, and that a christian should never be afraid to speak squarely for Jesus, when he exclaimed in the presence of those around, "Yes; I am a christian, and I know Jesus saves me."

Such should ever be the speech of those who profess to be the people of God. They should be able to say this without condemnation, in the presence of neighbors and acquaintanes, feeling that their life would bear the same witness that their words testified concerning their condition.

There is nothing that will more strengthen the heart, and drive away Satan from us, than to confess Christ. The soul that believes in Christ as a perfect Savior, and comes out squarely and confesses him to be such, has a strength imparted to him from God, before which no foes can stand. The faith that grasps the complete work of Christ, and the heart that confesses it, receives a salvation that overcomes every foe, and is thus "kept by the power of God."

How much is often lost by not confessing. Being unrighteous—confess it. Being forgiven—confess it. Seeking the cleansing, and having it—confess it. Being kept by the power of God, and the indwelling of the Holy Ghost—confess it. So shall you honor God, among your fellow men.—Christian Times.

WALKING WITH GOD.

GEO E. LEE.

To walk with God, and yield our selfish, worldly interests to the divine will, that we may be in perfect harmony with our Maker, is an attainment that is rare. Not only is it an occasional circumstance now, but it was in the days of prophets and kings of long ages ago. But we know that those who have "walked with God," have always found favor in his sight. Because Noah was "a just man, and perfect in his generations," he "found grace in the eyes of the Lord." And it was for this reason that he and his family were the only persons preserved from a watery grave, while the rest of the inhabitants of the earth had become so corrupt, that God, in looking upon them, declared they should be destroyed. Thus they perished on account of their own choice, like many who are doomed to perish now, from choosing to walk in the lusts of their own eyes, rather than to walk with God.

There are special blessings promised to those who "walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." For if they walk after the flesh, they will become "carnally minded, which is death;" but if they walk after the Spirit, they will mind the things of the Spirit, and consequently will become spiritually minded, which is life and peace. It is impossible for those who walk after the flesh to please God, for "the carnal mind is enmity against God." And if we do not please God, how can we think of pleasing ourselves, and enjoying that sweet peace which comes from believing his promises?

When we are walking with God, we shall find no affinity in that which is not God-like. We shall not long for that which is earthly and corruptible, but will look away to the heavenly and incorruptible which awaits the "sons of God." There will then be no difficulty in our discerning who the "sons of God" are; "for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." And if we are children of God, we are "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ."

Who, then, does not want to be an heir? Who would not choose "life and peace" in preference to "death?" "Heirs with Christ" have the assurance of a far greater inheritance than any heir to earthly possessions ever did, or can hope for.

It is far better to feel the approving smiles of a just God continually than to covet the wealth and honor of this world. Not only is God pleased with the ways of those who walk with him, but he will preserve them from the violent hands of the wicked. He will not forsake them in danger, though thousands may fall at their sides.

O, then, let us walk in the way of the Lord, and not forsake him as did Amon the king, whom his servants conspired against, and slew in his own house. May the Lord help us to walk "in the way of good men, and keep the paths of the righteous," that we may walk with the redeemed when "they shall come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads."

COMMISSIONED BAPTISM.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

"Go ye, therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost"—Jesus, MATT 18: 19.

In order that the commission be properly observed, there should not only be regard had to the mode but to the liquid employed. The candidate should be immersed in water. According to the testimony of the New Testament, nothing else could be ever used but water. The commission certainly does not say in what the "baptizing" should be done, but water alone had been used when the commission was given, and the indication of what was meant was plainly evident. John baptized in the river Jordan. It was the great baptistry which he used in his ministry, and the picture of the transaction was fresh in the minds of the disciples of Jesus. Those of them who had been baptized by John remembered still their own baptism, and others had received it from other hands. Those who have passed through such scenes know how freshly they are held in the mind.

Any who are accustomed either to participate personally in such an event as a baptism, or to stand on the bank of the stream or lake and witness it, are accustomed to think of it as baptism. Those who have only seen persons sprinkled may have a mental picture corresponding thereto; but, to those who have stood by and seen a baptism, or have been immersed in baptismal waters, there is only one impression, and that in harmony with the scene and the Scriptures. Even the sight is sometimes enough to convince one, who has only been "sprinkled," that "this is the way," and he has obeyed gladly the Savior's command.

Baptism must therefore be immersion in water; and it is as essential that it be "in water" as that it be "immersion." We know that those who "sprinkle" say, that "with water, is just as well"; that water is the necessity; but whether the candidate or the water is passive and receives the other, is no matter,—only use water and it is all right, whichever is applied to the other. We question, however, whether one can receive the water and be "baptized." The water must receive him, or he cannot be a subject of and receive the ordinance. If one be baptized, then something must be done with him, not to him; the very word implies it; and so he must be put into the water; then certainly the water is not to be sprinkled upon him. Some even claim that water cannot always be had; as on the burning sands of the desert, and then sand may be substituted. "Sand" baptism! What an idea! There may be an immersion in sand, but there can never be a scriptural baptism in it.

The plea that water cannot always be had, and at best not always in sufficient quantities for immersion, fails. We have yet to hear of the first instance in history where one proposed to be baptized and yet failed of the privilege because water could not be had. If one is really determined to obey God, he will find a way to do so, whether there be obstacles in his way or not; and it often tests his disposition to obey, and he receives a greater blessing when he is obliged to be at some inconvenience to find the baptismal waters.

God is not obliged to make the path of duty the most comfortably convenient possible. There is a cross to be borne, and it is not too much if there is some trial in bearing it. God must be obeyed, whether it be easy to do so or not, and cheerfully and gladly, too, as he will be by all who really love him, though they go "through floods and flames" to do so. It is not, then, a reasonable excuse for "sprinkling" that it is "more convenient"; or a bar against "immersion" that 'it is not always easy to attend to it"; for, among the sands of the desert, or in the icebergs of the poles, one can find some means of obeying God. If not, he will not be condemned for neglecting the duty, and certainly he cannot be more justified if he substitutes something else for it.

We purpose to proceed now to examine those texts in the New Testament which treat of the method of baptism, for the purpose of noting the uniformity of its observance, and the oneness of the conception of it which the apostles had, and those who were associated with them. We begin with the word in the commission, and trace all the instances in the writings of the apostles, to see how nearly they conformed to the meaning of the very letter of the commission.

The word in the commission is "baptizing," which as we have seen is a participle made from the frequentative form of the verb, baptizo. In the original it is baptizontes. It is in the progressive form, and so implies a continuation of the practice as long as it is necessary, so that the work shall go on uninterruptedly while Jesus requires it, and will bear his closest supervision; for he promised to supervise and assist in the whole when he said—"Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

After Jesus left the world, the first instance of the observance of the command, and obedience to the commission, was when the converts at Pentecost were baptized; when "there were added to the church three thousand souls." The record of the event is in Acts 2: 2. When, at the conclusion of Peter's sermon, those who heard, being pricked in their hearts, cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" they were answered by Peter—"Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." "Then," the record tells us, in v. 41, "they that gladly received the word were baptized; and the same day there were added to the church three thousand souls." Peter knew what Jesus had commanded, and when the first opportunity was afforded he was true to the duty imposed upon him and told those inquiring men to "repent and be baptized," and "straightway" they did so. If Peter had bidden them be "rantized," then he would evidently have bidden them do a thing different from that which they were commanded by Jesus himself, and Peter would not have been following in the path his Master bade him walk in; but he used exactly the same verb the Savior used, or which was used in giving us the commission in the Bible; and he meant precisely the same thing that was meant when Jesus said—"Go ye . . . . baptizing." So that, when he told them to be baptized, they "were baptized," not "rantized," else there would not have been a compliance with Peter's advice and direction to "be baptized"; for to "be rantized," whatever that was, was not to be "baptized." But they were "baptized," and, therefore, were immersed in water.

But how could that be when there were three thousand added to the church in one day? How could so many be immersed in so short a time? It could not be possible, and therefore those candidates must, some of them at least, have been "sprinkled," or have received the rite in some way more rapidly administered than immersion could be. So says the objector. But we have yet to learn that any difficulty in the way of doing a thing changes the meaning of the word which designates it, to make it mean anything else. We might question the miracles of Jesus, and set aside the letter of the text which tells us what he did, and say that as such things were naturally difficult to do they were not therefore done; water was not turned to wine; the multitude were not fed with the loaves and fishes; the lame did not walk, nor the deaf hear; the dumb were not made to speak, nor were the dead raised; because of the natural difficulties of the case. Still the words employed to tell what Jesus did mean, meant what they are supposed to, and "baptism" means what it originally meant, although three thousand were added to the church in one day, and were thus added, as many suppose, by baptism; because no apparent difficulties of doing can change the meaning of the word. If one cannot fly in the air, such a phrase as designates the thing is still what it purports to be, or else what is meant cannot be understood; and as language is used to aid the understanding to comprehend what is meant by another, it must be understood.

BUT FEW SAVED.

E. A. BOYNTON.

When the winds of heaven are let loose, to sweep with resistless fury through the earth, those who are safe on land enjoy a feeling of security; but they think, with dark forebodings, of friends far off on the sea. And when the storm has subsided, and the news comes into port that a noble vessel, freighted with human life, has been wrecked mid the foaming billows of the great deep, men gather in groups, and ask in undertones, "Were many lives lost?" "Were any saved?"

There was, long ages since, a fearful storm, when this whole world was wrecked, and all on board were lost, save one solitary family, who escaped in a life-boat. And we read in God's holy word that another storm, still more terrific, is coming by and by, when old earth shall shake and tremble to her very foundations, reel to and fro like a drunkard, and again go down in wreck and ruin, with a loss of life most appalling. As men look forward to that day of darkness and terror, they may well ask, with pale faces and trembling lips, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" This is an important question, in which every human being is deeply interested. Let us look in the book of God for the answer.

"Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." "And as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all." One family alone, consisting of eight souls, was saved, while the vast multitudes that peopled the earth, went down beneath the dark waters of the deluge. "Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot: they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded: but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all." Here, again, but one small family escaped, while the remaining thousands were wrapped in devouring flames. Early in the morning, when Abraham looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, "the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace;" and all that was left of these proud cities and their wicked inhabitants, was a mass of smouldering ruins. "Even thus it shall be in the day when the Son of man is revealed."

So the Bible plainly teaches that the overwhelming majority will finally be lost. And this in accordance with our own observation; for wherever we go, we see that the great mass are all absorbed in the things of this life. Those who are rejoicing in hope of the heavenly inheritance are but a mere remnant. Sad, mournful picture. Only think. Whenever we look upon a large concourse of people, and reflect for a moment upon their prospects for the future, we have every reason to believe that by far the greater portion of them will never taste the joys of the kingdom of heaven; but in the great day of the Lord they will go down in utter, hopeless ruin. How little do we realize the unhappy state of things existing all around us. Why is it that these things are so? Is it because God does not care for the welfare and happiness of men? Ah, no! "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him "should not perish, but have everlasting life." Is it because he whom God sent into the world to save sinners, was unable to accomplish the work for which he was sent? No, for "He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him." Our Redeemer is "mighty to save." Is it because men have not been told of these things, and are therefore ignorant of the way of salvation? Oh, no; for, these "good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people," have been scattered, in printed form, like the leaves of autumn, from one end of the world to the other; and the ministers of Christ go everywhere preaching the gospel; not only showing men what they must do to be saved, but earnestly pleading with them to accept of offered mercy before it is too late. Is it because men do not wish to be saved? No, not by any means. For all men have a strong desire to be safe and happy in the world to come; and hence they have "sought out many inventions," and I suppose that almost every one has some kind of religion upon which he depends for future safety.

What, then, can be the reason why the great share of the human family will be lost? If God in love and mercy has provided the means for our salvation, and that means is amply sufficient to accomplish the object; if all have been made acquainted with this plan, so that they fully understand all that is necessary for their salvation; and if they really wish to be saved, we would naturally suppose that not one would be lost. But I can tell you, dear reader, where the great difficulty lies. Men are unwilling to be saved in God's way; or they are not quite ready to be saved now. Some are willing to let the Lord save them in his own way, but they are not ready to attend to it at present. Perhaps the task seems hard and difficult now, so they conclude to wait a more convenient season, when it will be easier; others wish to enjoy the pleasures of earth a little longer, thinking there will be plenty of time to attend to religion afterwards; others, still, are waiting until they have more feeling on the subject, hoping that the time will come when the Spirit of God will strive with them so they can hardly resist its influences. Thus they keep delaying and putting off this important matter until, ere they are aware, the last opportunity has passed by, and they are lost.

Some find fault with God's way. They say it is too hard, or it is too simple, or too humiliating. They do not like it at all, and in fact they scarcely believe in it any way, so they try to study out some other way more in harmony with their own taste and inclinations. And as "there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved," but the name of Jesus Christ, they must, consequently, be lost.

Our heavenly Father, our blessed Savior, holy angels and godly men, have united together to save and bless mankind. I believe the Lord has at least one or two faithful witnesses in every place, who, by their holy walk and conversation, are a convincing proof to all around them of the truth of the Christian religion, so that they are left without excuse; and if they are lost, it will be through their own willful or careless neglect.

It is a sorrowful sight to see men go thoughtlessly on to ruin, when such ample provision has been made for their eternal welfare, and at a fearful cost. "O that thou hadst hearkened to mp commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea." "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!"

St. John's, Mich.

"CHRIST ALL IN ALL."—Remember, it is not thy hold of Christ that saves thee; it is Christ; it is not thy joy in Christ that saves thee; it is not thy faith in Christ, though that is the instrument; it is Christ's blood and merit. Therefore look not so much on thy hand, with which thou art grasping Christ, as to Christ; look not to thy hope, but to Jesus, the Author and Finisher of thy faith. We shall never find happiness by looking at our prayers, our doings or our feelings; it is what Jesus is, and not what we are, that gives rest to our souls. If we would at once overcome Satan, and have peace with God, it would be by "looking unto Jesus." Let not thy hopes and fears come between thee and Jesus; follow hard after him, and he will never fail thee.—Sel.

MAN originally fell by losing his confidence in God, and can only be raised by the restoration of his confidence; in other words, unbelief was his ruin, and he now stands by faith.

The World's Crisis

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

The provisions of the new postal law, requiring pre-payment of postage on all newspapers, go into operation on the first of January next. After that date all postage (excepting on newspapers within the County in which they are published) will have to be paid at the Office from which the paper is mailed. This change relieves the subscribers from the care and trouble of postage payment, placing it upon the publishers, and making the expense, which is quite an item, to come directly upon the latter.

To meet this (in regard to the Crisis), the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society, at a late meeting, voted to add twenty-five cents to the price of our paper; so that from Jan. 1st, 1875, the World's Crisis will be $2.25 per year in advance. And hereafter, all monies received at this office for advance pay on the Crisis will be credited from Jan. forward at the rate of $2.25 per year. And if any, who have already paid for the paper in advance, are disposed to send us what they would have to pay at their Post Office, under the old law, we will thankfully receive the same; and so of those who receive the Crisis FREE.

ADDRESS TO MISSION SOCIETY.

This is not the time for true christian soldiers to be contending for sectarian names, or party interests, men or measures; but to be one in our divine Leader, watching carefully, and listening attentively to every word that comes from his lips, lest we fail in our effort to secure eternal life. He who expects to win in the final struggle, should cast away all his sinful luggage, of every description. With roots of bitterness in his heart, hatred, variance, pride, envy, jealousy, covetousness, deceit, or lasciviousness, he is sure to be overcome, and lose the crown of glory. The promise of winning is only to the "pure in heart."

Are we ONE IN Christ, and ready for the onset? Have we on "the whole armor of God"? There is not time for a moment's delay in putting on our equipment. The enemy is rapidly advancing. We shall soon be among the defeated or eternally victorious. We must make the decision. Which way shall the scale be turned? Is there one listening, who is ashamed of his calling? who seeks the place of the cowardly deserter? who is looking wishfully back upon worldly honors, treasures, or pleasures? "Remember Lot's wife." "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." Gird on afresh the christian armor, making no provision for rest, release, nor furlough. The stronger the foe, the firmer and bolder should be the advance upon his embattled legions. Let the banners of the Lord wave high, and every soldier of the cross be true to his all-conquering King and Redeemer. Soon the faithful will be singing the song of Moses and the Lamb on Mt. Zion, in the midst of unending glory—

"Hark! the onset! will ye fold your Faith-clad arms in lazy lock?
Up, O up, thou drowsy soldier;
Worlds are charging to the shock.
Worlds are charging, heaven beholding,
Thou hast but an hour to fight;
Now the blazoned cross unfolding,
On, right onward for the right.
On, let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake go abroad;
Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages, tell for God."

It is truly sublime to be living here, just at the opening of the battle of Armageddon, the coming of the Son of man, the resurrection of the dead, and the hour when we are to be clothed with immortality. We are living in the time of which the prophets wrote when describing earth's closing scenes; the time they longed to see; the one for which saints have waited in martyr ages, as they starved in dungeons, and died of torture. We are at the focal point where prophetic streams all unite to proclaim,—Immanuel is coming; prepare to welcome his coming! Earth's four great kingdoms, fourtold by him who slept in the lions' den, have occupied their allotted time of supremacy, and now the signs declare that the everlasting kingdom will soon be established by the eternal One, who "sitteth upon the circle of the earth." The winding sheet is prepared for the Roman woman; her funeral pile is ready for her consumption; and soon will be seen the smoke of her burning. "Is there not a cause?"

What is the duty of the saints in this portentous hour? There can be but one answer: let every true soldier of the cross do all in his power to support and advance the cause of his divine Master. Let him die to self, and live wholly for Christ.

In relation to the work of our missionaries during the past year, we need not say but little, as their reports have been read in the Crisis from time to time. In South Carolina, we learn that Bro. P. G. Bowman has seen good fruits from his labors. He has stood up boldly, and spoken plainly to large audiences that have listened with rapt attention to the Bible truths we love so well, and they are earnestly urging us to send out more men to give the soul-stirring message in the "regions beyond." The whole South is ripe for the harvest. Work has been done in North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennesee, Virginia, Maryland and Kansas.

Brn. J. A. Cargile, J. J. Smith, J. C. Smith, E. M. Bliss, T. J. Green, Peter Vos, E. Brundage, A. Conklin, N. J. Slade, J. T. Thorp, Srs. B. Fuller, J. Benson, R. F. Clark, and others, are laboring in the south and west with a zeal, self-denial, and sacrifice, that call for our hearty support. Shall such men and women be sustained in the field? It is now time to make a response. Shall it be faint and feeble? While they travel from house to house, town to town, after sleeping on the ground at night, in some lone place, with scanty fare, opposed by popular prejudice and fashionable professors, yet welcomed by the poor, shall they have our sympathies, and the assurance that they shall not be left destitute of means to keep their families at home from the point of starvation? While they sacrifice their all to tell the good news to the perishing, that Jesus died to save them, and is soon coming back to give them eternal life beyond the reach of poverty, pain and sorrow; shall we repose at ease in rocking chairs at home, and make no effort to sustain these noble men and women? Nay, verily. Let us be ready to make a sacrifice to assist them in bearing their heavy burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. If we give no more than the cup of cold water, Jesus does not pass it unnoticed. Let the widows give their mites, and the rich of their abundance. Let none refuse a helping hand. Take stock in this blessed business. The dividends will be enormous. Said Jesus: "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and running over." Lend to the Lord. Said the wise man: "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again." Give liberally. The Scriptures say: "The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself."

Besides the vast southern field, where thousands are stretching out their hands for help, a wide door is opened on the Pacific coast, and loud calls are floating across the mountains and plains, saying, Come over and help us. The churches in San Francisco and Vallejo are strong in the Lord, exerting a healthy influence in those cities, but there are scores of places where the faithful watchman's voice has not been heard. Oregon, too, cries for help. Who will say to the man of God go, and you shall have a share of my loaf; I will work at home and earn the means to aid the missionary in carrying the bread of life to the starving? Let us us all go to work for Jesus with renewed zeal.

In addition to the places already named, England is sending forth the Macedonian cry. For some two or three years there has been an increasing earnestness in their calls for American help; and the time seems to have come when that field should be occupied as soon as possible. A faithful brother writes: "I think if the Mission could help England for a little while, . . . a great stir might be made." "Is there not a cause?"

Shall our ears be stopped to these cries, our purses closed, our sympathies withheld, and we, like Levites, pass by on the other side? Nay, let us be good Samaritans. This is our favored hour. Now, or never, seems echoing all around. What shall be our response? Let it be this: press the missionary work with double zeal, if time lasts another year. Send out missionaries and tracts in all directions, and they shall have our prayers and support. Let the decision be made now and here, that our gifts shall go beyond old clothes; beyond that which we shall not miss; it shall be a sacrifice for Christ and his cause. If he could give all to save us, we can give some needed or choice thing to help some others.

CONFERENCE IN CHICAGO.

The general conference in Chicago, held at the "Green St. Tabernacle," 91 South Green St., commencing Oct. 21st, and closing Oct. 25th, was one of refreshing from the Lord. We overheard the remark from one well qualified to judge, that some of the meetings were as good as had ever been enjoyed in Chicago. Sweet harmony prevailed, and we rejoiced together in the hope of soon seeing Jesus. The evidences of the Lord's speedy coming were clearly set before the people by Bro. Couch, in his prophetic discourses. These evidences were received joyfully. Some started in the service of the Lord, and others made a full consecration to Christ, and were specially blest. Several preaching Brn. and lay members came in from the surrounding country to assist in the worship of the Most High. The last evening of the conference, some seventy-five partook of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Bro. F. Burr has moved back to Chicago, from Norwalk, O., where his labors were much blest, as pastor of that church. He is now acting as pastor of the Chicago church. He is a true man in the Lord, and the Times is prospering in his hands as editor. The eastern and western publishing Associations are fully united in christian sympathy to do what they can to advance the cause of our divine Master. The present prospect of the Times is more encouraging than it has been for several years, and it appears to be established upon a firmer and more reliable basis than ever before. It is an excellent paper, and worthy of an extensive patronage. It is such a paper as should be in the hands of all who sympathize with Jesus. We wish it abundant success.

UNION MILLS, IND.

Union Mills is a small village in La Porte Co. Ind., laying on the Baltimore and Ohio R. R., leading to Chicago. One of the oldest Advent churches in this part of the country was established here many years ago, principally through the instrumentality of Bro. and Sr. Mansfield. It was the old hive in these parts, from which has arisen a number of sister churches that are now waving the banner of truth, and proclaiming the kingdom at hand.

The church at U. M. appears to be in a healthy, prosperous condition, under the pastoral labors of Bro. J. Ferris. They have a good chapel, pleasantly located, in which they have regular preaching two Sabbaths in each month. The members are all trained to labor in their meetings, which tends strongly to produce a high toned spiritual condition. No church can become morally strong, and work efficiently in the great cause of salvation when but few of its members labor in the meetings of worship. Inactivity in devotion produces certain death in spirituality; and such dead branches tend very strongly to destroy the tree.

It is one of the most important duties imcumbent on a teacher or pastor of a church to do all he can to produce activity, in worship, of all the members. The weak and diffident ones should be encouraged and pressed into the front ranks, while the stronger and more fearless ones should never be allowed to occupy all the time, to the discouragement of their brethren, and the destruction of their meetings and church. We never knew a meeting to decrease in spiritual interest and power when the weaker and most fearful class were active, and filled their place in the house of God. Encourage the weak and regulate the strong, and so mingle or unite them, that they will all appear to be on a common level, and they will prosper in the Lord. Every possible effort should be made to equalize christian society; for sin grades society into castes of high and low; but holiness brings all upon a level.

We enjoyed the privilege of attending a quarterly session of Conference with the church at Union Mills, which was a very good meeting. The attendance was good, considering the circumstances, and all seemed united and happy in prospect of speedy deliverance. Preachers present were Brn. Ferris, Mathewson, Andrews and Winchell.

The Advent cause in the State of Ind., we should judge, needs special aid and assistance at the present time. There are in the State many believers in our faith, but they are scattered like sheep upon a mountain without shepherds. They do not lack so much in numbers or means as in courage, concert of action and efficient help. We are strongly impressed that a wisely arranged missionary effort in this State would glorify God and save many of the perishing.

SACRED TIME.

It is claimed by Seventh-day Sabbath-keepers that there are twenty-four hours of sacred time, that were set apart for rest by our Creator, at the close of the creation week; and that they began at sunset at the close of the sixth day, and continued till the sunset of the seventh day. If this is true, then no part of the other six days can be included in the "sacred time." If these particular twenty-four hours are sacred, and of universal application to all mankind, then they are the only ones to be observed in all parts of the world. If this is the correct view of the case, it follows that when it is sunset at the place where our Creator began his rest day, after six days labor, every person all over the world should then begin his rest day; or else he is breaking the Sabbath by working in "sacred time." All should rest at the same time in the whole universe. The fact that some were few miles away from the garden of Eden, would not give them the liberty to work during the sacred twenty-four hours. It would be a strange way of observing the Sabbath in a large manufacturing establishment, if a large part of the hands should conclude to keep at work in their respective rooms, because they did not happen to be in the same apartment where the overseer was keeping the Sabbath. Would they not be guilty of Sabbath-breaking just as truly as though they were in his room? Suppose our Creator was now resting with Adam in the garden of Eden, and we were at work here; should we not be breaking the Sabbath day, provided those particular twenty-four hours which he is keeping are sacred time? If they are sacred there, they are everywhere, at the same time; so that if we are at work when he is resting, because we do not happen to be at the same spot, it is like the case just supposed in the manufacturing establishment. When the overseer keeps the Sabbath, all the rest should keep it with him; or else they violate the day. So, when the Creator's rest day commences at head-quarters, in Eden; every body on the earth should rest with him, if those particular twenty-four hours are "sacred time." We can see no way to avoid this conclusion. Then it must follow that all are Sabbath-breakers, excepting those who keep the day that lies between sunset and sunset in the land of Eden. Those who do this should be careful to ascertain precisely the hour of sunset in Palestine, every Sabbath day in the year, and then begin to keep the "sacred twenty-four hours" during which our Creator rested. If they do not do this, they do not keep the day he kept. Every one who contends for a specific sacred day should adopt this plan, or forever be silent on the subject.

The idea that some have advanced, that the supposed "sacred twenty-four hours" keep continually revolving around the earth like a planet around the sun, is absurd. Such persons claim that when the sunset reaches us, then the beginning of those particular "sacred twenty-four hours" have arrived for the commencement of the Sabbath. Suppose we live, as many do, where the days are a week or a month long? Should they be regulated by the sunset to begin their Sabbath day?

The whole difficulties are all remedied, harmonized, made simple, and consistent with all the teachings of the Bible and the welfare of the human race, spiritually and socially, if men will follow the example of their Creator,—work six days of twenty-four hours each, and then rest the next twenty-four hours. This meets all the demands of God's law, excepting in the case of the children of Israel, who were specially instructed to observe a particular seventh day as their rest day, which should commemorate the day of their deliverance from Egypt.

Of course the original rest day, kept in Eden, would be the one to be observed by those who lived there. But after a time, the nations departed from the Lord, and ceased to worship him on their rest day, and changed to the worship of the Sun; hence they called the same day of rest, which had come down to them from creation, "Sunday,"—the very day, so far as known, that christians now keep in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ. The Jewish rest day was peculiar to them; hence we read the Lord made "known unto them the holy Sabbath . . . by the hand of Moses." Neh. 9:14. This clearly implies that the Sabbath given to them, after they came out of Egypt, was one unknown to them before. The reason is obvious. There had not been any occasion before to commemorate that day. The observance of this memorial day helped to keep them separate from other nations. When asked why they kept it, they made answer, Because our "God brought" us out "of Egypt" "through a mighty hand, and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord" our "God commanded" us "to keep" this "Sabbath day," to commemorate the wonderful event. Deut. 5:15. With the exception of the Jewish people, whoever works six twenty-four-hour days, starting either at sunset, midnight, morning, or noon, and rests the next twenty-four hours, complies with all the requirements of Scripture. Whoever does this, follows the example of his Creator, and thereby acknowledges him as the One who made the heavens and the earth in six days, and rested on the seventh.

When the old covenant, with its ordinances, closed up at the cross, then its memorial rest day ended with it; and the apostles and early christians adopted for their rest-day the one that commemorated the resurrection of Christ, the most important event that had transpired since the creation of man. As we have before stated, there are good reasons for believing that for eighteen hundred years the Christian church has been keeping the day that corresponds with the original rest day in Eden—the First Day.

It has sometimes been said that the Pope changed the day. We can find no proof that this statement is true. Indeed, the Catholics claim that the keeping of the Lord's day started from the apostles, and claim the apostolic "traditions" for its support. Paul says—"Brethren, stand fast in the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle." 2 Thess. 2:15.

Others have affirmed that Constantine changed the day, about A. D. 325, when he began to protect Christianity. Instead of this, he only confirmed the practice of the christians in keeping the Lord's day. This fact shows that the day had been kept long before Constantine's time. As Mosheim says, when speaking of the first century: "All christians were unanimous in setting apart the first day of the week, on which the triumphant Savior arose from the dead, for the solemn custom of public worship. This pious custom . . . was founded on the express appointment of the apostles." Paul says—"He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it." Rom. 14:6.

When a day is set apart to commemorate some important transaction, those who honor the event will regard the day. The American people love to celebrate the 4th of July, because it is the memorial day of their declaration of independence; but the British nation feels no special reason for honoring the day. While we may regard the birth-day of Washington, the English honor the birth-day of their esteemed Queen. The Lord's day is kept to commemorate the resurrection of Christ, on which all our hopes of future life depend. As the Jews reject Christ as a Savior, they do not regard the "Lord's day." If they should honor the day, they would be admitting he was the true Messiah, which would spoil their Judaism. He who loves Jesus most will be most inclined to honor the day that commemorates his resurrection. "He that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it."

It is a well-known fact, that criminals often date their downward career from the time they began to disregard the Lord's day. They soon lost respect for the Lord's requirements, and plunged still deeper into iniquity. He who refuses to make the first day his rest day, and unites with the Jews in keeping the seventh day, virtually joins with the enemies of Christ, and dishonors the day of the Lord. We are thankful that we feel no inclination to return back under the old covenant to unite with the Jews, who said of Jesus, "Crucify him"; but we do delight to honor the day when he rose triumphant from the grave, and thus secured eternal life for all the saints. Had he not risen, we should have no hope of a new creation. The event that opens the way for "eternal life" is greater than the one that produced only temporal existence. In keeping the Lord's day, we honor God who raised his dear Son to life from the dead; and we honor Christ as our resurrection and life, our all in all.

As the keeping of the "Lord's day" is a voluntary act, of course those who do not "regard" him will not be inclined to observe the day. Those who choose to begin their week's labor on the Lord's day, then work six days and rest the seventh, get the same benefit, so far as rest is concerned, as those who end their week of work on Saturday and rest on the First day; but the seventh-day man is only regarding the day that the Israelites came out of Egypt; while he who observes the Lord's day is honoring the deliverance of the Son of God from the power of death, and the consequent deliverance of all his children. Which is the greater event? The answer is easy. Let us regard the "Lord's day."

To our own mind the whole matter is very plain, and we are perfectly at rest on the subject. We delight in regarding the day to the Lord, and have no fears that it will ever become "the mark of the beast," as taught in Mrs. White's visions.

SIOUX CITY.—We have arranged to commence meetings in the Congregationalist meeting-house, in Sioux City, Iowa, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 4th, to continue till the 15th. There appears to be a wide door opened at that place to present the reasons of our hope. Pray for us.

It is stated in published accounts of the Northern Lights, that they first appeared in England, about 1715, and four years later in America.

"A DYING BELIEF."

Editors of World's Crisis:—I cut the following from the Springfield Weekly Republican of Oct. 23d:

"Considerable commotion has been produced in the Orthodox religious world, the past week, by an article in the Christian Union on eternal punishment from the pen of its assistant editor, a prominent Congregational clergyman, Rev. George S. Merriam. In it he pronounces the doctrine of everlasting punishment a slander upon God, and as a belief he thinks it is rapidly dying out of the minds of men."

I hope you will not fail to copy into the Crisis the article referred to. It is entitled "A Dying Belief," and is in the Christian Union of Oct. 14th. For a long time such a bomb-shell has not been thrown into the Orthodox church. From a hasty reading I should judge the writer leans towards restoration rather than annihilation. Yet it will do good—I think an immense amount. It will hoist the old everlasting misery cart out into the rut. It will provoke discussion, which will result in good.

WAGES.

A part of the wages received in work for Jesus, is a large outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the soul. We receive the power of the Spirit in proportion as we use that power.

We pray to be empowered to do God's will. We wait for power to come upon us. How may we know that power has come? For what is it? God does not waste strength; his power cannot be put up in reservoirs. In the case of many prayers that ask for power, if God should answer them, he would never get back anything for what he gave. It would be all useless, because the power would not be used. But the power of the Holy Ghost is supplied to us just as we do our duty.

See that man, who at a campmeeting is seeking religion. He has prayed and wept, bnt he does not get blest. A leader in the meeting says to him, "You go about the ground, and ask the people to come to Jesus." He had not been doing his duty long, when the Lord sweetly saved him. "If a man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." Those who reap get well fed, with "the finest of the wheat." Jesus gives them strength according to their day.

The way to full salvation is the way of duty. We are sanctified in obeying the truth.

Faith brings the gifts of God. People are to get the blessing of a clean heart, by believing Jesus, so that he can consistently apply the cleansing blood.

But work for Jesus opens the heart to desires for full salvation—shows the wants of the world, till the heart cries out to be fitted up for usefulness.

The consciousness of doing duty encourages our faith. We can exercise faith only when in the line of duty.

Could Moses have believed for full salvation if he had not gone toward Pharaoh as God told him to do? Could Ananias of Damascus have believed for full salvation if he had not obeyed when the Lord told him to find Saul in Strait street, and preach to him?

A working church soon becomes a church crying out for holiness of heart; and such prayer brings the blessing. A church enjoying full salvation is grandly happy, and is mighty through God to pull down the strongholds of the adversary.—Guide to Holiness.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 13th, 1874, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

TO THE A. A. MISSION BOARD.

DEAR BRETHREN:—We left Concord, N. H., for the South, Sept. 18th. I preached at Greenpoint, L. I., and New York City, two Sundays, and evenings through the week. Formed an acquaintance with Bro. Munger's son, and Bro. Walker, of Greenpoint, and Brn. Cox and Johnson, of New York. Found a good home and kind reception with Bro. Libby, the proprietor of the Clinton House, Fulton St., Brooklyn. (By the by, I would advise all who visit New York or Brooklyn, if they wish delightful quarters, at moderate fare, to give Bro. Libby a call.)

We left New York by the evening train, Monday, Sept. 28th, and arrived at Washington at six in the morning. There we took the steamer "Keyport" on the Potomac, and rode thirty-seven miles to Quatico; then the cars to Fredericksburg and Richmond, where we saw the battle-fields, and the intrenchments thrown up by the soldiers. The cars pass close by the Libby prison in Richmond. Then on to Weldon, N. C. From there to Wilmington, one hundred and sixty-three miles, thence to Timmonsville, S. C., one hundred and twenty miles, where we arrived Wednesday, at 5.30 P. M., after riding from New York two nights and two days.

We stopped at Timmonsville, with Mr. Robert Peel, a merchant, to whom Bro. Bowman had spoken, and found a good home and kind attention. The next day Bro. Du Bose came for us, and carried us to his home, eight miles away, near where the first meeting-house is built. Here we met Bro. Bowman, and Bro. Carroll of Ct. Bro. Bowman had given out appointments for three Sundays, at the three houses built with the money sent them from the North.

Friday, Oct 2d, we commenced meetings at the first house, and protracted them till Tuesday afternoon. The people turned out beyond my expectation, notwithstanding the busy season of picking cotton.

Sunday every seat in the house was filled, and it will hold four hundred people. Some came fifteen miles, with two horse wagons, with buggys, on horseback, and on foot. They paid the very best attention to the truth presented, and all seemed well satisfied that it was the truth. Ten started to serve the Lord, one of them a man said to be as substantial a man as there is in Darlington county. Bro. Bowman followed me, in powerful appeals to the people, that will have a good effect, All that love the truth think very much of him, and I do not see how they could get along without him.

From this place Bro. Bowman carried us to his home, sixteen miles, through the most beautiful hard pine timber lands and cotton plantations, which were in full bloom, where we arrived at their pleasant country home at sunset, and received a hearty welcome from Sr. Bowman.

Friday, Oct. 9th, we commenced meetings at the second house built by them, five miles from Bro. Bowman's, and continued them till Sunday evening. The house was filled full Sunday, and some sat at the door, and some came to this meeting fifteen miles. Here we set apart for the gospel ministry Bro. John S. Du Bose, of Darlington, Co., S. C., and Bro. George A. Carroll, of Woodstock, Ct.

Sunday, Oct. 18th, we held meetings at the third house. The people could not all get in, and some sat in wagons at the windows on the outside. The number out was thought to be five hundred. Near this house is a river, a good place to bury those who are dead to sin, because there was much water there. Here Bro. Bowman baptized into the death of Christ twenty-three persons, two of them over sixty years old, Bro. Woodham and Sister Harris, formerly Methodists, and more are expected to go forward soon. The three meeting-houses are located in the form of a triangle, in a circuit of about thirty miles.

I have not shunned to declare the great truths of the Bible, the entire mortality of man, the unconscious state of the dead, the soon personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth, the literal resurrection of the dead, the final destruction of the wicked, and a preparation of heart to meet the Savior in peace. We have been received by the people with all kindness, and I have not discovered the least prejudice from them toward us, for the reason that we are from the North; but otherwise, they wish our people would come and settle among them. It is a beautiful country, the pine timber lands are splendid, hard wood in abundance, the land easy of cultivation; the crops of corn, cotton, and sweet potatoes are good; the natural roads the best I have ever seen; the climate beautiful, and the health of the country good. There has been but one light frost up to Oct. 20th.

My health is good, and I am perfectly contented in my mission work. My wife feels that she is a great ways from home, and talks much of dear friends she has left. Between the post office, in Lydia, and where Bro. Bowman lives (six miles), is where Gen. Sherman encamped with his army. I saw the house where he made his head-quarters.

Bro. Bowman says, since he left off tobacco he has such an insatiable appetite for food, that for a substitute, some of the New England butter and apples would not go amiss. He has not tasted a bit since he left New Hampshire. He is looking finely. He and myself can labor together like a charm. We go to Cartersville next Saturday and Sunday, and then to where we first began. When the weather becomes cooler, we shall go to regions beyond, if the Lord shall open the way. I will keep you informed as we progress in the good work.

NOTES OF TENT MEETING IN BATH.

H. B. SEVEY.

By request of brethren, and feeling it duty, we pitched our tent in the city of Bath, Sept. 1st. Bro Munger having an appointment to preach in the chapel the same evening, we invited him to unite with us and preach, as he would have a larger congregation, and to avoid holding two meetings at the same time and place. As the band had arranged to meet on their stand a few rods from our tent, Bro. M. closed his remarks, when they began to play, saying it was the work of the devil to break up the meeting, and left. We continued the meeting with good interest, thinking not best to let the music of this world drive us from our work. We found brethren and sisters ready to help, although the church was very low.

As our meetings continued, the interest increased. Some found sweet peace in consecrating themselves wholly to the Lord as never before. As the result, sinners were alarmed, sought mercy, and found Jesus to be precious to them. Bro. Johnson, from Sweden, a young man who had been in this country four years, embraced the blessed hope two years ago, has felt it his duty to preach at times since, but the love of the world has kept him from it. As he listened to the evidence of Jesus' soon coming, he concluded to give up all and follow Christ. It was blessed to see him when he yielded all, and sang—

"My all to Christ I've given,
My talents, time, and voice."

And then the call to go home and tell his folks the blessed news was cheerfully obeyed. Settling up his business, he left for his distant home in Sweden. May the Lord bless him to the awakening of many.

By invitation from Bro. Wiley of the Free Baptists, I preached in Corliss St. Church, Sunday, P. M. He had arranged hymns appropriate for a discourse on the coming of Christ, and introduced me as one borrowed from the tent to preach for him; and they believed in the coming of Christ, but did not make it a speciality as we did. I said, the reason we make it a speciality is, our brethren in the ministry neglect to preach it as the times demand. Spoke to them on the signs of the times, and a preparation to meet the Lord. We were very much gratified to have such a privilege to preach in his church, for it was the first time that such a privilege was ever offered to an Adventist preacher, as I was informed.

Our meetings were a blessing to many in Bath. Many in the church were refreshed by hearing the evidences of the Lord's coming at hand. Jesus says, "Blessed is that ssrvant" that will be "found giving meat in due season." I fear many of our brethren in the ministry are settling down like others, and not giving prominence to the truths that have called us out as a distinct people. I find when people come to hear us, they expect we shall preach our faith, and if we preach as others do, they are dissatisfied. While we differ so much from others we can present our faith in love and the spirit of Jesus, which will commend itself to every man's conscience, in the sight of God. Would we have it said "Well done"? If so, we must do well. Our work is almost done. Lord, help us to be ready.

BENEFITS OF A CLEAN HEART.

"Create in me a clean heart, O God."

This is the language of David after he had sinned. When David acknowledged his sin, and was deeply contrite before God, and in penitent contrition confessed his guilt, saying, "For I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me." He now prays for purity. "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean." David not only prays for a clean heart, but he greatly desired a right spirit.

A wrong spirit had taken possession of him, and caused him to sin. He now prays for a right spirit, that he might shun all appearance of evil in the future, and that God might not cast him from his presence, but restore unto him the joys of his salvation. At this time David felt that God was angry with him, and he was not prepared to go into the sanctuary and instruct the people. But when he obtained a clean heart and a right spirit, and God had bestowed upon him the blessing of pardon, he exclaimed with a heart filled with gratitude, "Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee." After this he said, "I have preached righteousness in the great congregation."

Those under the law were commanded to be clean that bore the vessels of the Lord. So those who live in this dispensation of light and knowledge, are commanded to cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. A clean heart is the great necessity of the minister of this age. Though he may have every other qualification, as far as learning is required, if he is not in possession of the great gift of heart-purity, his labors will be far less successful in the conversion of sinners.

The class-leader must have it, if he would lead the flock committed to him into green pastures. Members of the church must have it as a preparation for usefulness. The fountain has been opened, and this redeemed world may wash and be clean.

In the days of Wesley there was a period when there was a comparative cessation of the work of salvation. In writing to Mr. Benson of the cause of the want of prosperity, he says: "I doubt not we are not explicit enough in speaking on full sanctification, either in public or private." In another place he says: "I am afraid christian perfection will be forgotten." Bishop Asbury felt the importance of this subject so greatly that he says: "I am divinely impressed with a charge to preach holiness in every sermon." Bishop Hamlin, at one of his annual conferences, said: "If the preachers do not enjoy the blessing of perfect love and preach it, there can be no permanent revival."—Rev. J. K. Ford.

REPORT OF CT. A. C. CONFERENCE.

Met at Bristol as per notice, Oct. 15th. President in the chair. Officers all present. Ministers present: Brn. A. H. Steele, Seth Woodruff, B. Hitchcock, B. St John, G. L. White, J. Curtiss, A. Elliott, Geo. Barker, Mrs. Ellen Crumb. Delegates: Geo. Stoddard, Morris; C. H. Babcock, Campville; Leonard Hart, Plainville; H. P. Bradley, Wm. Reynolds, Bristol; Bro. Shelly, New Haven; Leonard Berry, Ellsworth; H. T. Hart, South Windsor.

After prayer by A. H. Steele, J. Curtiss and H. P. Bradley were appointed committee on credentials. A. H. Steele and Seth Woodruff committee on business. Voted, That O. D. Woodruff become a member of this conference. Reports of preachers and delegates next called for.

Although in some localities a lack of interest was reported, others were encouraging, and showed that Sabbath schools prospered, and additions had been made to the fold of Christ. All seemed to feel the need of more of the Spirit and power of God, and the importance of being steadfast in the faith.

Voted, That all monies and securities, in the hands of any parties belonging to the conference, be paid to the treasurer of the conference. Voted, That the treasurer be instructed to put out at lawful interest all monies belonging to the conference, subject to conference order.

Officers elected for the ensuing year:—President, Seth Woodruff. Vice President, A. H. Steele. Secretary and Treasurer, O. D. Woodruff. Campmeeting Committee: Seth Woodruff, O. D. Woodruff, H. P. Bradley, L. Mills.

Voted, That the campmeeting committee act as tent committee. Voted, That this conference hold but two business sessions a year. Voted, That this conference hold one or more meetings a year for the promotion of spiritual growth, faith and power with God among the churches, and to labor for the perishing. The time and place for these meetings to be optional with the officers of the conference.

The conference also recommend that the committee provide for holding two or more tent meetings during the coming year.

Preaching by Brn. Elliott, S. Woodruff, and Barker. Bro. A. Ross was with the church Sunday, and remained to hold a series of meetings through the following week. The general tone of the preaching pointed to a complete readiness to meet the Bridegroom.

The conference adjourned to the call of the President.

Brethren and Sisters of Conn.:—We need more of faith and the Holy Ghost among us. We want more of the divine power of God to save us from the unhallowed influences of these last times. Let us speedily arise, trim our lamps, and unitedly come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. The Bridegroom is coming. Be ye ready. The conference has now opened the way for meetings divested of all the conference business, and devoted especially to the work of arousing the careless and saving the lost. We wish every preaching brother to unite with us, and every church to be represented at the next meeting, which we trust the Lord will direct as to time and place. Pray about it, and if you feel the need of such an effort let us hear from you.

O. D. WOODRUFF, Sec'y and Treas.

In memory of our deceased Bro. S. C. Hancock, the conference voted the following

MEMORIAL.

Whereas, our beloved brother and fellow laborer, S. C. Hancock, has been removed from our midst by death, the members of this Conference do hereby extend to the widow and family of the deceased their heartfelt sympathy in this hour of affliction and bereavement, trusting that we shall together meet when the trump of God shall awaken the sleeping dead, and the eyes of the blind be opened in that beautiful land where the enemy shall never enter, and the tear of anguish never fall.

Voted, That a copy of the foregoing be forwarded to the widow of the deceased.

O. D. W.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. C. Crabtree.

BRO. GRANT:—I never before saw the light on holiness as I saw it at the last campmeeting in Springfield. I was very much interested, and then I saw it was not only my duty to give all for Christ, and be kept all the time, it was my privilege, bless God.

I have thought the matter over and over, and every time I think it over, it looks brighter and more glorious, being kept all the time in Jesus.

I have been much opposed to this holiness doctrine, as I called it; but, thanks be to God, it is Bible doctrine. It is where we all must live—holy men and women—if we even expect to have a home in the kingdom when Jesus comes. We must cut loose from the vain fashions of this world, which are keeping so many bound down with fetters, and jump into the cleansing fountain all over, and stay there. It is our privilege, glory be to God.

This getting in and out of the cleansing stream is no way to live. Let us get in and stay there, and we will go floating quietly along, and so sailing through the gates into the New Jerusalem.

It is so blessed to walk with Jesus all the time. I feel, Bro. Grant, that I have received a new conversion, as it were. I do not want to do this and that as I used to. Is not this the feeling?

It makes me love the appearing of our Lord, and, in fact, I love all the dear old Bible truths better. And this is where we all must stand if we want a crown of life when the King in his beauty comes. There is no half-way work about this matter. It is all or nothing. We must give all for Christ. By the grace of God I mean to stay in the cleansing stream until Jesus comes.

Oh! it is so glorious, Bro. Grant; try to arouse the Advent people through your valuable columns of this blessed truth. It is what we need in these last days. God grant it.

HOW VICE IS SPREAD.

A TERRIBLE STATEMENT.

Last night a very remarkable meeting took place in Brooklyn, called by the officers of the "New York Society for the Suppression of Vice," at which the leading clergy of New York and Brooklyn were present, together with lay representatives, comprising some of the best known citizens. There were about one hundred in all, who sat with closed doors. The object of the meeting was to make an intelligent presentation of the character and extent of the traffic in obscene literature to the clergy, the professional and leading men of the country. . . .

After introductory remarks by Mr. Whitehead, President of the society, who occupied the chair, Mr. Comstock was introduced. He spoke of the hundreds of varieties of vile publications and the many tons of stereotype plates seized by him and destroyed, of the numerous establishments for printing and manufacturing which had been broken up, and of the indictments secured and the scores of villains now imprisoned through the efforts of the Society.

On one occasion, in the laboratory of Prof. Cochrane, six and a half tons of stereotype plates were destroyed by means of acids. In addition there were books of three hundred varieties. A factory for the manufacture of articles had been seized. In another place 625 varieties of stereotype plates were seized. Near Greenwood Cemetery there was lately another factory run on a considerable scale, where the wares were made chiefly by young children.

Directories of young persons in seminaries have been carefully prepared and cover nearly all the States, five cents a name being the common rate allowed to agents co-operating. Puzzles and games are advertized, and in response to curious inquiries, fiendish circulars are sent through the United States mails, or a catalogue of books, and this to an extent almost beyond belief. As the result large fortunes are accumulated. Recently one of the men thus engaged died, leaving $450,000, over which the heirs are now quarreling.

Since the 1st of January last nineteen tons of vile matter have been seized. This is not guess but actual weight. Four tons were taken from a single store in Nassau street. Account books had been seized in which were the names of forty-five hundred dealers in different cities, all implicated. A single printer, as appeared from invoices, had sold obscene books to the extent of $25,000 within four years. There had been arrested 148 persons with 100 convictions, and there were twelve now held for trial. The plates seized number in all 325.—New York Correspondent of Boston Jour., Oct. 28th.

IS LICENSING EVILS RIGHT?—The theory of selecting a popular evil and attempting to raise a revenue from it, is wrong in principle and dangerous in practice. Evils should be suppressed, not licensed for gain. The object of government is protection, not to the few who are willing to become partners in the evil, alone, but to all its subjects. The sale of alcohol causes an incalculable amount of crime and misery; an element of destruction which, if continued to be made legal and respectable by license, must destroy the objects of government itself. If alcohol, sugar-coated or straight, is really necessary to the human family, then let us have it as free and cheap as possible; if, on the other hand, it is a destructive outlaw, which never can be controlled either by individuals or government, then let us begin at the other end, treat it as we would a wolf in the sheep-fold; make its presence evidence of evil intent; wherever it is exposed for sale for drink throw it into the gutter. Better, much better see it run in the gutter than into men, and have the police find them in the gutter and drag them through the streets to the calaboose to be fined and imprisoned because they are not able to stand all the poison government agents are authorized to sell to them.

We can never reach this evil until the man who sells liquor is locked up just as quickly as the horse thief or murderer! Selling intoxicating drinks causes nine-tenths of the murders and thefts which our courts punish. It is cheaper and better to lock up the man who sells, than the man who drinks. We must do one thing or the other.—California Agriculturist.

Married.

PHILLIPS—WOODSIDE. In East Boston, Oct. 15th, at the residence of the bride's parents, by Rev. J. S. White, Mr. EDWARD W. PHILLIPS and Miss MARY J., only daughter of Benj. Woodside, both of East Boston.

TWOMBLY—WILLIAMS. In Alfred, Oct. 31st, 1874, by Elder J. R. Tripp, Mr. JOSIAH F. TWOMBLY and Miss LYDIA E. WILLIAMS, all of Alfred.

Obituaries.

FLAGG. In Dover, N. H., Aug. 6th, 1874, Sr. Aguina Flagg, aged sixty-eight years.

Sr. Flagg gave her heart to the Savior when but a child, and "in patience possessed her soul" through many long years of trial. Her last days were spent at the quiet home of Bro. and Sr. Rand, where, after a painful illness, she fell asleep in Jesus, in the full assurance of hope. The gentleness of spirit she possessed makes her missed by all, but by none more than by her invalid sister, who is waiting for the trumpet to sound and the dead to be raised incorruptible, when the living will be changed. Funeral attended by the writer. A. ROSS.

CHAPMAN. At Bolton, P. Q., Sept. 30th, 1874, Bro. Joseph Chapman, aged eighty-two years.

Our brother, who so suddenly followed his companion to the silent tomb, died in full assurance of hope of eternal life at the resurrection of the just. The occasion was improved by the writer, who addressed the large concourse of friends assembled from Rev. 21: 4. LOREN MARSH.

KNAPP. In Charles City, Iowa, Oct. 14th, 1874, Sr. Emma Knapp, daughter of Bro. O. S. and Sr. E. A. Knapp, aged twenty-six years and one month.

Sr. Emma was converted in 1863, at the Crystal Lake (Wis.) campmeeting, and baptized by Eld. Miles Grant at that meeting. She was amiable, lived a consistent christian life, and sleeps in Jesus.

EASTMAN. In Webster, N. H., Sept. 9th, 1874, Judith Eastman, widow of the late Enoch Eastman, in the eighty-ninth year of her age.

May God bless the surviving children, who have lost a praying and loving mother, and prepare them for life eternal. T. M. PREBLE.

GREATNESS OF LONDON.—The population of London, according to the last census, is 3,883,000. This vast multitude is more than the combined population of New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, St. Louis, Chicago, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Boston, New Orleans, San Francisco, Buffalo, and Alleghany City, Pa. To light its streets at night 630,000 gas lights are required, consuming every twenty-four hours 22,270,000 cubic feet of gas.

Notices.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—The Lord willing, a protracted meeting will be held at the meeting-house in Porter Village, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 12th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands. It is expected that Brethren E. S. Moulton, and J. T. Jordan, will be present and assist in carrying on the work. Come, brothers, come, sisters, come one and all. WM. T. SAWYER.

WHERE shall our New Hampshire State Conference be held? The time has been set for the conference to convene, but no place fixed to hold it. If there is a church within the limits of the State that is unanimous in requesting the conference with them, let them inform the Secretary, C. H. Fletcher, at once, that the appointment and arrangements may be published. Otherwise, we shall be under the necessity of indefinitely postponing the meeting. A. ROSS, President.
C. H. FLETCHER, Sec.

DEDICATION.—The dedication of the Christian Advent Chapel at Massena, N. Y., will take place Nov. 14th, at 10½ A. M. Eld. John Couch, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass., will deliver the dedicatory address. Let all the friends of Jesus who can come to the dedication of this modern temple, come filled with holy zeal, and let us hear your voices on the side of truth, also in praise to Him who ever liveth and maketh intercession for us. C. PIKE.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The next quarterly Conference of Northern Pa. and Southern New York will be held at the United States school-house, Bingham, Potter Co., Pa., commencing Friday evening, Dec. 18th, and continue over the following Sunday. Invitation is given to all.
E. C. COWLES, President.
A. H. BRIGGS, Secretary.

A SERIES of meetings will be held in Depot Hall, Steep Falls, Me., commencing Wednesday evening, Nov. 11th, at 7.30 o'clock, and continue over the following Sunday. Eld. B. S. Emery and J. Hill are expected to be present and preach the gospel. Come all who can, and lend us a helping hand. We need your assistance.
C. H. SWEET.

TENT MEETING.—The tent is up again in Fall River, Mass. Meetings afternoons and evenings the coming week, and as long as the weather will permit. Come, brethren, and help save men and scatter the light. L. BOUTELL.

THE DELAWARE DISTRICT A. C. CONFERENCE is hereby called to meet and hold its second semi-annual session at the Second Advent Christian Hall, on Seventh street, below Poplar, Philadelphia, Pa., commencing Friday evening, Nov. 13th, and continue over the Sabbath. This conference embraces the District of Columbia, Delaware, New Jersey, and Eastern Pennsylvania. It is earnestly hoped that every church sympathizing with us will be represented, either by letter or delegates. Every church or religious body co-operating with this conference, is entitled to one delegate, and an additional delegate for every ten members. All letters of correspondence for the conference can be addressed to Edwin King, 1716 Francis Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
A. G. JAYNE, President.
EDWIN KING, Secretary.

TO VERMONTERS.—At our annual conference at Bethel, the State Committee were urged to carry the gospel of the kingdom into every new field which opened a door, and especially to offer a week of labor for any five dollars pledged by an isolated brother or sister living in a new field. This was to encourage individual effort and sacrifice on the part of the isolated. We want to hear immediately from those places where labors are desired, that we may make due arrangements to meet the demands. If you are too poor to raise five dollars, and yet the door is open for a meeting, write us just the same as though you raised the money. Write to me at Waterbury, Vt., or to A. A. Hoyt, Plainfield, Vt. Write full particulars of circumstances, people, time, and place. Write soon.
H. F. CARPENTER, President of Conference.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting held in Salisbury, N. H., at the Union meeting-house, commencing Friday, Nov. 27th, to continue over the following Sabbath, and longer if duty demands.
C. H. FLETCHER.
D. F. LEAVITT.

THERE will be a meeting of days in Jay (Bean's Corner), commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 19th, and continue as long as thought best. Brethren will call on Lewis Bean, and others, for homes. H. B. SEVEY, F. E. BLAISDELL, L. G. MARTIN.

AS I HAVE received many pressing invitations to visit Maine, and other parts east, and labor with the Lord's children in the cause of Jesus and the salvation of the perishing, I will, by the help of the Lord, arrange to devote from four to six weeks to this special work. I am preparing to leave about the 15th of Nov. All the brethren who are willing to lay aside side issues, wishing my labors, and who will in the name of the Lord work in this direction, and for the advancement of the truth, and the great cause of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, will please address me early at 135 North 22nd street, Philadelphia, Pa. After Nov. 20th, Crisis Office, Boston, that appointments may be made in time. I. B. WILFONG.

I EXPECT, if the Lord will, to visit Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Mass., and perhaps other States, the coming winter. Any one wishing an appointment, or protracted meeting for their place, please drop me a line on a postal card, with a one cent stamp on it, to Richmond, P. Q., Box 31, and I will endeavor to supply them as far as I can. Our work is almost done, and soon the Lord will cut it short in righteousness. F. M. DRAKE.

BEING at liberty for the next few months to go where it may seem duty, any churches desiring my labors for one Sabbath or more, or week day protracted effort, will please correspond with me as early as possible, that I may arrange with those already promised. ROLAND D. GRANT, Stoneham, Mass., Box 615.

NOTICE.—As I expect my labors in this section will soon close, I would say I shall be ready to go and preach "the gospel of the kingdom" anywhere, as the Lord may open the way, the coming fall and winter. Any wishing to correspond with me can direct for the present to A. P. MOORE, Linden, Genesee Co., N. Y.

J. G. SMITH and J. W. WHITE will preach in Farmington, N. H., two Sundays in each month, as long as it seems duty. J. G. Smith the first, and J. W. White the third.

Those wishing to correspond with the church at Raymond, Iowa, will please write to the following committee: Dr. B. Banton, Wm. Waterfield, W. S. Detrick. J. W. BURROUGHS, Pastor.

Those wishing to preach in Newcastle, N. H., will please correspond with either of the following committee: Rufus Yeaton, William W. Martin, Chas. W. White.

I withdraw all of my appointments in the Crisis. Unwell. E. COTTON.

THAT BOOK.

"History of the Second Advent Message, Doctrine and People."

This work is now ready for all. It contains the history of the rise and progress of the proclamation of the Second Advent of Christ, near at hand, from A. D. 1820 to the present time, in America, Europe, Asia, and Africa; with sketches of the great reformations accompanying it; of many of the chief pioneers associated with it; the great opposers, and their futile efforts to defeat the work. Records of its rapid progress, and of many of the remarkable manifestations of God's guiding hand in the work. Discussions, lectures, sermons, dialogues, and chief points of doctrine advocated by the various classes of believers in the Lord's soon coming.

Records and tables of the prophetic times of Daniel and John, as advocated by the chief Protestant writers, all of whom terminate the periods between 1836 and 1880. A sketch of Luther and his times, compared with ours. His portrait, and portraits of twenty Second Advent pioneers, with discourses on Daniel 2nd, 7th and 8th chapters, illustrated with fine wood cuts, with much other valuable matter.

Our subscribers will be supplied at prices agreed on when orders with cash (and 20 cts. for postage) are received. All who wish to buy the work will be supplied, postpaid, at $3.50. As our object is not to make money, but to have this message and its history go as far and as cheap as possible, we put it as low as we can. We have endeavored to make it a book that all who are really associated in this great movement will buy, and that real inquirers will think best to buy. The book contains 711 octavo pages, neatly bound in cloth, gilt side.

PAPAL ROME.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

This work states the predictions concerning the Papacy in its glory, its gloom, and destruction, together with the most reliable points of history showing their fulfillment, with a graphic statement of her present dying state. The widowhood, the moaning over her fate, the dying struggles under her afflictions, losses, poverty, and burning, are brought out in present history. It is a work of value for its historical quotations, which will be wanted by all interested in this subject. Single copy 15 cts. by mail; $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per hundred by express.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

"A pamphlet of 60 pages (by W. N. Pile), giving an exposition of Rev. 2: 3. The epistles to the 'seven churches of Asia' (the author thinks) are shown to have been prophetic of the seven periods of the gospel age, in addition to their local application. An epitome of church history, from the apostolic age to the present time, is given, leading to the conclusion that we are now in the closing part of the Laodicean period, near the end of the dispensation and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Price, single copy, postpaid, 15 cts.; two copies, 25 cts."

An interesting Tract. We hope it may do much good. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

A NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork.

Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives of Yale College. 8vo., 68 pp.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject.

We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—One copy, 25 cts.; one dozen for $2.50; sent by mail, postpaid. $17 per hundred, by express. Please order freely. AG'T.

RE-PRINTED ELD. S. S. BREWER'S EXPOSITORY WORKS.

Several of Bro. Brewer's works, which have been out of print some time, so that we have not been able to fill orders, are now published, and we can supply as follows:—

"THE LAST DAY TOKENS."

Three volumes in one. The Signs in the Sun Moon, and Stars, with other strange phenomena illustrated with splendid cuts. 216 pp.; 50 cts.

"TREATISE ON REV. XIIITH."

Illustrated with cuts. 25 cts.

"The History of an Immortal Soul."

This is a work of the history of the origin of the dogma, with copious extracts from ancient heathen and Christian writers, to which is added a Scriptural exposition. Price 10 cts.

"THE SEVEN SEALS"

is also regarded as an important work. 15 cts. And the

"Slaying of the Witnesses."

10 cts. AG'T.

A NEW BOOK. "THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL."

An Answer to the Question: "Is the Popular Conception of the Soul that of Holy Scripture?"

BY CHAS. L. IVES, M. D.

Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Yale College.

This is a pamphlet of 119 pages, in which the Author discusses the above question in an interesting and able manner,—showing the material nature of, the mortality and destiny of the Soul,—A future immortality to be the special portion of the Righteous,—What the Bible teaches as to the future of the Wicked,—The intermediate state,—The Resurrection,—That of the Righteous and of the Wicked, etc.

The Author claims that the doctrine set forth,—"Honors God, exalts the Bible, insures preaching of future punishment, subverts Universalism and Infidelity, errors of Romanism, of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, helps in work of Missions, rightly values the body, brings Christian unity, and promotes personal holiness."

We are much pleased with this work. It ought to have a wide circulation. We have a good supply, and hope the friends will order freely. We will sell at the following prices:—25 cts. per copy; $2.00 per dozen, sent by mail; $15.00 per hundred, by express. AG'T.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

BY HENRY CONSTABLE, A. M.

We have this valuable work in its unabridged form of 330 pages, neatly bound in cloth, for sale. Price $1.00; postage, 16 cts.

DRAW ME NEARER.

D-aw me nearer, O my Savior!
May my heart be wholly thine,
E'en by faith to thee united,
As the branch unto the vine.
Draw me to that inner circle
Where thy dearest friends are found,
Perfect trust in thee confiding,
Let thy grace in me abound.

Draw me nearer, O my Savior!
Lest the world's seductive charms
Should in some unguided moment
Lure me from thy sheltering arms.
Break the chains that long have bound me,
And my captive soul set free;
In the hour of fierce temptation,
Draw me nearer, nearer thee.

Draw me nearer, O my Savior!
Thorny though the path may be;
If thy guiding hand doth lead me,
And thy footsteps I can see,
Ever more I'll gladly follow
In the path thy feet have trod;
Rough or smooth it doth not matter,
If it leadeth unto God.

Draw me nearer, O my Savior!
Nearer to thy bleeding side;
May my soul, bathed in that fountain,
From earth's dross be purified.
Cleanse my heart from earth-born passions,
Cast all idols from thy throne;
Ever blessed Lord and Master,
Reign thou in my heart alone.

Draw me nearer, O my Savior!
I would lay my hand in thine,
Whispering, in meek submission,
Ever more thy will, not mine;
I can trust thee, O my Savior,
Knowing well thy will is best;
Sheltered by the "Rock of Ages,"
Shall my soul securely rest.

DELIGHTFUL NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

Dear Brethren, the Editors of the Crisis: I know you will be glad to hear of the wondrous manner in which the truth is spreading in England.

The glorious news of immortality alone through the Christ and the gospel of the kingdom are winning to their confession many of the most eminent ministers, lawyers, statesmen and philanthropists in this country.

Of those who are believing in eternal life in the Christ only may be mentioned, among the Baptists, Messrs. Arthur Mursell, Hugh Stowell Brown, and T. Penrose. Among the Independents (a body answering to the orthodox Congregationalists of the States), Messrs. Edward White, W. Leask, D. D., J. Parker, D. D., Newman Hall, W. Dale (of Birmingham), J. Ashcroft, and others. Among Episcopalians, Messrs. Minton, Constable, Kerr, Warleigh, Bullenger, etc. Besides these, there are many in other denominations whose names it is unnecessary to mention. And there are barristers, and statesmen, and collegiate principals, of the most undoubted judgment and talent, who take sides with the doctrine of eternal life for the righteous only.

Of foreign ministers—French, E. Petavel, D. D., is the most noted. And you will be glad to hear that the head master and professor of Hebrew and French in the central college of the Protestant portion of South Germany has lately been on a visit to England, and through the crowned efforts of your brother, the writer, has gone back to Germany enthusiastic in his apprehension of the truth, with a full intention to scatter it there. Not, indeed, that it is not now measurably believed in that country; for Germany is divided between Universalism and Annihilationism; but the latter is not of a Bible kind, and has much of infidelity mixed in it. He, however, takes the Protestants of Wittemberg the true gospel and hope of life, and that as taught in the Evangels. I have supplied him with tracts and pamphlets, some of them being my own, and some out of the case so kindly sent for gratuitous distribution by the American Advent Missionary Society. He says there has recently been published in Germany a fresh and logical book advocating the principles we teach. I am about, if the means shall enable, to write some concise scriptural tracts for scattering in that country at the approaching general Conference to be held in January next.

England is thoroughly aroused on the question of immortality. There is scarcely a religious or scientific paper but what is either discussing or discoursing upon it. And I have been told on good authority that papers of a lighter literature are having questions asked of them concerning the matter.

Nearly six months ago, I started a religious newspaper, at a penny a week, to help the growing cause of truth. And I have truly abundant reason to bless my God for the service it has been up to the present. I think that brethren in America who believe in the true God and life eternal, and who wait the coming of the day of God, if they saw a copy of Bible Echo—the name of the weekly—would not only not be ashamed of it, but be led to rejoice for the truth, and even the joyful truth that it disseminates. It is contributed to by able writers, who study in their different capacities the learned and the unlearned. For the former, we go into the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, French, etc., as necessity requires, to show out, as in a blaze, the Divine light. While for the unlearned in the languages, we use the plain English, expressive of the critically correct and most irrefragable of facts. As editor of our weekly, I praise God most heartily and gladly for all the success he gives the paper in what abides for his glory.

The Bible Echo circulates nearly 3000 a week (monthly parts included), and its tendency is upward; but this does not pay; indeed, it will have to circulate to the number of 10,000 to pay its own expenses, The reason of this is, that the type is small and the printing and paper good, whilst the price is popular, and little more than nominal. So it has to be partly supported by subscriptions, and I am very thankful to any of the household of faith who help to relieve me of the pecuniary care and loss. I give personally about fifty hours a week to it without remuneration, most of which time is spent in night work—my day being nearly employed to the full at the Repository.

Some of my American brethren are being laid under requisition for the columns of the Echo. Works or articles by Brn. Grant, Couch, Sheldon, Wellcome, Mrs. H. V. Reed, and others, are being printed.

If any of the readers of the Crisis would like to subscribe for the Bible Echo, they can do so to Bro. Adams, at the Crisis Office; to Elder George A. Brown. 608 Arch St., Phila.; or to Elder A. A. Phelps, Bible Banner Office, 75 Barclay St., New York. The subscription is $3.00 a year in advance. The news of the spread of the truth on the European continent, in Australia, India, and Great Britain, will be posted up weekly.

I have much more to say, but must keep it for future letters.

Meanwhile, I desire you to rejoice with me in the extension of the work of the Lord, upon which we hope and rest in life or death. I am, beloved fellow laborers, unto the kingdom of God, yours, covered in the name of Jesus, W. KELLAWAY.

A VISION OF THE SECOND ADVENT.

MRS. PHŒBE PALMER.*

The second coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is one of the most important themes that can arrest and occupy the attention of the redeemed family, next to the subject of our own personal salvation from all sin, and the salvation of those around us.

How surprising it is that christians do not more generally discern the signs of the times! The things that were written aforetime were written for our instruction. During the time of the first advent, the incarnate Savior reproved those who took no pains to discern the signs of the times. Had they done this, they might have known that he was the long-promised Messiah, and not have brought upon themselves personally the guilt of rejecting God's Anointed. While I have never had sympathy with any who may be denunciatory of those who differ from them in opinion in regard to the glorious and speedy appearing of our Lord, I have been settled in my conviction over twenty years, that "His chariot will not long delay;

We hear the rumbling wheels, and pray,
Triumphant Lord, appear!"

I have on two occasions, in the still hours of the night, had very remarkable visions, which were wholly scriptural and strangely solemn. "For God speaketh once, yea, twice, yet man perceiveth it not. In a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed. Then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction." Job 33 : 14. I will give a brief account of one.

It was night, and everything in nature seemed to be going on as usual. The stars were beaming with a quiet lustre, with the exception of one beautiful constellation, whose unusual brightness attracted my observation. As I continued to gaze on the luminous cluster of stars, they assumed amazing brightness, and I thought in my vision that I called my husband from an adjoining room in haste to behold the wondrous sight. While we were together gazing on the cluster of burning stars, I exclaimed, "How beautiful!" when, quick as the forked lightning, the glorious constellation assumed the character of some alphabet unknown to me, forming a sign written in letters of burning light, and spanning the heavens. I will not attempt to describe my amazement, yet, up to this moment, I had not thought that what I was witnessing might betoken the immediate coming of our Lord.

But as I gazed upon the blazing sign encircling the heavens, it suddenly flashed upon my mind that this might be the sign of his appearing, and I said—"How wonderful! Oh, I wonder if the Savior is now coming, and whether this is not the 'sign of the Son of man in the heavens!'" The exclamation had scarcely passed my lips, when it began to rain fire. As the large drops of liquid flame descended like so many blazing meteors, the world was filled with a glare of unearthly light, which far exceeded the glare of the mid-day sun. Never, never, while memory endures, can the scene which then daguerreotyped itself on my mind be obliterated; yet I hesitate in permitting my pen to trace it on paper. In fact, I have never before attempted to portray it, and yet the wondrous scenes of that solemn hour are as vividly before me as if it occurred last night, though twenty years have intervened.

I have seen Martin's far-famed picture of the Last Judgment, which, though so calculated to inspire solemn awe, but faintly shadows forth the visions of that midnight hour. I remembered that it was written, "The Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not. As in the days before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away. So shall the coming of the Son of man be." But now the Spirit brought to my remembrance—and oh, with what vividness and certainty!—that "the heavens and earth which are now, by the same word have been kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." And now my spirit's eye, though still embodied in its earthly tenement, looked out upon the awful consummation—the winding up of time's drama—the coming of the great and terrible day of the Lord. It had come "as a thief in the night." The heavens, being on fire, were about to be dissolved, and the elements, I well knew, must quickly melt with the fervent heat. All faces gathered paleness. Oh, the anguish depicted on countenances of the many neglecters of salvation—the masses who had been taken unawares, immersed in the world, its gains and pleasures, its friendships and its follies!

As I beheld the terror of the many who were unprepared to meet God, my heart was indescribably saddened, and would fain, with unutterable yearnings, have commended them to the mercy of God through our Lord Jesus Christ. My first impulse was to throw myself on my face before the Lord, to plead once more for sinners. I would have made the attempt but could not. How shall I describe it? I did make the effort to pray but could not. I felt that this life's opportunities for presenting at the throne of grace intercessory supplications for myself and others were now past, and prayer was about to be exchanged for eternal praise.

Would that I could describe the feelings and sentiments that then pervaded my mind, in regard to the saved and the unsaved! When I would have pleaded with an impetuosity like that of Moses in behalf of his erring brethren, when the Lord would have destroyed them, my mouth was stopped; I had not one word to utter. I saw that everything that infinite Love could devise had been done. God having sworn by himself, because he could swear by no greater, that he had no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, had been bringing into requisition every conceivable agency, consistent with the economy of grace, to arrest the unsaved in their downward course, evermore beseechingly saying, "Turn ye! turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die?" And were the terror overpast, the wicked would still do wickedly, treasuring up to themselves wrath against the day of wrath.

As I could not pray for the unsaved, even for my dearest friends or relatives (for friendships and earthly relationships seemed to have been dissolving), my heart would have turned in prayer to my Savior singly for myself. But oh, how shall I describe that effort? I had ever, in my approaches to God in prayer, apprehended Jesus as the one and only way. My spirit had never known any medium of approach unto the Father but through the Son, as the great atoning sacrifice. Now, as I would have come near to the throne of the Father, through the world's Mediator and sin atoning sacrifice, I felt that the solemn, awful crisis in the winding up of this world's history had come, when He who was once offered to bear the sins of many was to appear the second time without sin (Heb. 9 : 28); that is, not as a sin-offering. That had been made. The patriarchal age of two thousand years had passed away. The dispensation of types and shadows, which, during the long period of two thousand years more, so strongly and tangibly prefigured to the world good things to come, had come to an end by the bringing in of a better hope at the birth of Christ. He in whom the types and shadows were gloriously fulfilled had appeared. By the offering of himself once for all on Calvary's Mount, he had to all who had looked to him put away sin, and ushered in the last great dispensation of the Spirit, which was to precede his coming to claim the kingdoms of this world and the earth's great jubilee. And now that at last the six thousand years of the world's history had been accomplished, the opening of the seventh was to usher in the reign of Him of whom it stands written: "Behold He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him."

I knew that the impenitent must shortly be consumed from off the face of the earth, and then my thoughts turned to my individual self and others who had trusted in Christ and remained alive till the coming of the Lord. And now the words were brought vividly to mind, "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed; for this corruption must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. 1 Cor. 15 : 51."

Not wishing to behold the terror of the wicked, I had thrown myself on my face before the Lord. I saw that what I now was I must remain to all eternity. The question was not what good works I had performed, or whether I had believed in sympathy with this or the other denomination; but had I been simply and solely in sympathy with my Savior, and walked with garments unpolluted by the world, cleansed from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit?

Would that I could set forth the penetrating realizations of that hour, to the exclusion of every boast but Christ crucified! I saw if I had ever done anything to glorify God, it was not I that had done it, but the grace of God in me, and therefore I had not the slightest plea on the ground of works, inasmuch I had not been sufficient of myself so much as to think a good thought. If I had received or promulgated truth, it was not my truth, but God's truth; and if others had, through my instrumentality, accepted and been saved through the belief of the truth, it was all, all of God, and only through me, as a channel through which he had permitted it to flow out upon the world.

I thought I had before apprehended the deep import of the words, "Not by works of righteousness that we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost;" but now my heart felt and owned the solemn significance as never before. Now I saw the one great question, which was to decide whether I was to be gathered with God's elect, was not merely whether I had been maintaining and preaching truth in relation to Christ's second coming or the claims of the Redeemer on the entire service of the hearts and lives of his redeemed crea ures, but had I presented my whole being to Him through the bleeding Lamb, and, by the renewings of the Holy Ghost, walked with blood-washed garments in entire newness of life? Through grace alone I will testify that I did feel, amid these solemn searchings, that Christ had been, and was now, my only hope, my all in all.

In solemn suspense, yet with an assured faith, I awaited the moment when, in the twinkling of an eye, "this mortal should put on immortality," and I should be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. Each moment, I imagined, must be the last, ere corruption must put on incorruption. I expected every moment to be raised above the doomed earth. I had all my powers of reason in exercise amid that solemn vision. I had, as before observed, thrown myself on my face before the Lord; and though the change from mortal to immortal had not passed over me, I already seemed to be rising—ascending above the earth.

But I had not yet passed the boundaries of the material world; the vision was too much for me to bear in the flesh. And though I gradually struggled back into the consciousness that I was still among the scenes of probation, it was long before my body received its wonted vigor. My tongue had stiffened in my mouth, and my whole frame was well-nigh petrified with this overwhelming manifestation of things to come.

Well may we, in prospect of the judgment day, adopt the language of the sainted Fletcher, and pray, "O that the thought, the glorious hope of Millennial blessedness may animate me to perfect holiness in the fear of God, that I may be accounted worthy to escape the terrible judgments, which will prepare its way, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21 : 36.

"Waiting we stand,
And watching till our Savior shall appear,
Joyful to cry as eastern skies grow clear,
'The Lord's at hand!'"

A FAILURE in a good cause is better than a triumph in a bad one.

PRACTICAL.

C. MENDENHALL.

In these days of deception we find many who profess to have what they really do not possess. One will claim to be wealthy when he is not. Another will set up relationship or acquaintance with those to whom he is unknown. And numerous misrepresentations are made from quite as great a variety of motives. There seems to be a strong desire to keep up appearances, and thus it is "The Sham family" is a numerous one. Those who are not christians, and those who claim to be followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene, are found in its fold. In religious ranks how often do we find those who carry an abundant supply of religion into prayer meeting, but never into the counting house or workshop. Surely, if it is good in one place, it is in another, and should be so interwoven into our lives as to become inseparable.

"Some, who profess to lead a christian life,
Are never free from family jars and strife.
Although at church they seem so very meek,
At home a pleasant word they never speak,
Unless a stranger happens there, and then
They're dreadful nice; but when he's gone again,
They soon forget 'tis pleasant to be clever,
And go again to fighting worse than ever."

We have theories abundant; let us now practice. We are now in the last stage of time; a time when action is necessary. Let us then be up and doing the Master's will, not only in some great undertaking, but by a consistent life. Look to the little things of life, be a christian in every sense of the word at all times. We want a religion that is practical and "commonplace" enough to make us known as christians by our conduct.

If the religion of Jesus is worth anything, it will so permeate a man's character and restrain the evil within him, that men will see his good works, and glorify his Father which is in heaven. True religion will bear the test of home trials, the temptations of the shop, the trials of the counting house, and the provocations of a business meeting. Let us then see that all is given up to Jesus, and pray that peevishness and all peace destroying proclivities may be rooted out, making us fit temples for the habitation of the Holy Spirit. Then will God accept us, our associates will know that we are Christ's without asking us, our influence will be great for good, and when Jesus comes to reward we shall hear the glad words—"Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." May we be of that number is our desire. To this end let us trust in and obey our Lord and Master Jesus Christ in all things, being not only hearers, but doers of the word, striving by the grace of God to live according to his will, avoiding anything which would bring reproach on the cause of righteousness, or that would become a hindrance to some poor seeking soul.

Our Father grant us abundant supplies of wisdom, strength, and power, that we may know and perform that which shall be pleasing in thy sight, then shall we help swell the throng of redeemed ones, who shall sing praises unto thy name forever. "Now unto Him that is able to keep you from falling, and to preserve you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever." Amen.

TURNING POINTS.

E S JENNINGS.

No human life, whether grand as a success, or lamentable as a failure, has been without some day from which might be dated anew life's pilgrimage. There are "turning-points" in the life-road of every individual, whether he lives for himself alone, or whether he lives for the good of others. Never to be forgotten, or to grow fatally dim, through all the changing scenes of life, even when declining years creep swiftly on, are the recollections which cluster around that day which forms a new era in any human life.

As a duty which I owe to those who have solicited and encouraged my labors as a minister in the word and doctrines of the divinely inspired Scriptures, as well as a duty which I conscientiously owe to myself, I wish to make the following statements:

First, I will say to those who, by partial arrangement, have been encouraged to expect my presence and labors among them the coming winter, that it becomes an imperative duty to withdraw all such encouragement. My reasons are obvious. I have preached only twice in over six weeks, and then it was a perilous attempt. I am still in Lewis Co., in the Northern part of the state of N. Y., unable to go to my friends.

The intense interest that I felt, and the extreme anxiety of mind that I experienced previous to and also during our late campmeeting at Springfield, and the unusually exciting features associated therewith, together with the continued pressure of mind occasioned by a life-work so uncongenial to every feeling of my nature, have so strained and weakened my brain and nerve forces generally, as to make it expedient for me to withdraw myself altogether from a position and work which would be liable at any time to subject me to the same causes, producing in turn the same result,—which result could not be experienced many times without proving permanently disastrous to my future usefulness in any sphere, as well as to my mental prosperity. In this, I not only follow my own candid convictions, but the advice of the best medical skill I have been able to consult.

The reason already named, is of sufficient importance to warrant me in closing, what may seem to some, my greatest field and widest door for usefulness.

Although the circumstances of my failing health have led me to a speedy and determined decision in the matter, that is not my only reason for such a conclusion. Many circumstances combined have for more than three years at times greatly exercised my mind and agitated my feelings. Disheartened and discouraged, I have often seriously questioned the consistency or expediency of further pursuing a work, especially in a capacity attended with so much difficulty, and seemingly needless perplexity.

In view of my late withdrawal from our State Conference, and the queries which have consequently arisen in the minds of many, I deem it opportune to here state that which I have freely stated to others,—that I have no denominational interest outside of the people with whom I have been associated for twenty years. But, that they have been as judicious as they might have been in seeking to advance the best interest of their cause, or that they have wisely taken advantage of and appropriated the means and material within their power, for the promotion of its prosperity, I do not believe. The manifest slackness relative to church order, and the total lack of any cooperative system between the different churches, cannot be otherwise than detrimental to the growth and progress of any people claiming for themselves a separate denominational interest. And, in view of the great waste of time and talent, and of health and vitality, together with the financial loss, and the poor protection both of churches and ministers, which such a state of things inevitably necessitates; and inasmuch as it is beyond my power to improve them, I must confess, in all frankness, that the only sectarian cloak that I ever wore hangs but loosely about me.

I do not say that a strong man would be justified in feeling as I do, neither could I condemn him. I have not the slightest wish to dampen the ardor or zeal of any who may wish to devote their life to the interests of a cause in which I have spent the greater portion of fifteen years of the best of my life. I have done it conscientiously. I dare not say that they are lost years; though possibly lost to all others, they must still live in the great and never-to-be forgotten lessons which experience and careful observation have indelibly marked upon the tablets of my own heart.

My future outlook is not as bright as I could wish, but having thrown off in part the heavy load of cankering care which racked my brain and strained my nerves, I find myself growing stronger, and am now able to read and write some by measuring my work by my strength. I am only in the prime of my life. My muscular powers are good, and apparently in a healthy condition. I have the strongest faith that I shall rally from the unpleasant attack which has so strongly threatened a break; and I cannot for a moment believe that my usefulness is at an end.

Matured in years; matured in mental and physical development and strength; educated in conscience, thought, feelings and affections; versed in the needs and study of human nature by an experience in almost any department of real life; trained in the school of adversity, and tried in the furnace of affliction, I stand alone in the wide world, and calmly survey the mighty field before me.

With a broader mantle of charity, and a more liberal feeling toward all mankind; and with higher aims and nobler sentiments stirring my heart, than ever before, I am waiting and hoping that the dark cloud which has settled down will ere long be lifted, and that I may again find my allotted place and work in the world-wide field whitened to harvest. No; I could not be an idler. More to be coveted than all the titles which wealth or royalty can bestow, richer by far in true happiness than the grandest palace that ever covered a kingly head, and more satisfactory to a true ambition than all the fame that ever crowned an Alexander or a Napoleon, may be the proud consciousness of having lived not for self alone, but for fellow man.

I scent from afar the fragrance of the immortal fruits and flowers, which other hands have planted in the wide-spreading and far-reaching field for useful literature; words and works that live, and, like fragrant flowers, send out their sweetness long after those who planted them are wrapped in deathly slumber. I long to range the inviting field, untrammeled in thought, and unbiassed in feeling, and to be able to test more fully the richness and worth of their patient toil and careful research. I even dare to hope that I shall be permitted to place my own simple products beside them, and in doing so feel that I am leaving to the world that which, perchance, shall be a blessing to some, when the best sermons and choicest sentences that I ever uttered before a public audience shall have been forgotten and I no longer remembered.

An impassable gulf seems to lie between. The dark waters still roll at my feet. Powerless in myself to do that which must needs be done I reach my helpless hands and long to be lifted over. The mistakes and blunders of my life are many, but I still knock on the door thrown open wide by a pitying Christ, and rest in the arms of a Savior's love; and by the never-changing principles which love and mercy enjoin upon all, I hope ever to be guided and governed. I shall gratefully remember those who have so kindly lifted me when falling, encouraged me when fainting, and helped me when suffering.

And now, in closing, let me further say to all, that whether I still share in your pity or suffer your censure, whether I launch my barque anew, to drift alone on life's stormy sea only to feel as I have often felt in the past—

That nobody knew, and nobody cared,
Whither I drifted, or what fate I shared.

I hope ever, at all times, and under all circumstances, to prove myself worthy of the noblest title of honor that I ever expect to claim—a true Christian woman—and ever to wear the coveted adornment of a meek and quiet spirit.

A LITTLE LEAVEN.

G. F. BOYNTON.

EDITORS CRISIS:—About one year ago, a copy of your paper came accidentally into my possession, which I read and pondered upon. I searched the Scriptures to see if these things were so, and I found it true. I sent for a copy, and have read it with more eagerness and satisfaction than any of the many religious papers that come to my house. I have been a Presbyterian elder for many years of my past life, and am now a deacon in a Congregationalist church, the church in which I was raised and educated; but I never understood the Scriptures properly, nor so satisfactorily and clearly, as since I have studied them in the light of the Second Advent doctrine. The doctrines of immortality, future punishment, state of the soul after death, etc., which were formerly myths inexplicable, are now as simple and plain as any other gospel truths.

Though consecrated to God in infancy, by devout christian parents, by the ordinance of sprinkling, I have come to learn at the age of thirty-eight, after being twenty-three years a church member, that infant baptism is not taught in the Scriptures, but that penitent believers only are to receive it; hence I was last week "buried with Christ in baptism," according to the command of our Savior. I know not what my church will say, nor what action they will take, and it matters not; I obey the commands of Christ first.

This leaven has caused my wife to take the same course with me. But the most remarkable effect is witnessed in the case of an old lady eighty years of age, to whom we loaned and read the papers. She was led first to give up her faithful old pipe, a companion of over half a century, by reading your articles on tobacco, and she was recently immersed in baptism, professing faith in Christ. God bless his holy gospel, and enable us to spread the glad tidings of salvation to thousands without a hope in Christ.

REPORT OF CONFERENCE.

The Maine Annual S. A. C. Conference met at Kennebunkport, according to appointment, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 13th, and listened to a discourse from Bro. J. Carr. Not many having come in from abroad, the next day was devoted to social meetings, and in the evening there was preaching by Bro. H. S. Mitchell.

Thursday 15th, conference met at 7½ o'clock A. M. for business, when the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year; President, George Humphrey; Vice President, F. A. Baker; Secretary, W. H. Mitchell; Treasurer, R. R. York; Tract and Business Agent, I. C. Wellcome. Executive Board: Jeremiah Carr, Jesse Gay, and Jared Whitman. Committee on Tract and Mission work: I. C. Wellcome, H. C. Freeman, O. S. French, of Dexter, H. G. Smiley, of Augusta, Wm. Clark, of Hermon, and H. S. Mitchell. Committee on Ordination: J. Gay, I. C. Wellcome, and W. H. Mitchell.

Reports from the Secretary, Treasurer, and Tract and Business Agent were read and accepted. From the Treasurer's report we learn there has been received into the treasury the past year, $566.90. There has been paid out $539.02, leaving a balance in the treasury of $27.88. We here take occasion to say that of the sum pledged at Mechanic Falls in 1873, a large amount remains unpaid. We suppose those who pledged could redeem their pledges, or else they would not have pledged. Now if this is the case, the money ought to be paid in and used in the great missionary enterprise.

We hope those who have not yet redeemed their pledges, will do so at once by sending the money to our Treasurer, Bro. R. R. York.

We would also say that there was pledged this year at the Pittsfield campmeeting, $364, a part of which was paid in. $90 of this was paid out to defray the expenses of the meeting. We think our friends did nobly at this meeting considering its size, and we do hope a general interest may be awakened up among the people to donate liberally toward scattering tracts and using such other means necessary to get the great truths pertaining to these times before the people.

The afternoon session of the conference was mostly devoted to hearing reports from the ministers and delegates. Most of the reports were encouraging, and all seemed in good cheer, fully determined to do all they could in getting a people ready for the coming of the Just One.

Voted to dismiss Bro. E. B. Wells, at his request, from this conference.

This conference expressed their sympathy with the quite general desire among brethren for a National Conference, and chose Brn. J. Gay and I. C. Wellcome delegates to such conference in case it should be called.

A vote of thanks was tendered the church in Kennebunkport for their kind care of those who gathered to this meeting.

In the evening Bro. J. Hill preached from Isa. 26 : 8, followed by several good warm exhortations. Thus closed our twenty-first annual conference in Maine.

We think there ought to be a greater effort made to attend these annual gatherings. Ministers present: I. C. Wellcome, Jesse Gay, J. Carr, J. Hill, H. S. and W. H. Mitchell. Delegates: Geo. Humphrey, J. C. Libby, and Bro. Jacques.

W. H. MITCHELL, Sec.

Below we append the report of our Tract and Mission Agent.

TRACT AND MISSION AGENT'S REPORT.

Beloved brethren: Your committee have but a small amount of business to report, yet with gratitude to God we are happy to report some progress in the work of giving the last dispensational message of the gospel to this generation. During the last year we have been blessed with means to circulate tracts in many destitute fields, where but little gospel labor has been bestowed.

Accordingly we have sent out $357.75 worth into Kansas, Mo., Tenn., Ala., Ga., Ky., Fla., N. C., S. C., Penn., Ill., Iowa, Minn. and Me., to be circulated by faithful workers in the vineyard. We have received some very cheering accounts of good accomplished by these tracts, in awakening inquiry, and inducing study of the Scriptures on the glorious theme involved in the blessed hope of our Lord's coming and kingdom, in the renewal of the work of grace among the churches, and the conversion of sinners. Did our brethren generally realize the beneficial results produced by the circulating of tracts, they would bestow much more attention to it, and give more largely for it, and our preachers who now refuse or neglect to scatter tracts, would enter into that work.

We have had calls from Georgia and from Kansas for missionaries to enter those fields with the Second Advent message, but not having money paid into the treasury sufficient to sustain such an undertaking, nor any men who could go, such calls could not be complied with.

Our mission tent has been repaired at an expense of some sixty dollars, and after an almost fruitless effort to obtain ministers to travel with it, we procured the services of Eld. A. W. Taylor to take charge of the tent mission, and Eld. Thomas Rines as tent master. They held meetings in Chesterfield two weeks, and at Livermore Falls two weeks, during which it rained most of the time, and the meetings were not largely attended; but we trust the Lord will bring some good out of it. Failing to obtain the aid of any other ministers, Bro Taylor concluded he could not go on longer and preach constantly. We therefore suspended the effort, and no other meetings have been held with the tent, much to our regret. The tent, however, was used at our two campmeetings to good advantage, and it seems almost indispensable at those meetings.

Inasmuch as tent mission work is of far greater service in the cause of Christ than campmeetings, we query why so little vital attention is paid to the former, while so much is paid to the latter; and we suggest that it would be of great benefit to the cause of Christ if our ministers and churches could awaken to this subject, and renew their efforts in tent meetings. EVILS OF TOBACCO USING.

Tobacco-using is a sin.

Every law in the universe is obligatory, and not one can be disregarded without committing sin. Is not sin "the transgression of the law," according to holy writ? Why should we make so wide a distinction between moral and physical laws as to regard the strict observance of one sacred duty, while the other is treated as a matter of convenience or pleasure? Surely, there can be no satisfactory answer. But the vice of tobacco-using is a direct transgression of the moral law, as well as of physical law; for the man who consciously indulges in a habit which he knows must result in premature death, commits a suicide just as effectually as does he who puts a knife to his throat, or ends his life by a pistol shot.

Tobacco-using is barbarous.

It is a custom which originated with the savage barbarians of North America, from which it was communicated to the rest of the world by the first discoverers of this continent. What a humiliating spectacle, when we behold civilization sitting at the feet of barbarism and learning to smoke! When we think for a moment of the terrible effects if this dreadful vice, for such it really is, we are almost forced to the conclusion that humanity had been fortunate if America with all its wealth of forests, prairies, and mines, together with its poison, tobacco, had remained the same unknown, untilled wilderness which it was when Columbus first turned his adventurous face toward the setting sun. Is it not a sad breach of morals for christians to imitate the vices of savages?

Tobacco stupefies the moral sensibilities.

One of the most marked effects of the continued use of tobacco is its stupefying effect upon the moral faculties. It is, in fact, a sort of spiritual narcotic. The man who uses it for many years often becomes gradually deficient in moral sense. At least, his acute perception of right and wrong becomes materially lessened. It is an absolute impossibility for a man who indulges largely in tobacco to be as good a christian as he might be if he was free from the habit. This is the testimony of hundreds of reformed tobacco-users.

Tobacco excites the passions, and so leads to crime.

Like all other stimulants, tobacco excites the animal passions; and as it at the same time, to a certain extent, deprives the individual of his ordinary soundness of judgment, he has two concurrent and powerful influences to lead him to the commission of whatever base act the circumstances of the moment may prompt.

LICENTIOUSNESS.

The preacher of the gospel should not hesitate, in times like these, to show, with great plainness of speech, the fearful penalties of licentiousness. It is not an agreeable subject to handle. One hesitates to give occasion for the impression that those who assemble in the churches upon the Sabbath are in need of such preaching, because indeed, but few do need it; and yet the truth ought in some way to be deeply impressed on the minds of the young. There is great need for knowledge on this subject. . . .

There is no vice against which God has erected such severe penalties; none which society punishes with such implacable scorn; none which so destroys self-respect and so breaks down moral character; none which is a more certain precursor of eternal death; and there is none which strikes with such ruinous effect at the very foundations of society. It destroys the family relation. It blasts the home and all that is sweet, and holy, and blessed in that sanctuary. It fills the veins of innocent children with its accursed taint, and if they survive, it is to bear a life of pain and of loathsome disease.

There is no vice, no crime, which so utterly lays waste all the fields of human happiness, and sows them so thick with the thorns of disease, disgrace, and bodily and mental suffering as this. The destruction of moral character is such that the man who yields to it becomes ready for any other act, however mean, groveling, or dishonest. The woman who yields to it becomes a foul, blasphemous virago, and after a brief career, not to exceed an average of five years, dies in anguish and infamy; or if, through God's grace, she pauses and retraces her steps, it is through a vale of tears and sorrow wide as her life is long. That path "takes hold on hell," and one step in it gives hell a hold on him or her who takes it, which only the power of Almighty God can break. And yet it is the seeds of this awful moral poison which is being sown broadcast over the land every day. Whether we like the duty or not, it is a duty which the parent, the pastor, the religious press, and all who have the ears of the young at this time, to point out the truth in regard to this insinuating, seductive, destructive, and damning vice.—Int.

LOOK AWAY!

GEO E. LEE.

Look away! look away to realms of day,
Beyond the gloom of night.
Now listen all, to the Savior's call,
The city is just in sight.

Hear the cry! hear the cry! the morn is nigh!
Press on with earnest zeal;
The trumpet's sound soon will echo round,
With gladness in every peal.

Sinner, come! sinner, come! to Father's home,
There's room enough for all.
Do not delay! he will save to-day,
If you at his feet will fall.

Let us watch! let us pray! that we may say
When all the earth shall mourn,
"I've fought the fight,' and maintained the right,"
And hear in return, "Well done."

Loudly sing! loudly sing! we'll praise our King,
Who soon will come to reign;
The earth he'll then make anew again,
Removing its every stain.

Now rejoice! now rejoice! lift up your voice,
Triumphantly adore.
He'll "quickly come," and receive us home,
To dwell with him evermore.

There no tear, there no sigh, shall e'er pass by,
No death shall bring its woes;
For saints shall rise to receive the prize,
Who now in the graves repose.

Look away! then away from mortal clay,
To that unfading crown,
There's rest for you when earth's toils are through,
And Jesus with rest comes down.

A DYING BELIEF.

The history of the doctrine of endless punishment in early times has been elaborately discussed in the Christian Union. The present phase of its history may, I think, be summed up in this: it is rapidly dying out of the minds of men.

A superficial view might give an opposite impression. The doctrine still stands in the creeds of almost the entire Christian church. In this country at least the avowed dissenters from it are in numbers an insignificant minority. But the very body which to the eye presents this solid front is honeycombed with doubt and disbelief. The church to-day only half believes in the endlessness of future punishment. The time can hardly be distant when it will wholly reject the doctrine.

A few broad facts may be mentioned in support of this conclusion. First, the alteration which within a recent period has taken place in the form of the doctrine, among its avowed supporters, is immense, and is the augury of a still more radical change. It is not long since a hell of literal fire was generally preached. Now that idea is rejected even among the most orthodox. What has produced this change? Simply the recoil of the moral sense from a thing too horrible to be true. To modern thought there is no more odious figure than the executioner, under the barbarous laws of the Middle Ages, torturing his victim with the rack and the fire; and the conception of the Almighty as doing the same on an infinite scale and forever was too repulsive for the christian mind to retain. It was abandoned because enlightened christian feeling declared that it could not be true; and men's intellects, following in the wake of their moral sentiments, learned to take as figurative texts which had formerly been held to teach a literal lake of fire.

The identical sentiment which overthrew the idea of endless physical torment tends irresistibly to destroy the belief in endless spiritual torment. The former gave way first, simply because it appeals more strikingly to the imagination. As men come to feel that spiritual suffering, with hope forever banished and moral corruption forever fastened on the soul, is worse than any lake of fire, they will repel the idea that God can shut up his creatures in the one any more than in the other.

Another sign of the change of belief is the change in the actual attitude of the church. I think the time is very recent when no one who disbelieved in eternal punishment could look for admission to an orthodox church. That is changing fast. Even the Presbyterian church, the peculiar champion of orthodoxy, often admits to its membership persons who admit their unsoundness on this point. What the Presbyterian church does to some extent, the other Orthodox churches do more freely. Partly the alteration is due simply to an increasing spirit of toleration; but it also indicates the actual growth of a new belief within the religious community. The pulpit as yet is guarded against the heresy, but even there the line of defense is wavering. So, again, I might point to the development within a century of the Universalist and Unitarian churches, and to the unmistakable tendency toward fraternal relations between that element in those bodies which stands for earnest religion and the element in the old churches which stands for wide christian catholicity. Going beyond our national limits, it is well known that in Germany the more hopeful belief as to the future world is strong among men of scholarship and evangelical piety. In England, that belief has a wide foothold within the Established Church; and among the Dissenters the Independent clergy, at least, tend very largely to restorationist or annihilationist views.

This also is to be said; the most promising types of practical Christianity at this time carry in themselves the ripening germs of an utter denial of the doctrine of eternal perdition. Within the old lines and under the shadow of the old creeds there has sprung up a phase of Christianity which weds vital spiritual faith, and ardent practical activity, with new forms of thought. It is one of those rejuvenations which are the marvel and the glory of the history of Christianity. Now, as in the days of Luther, corruptions of belief are being sloughed off; the spirit of Christ is clothing itself with new power, and lifting men into clearer light, and sweeter disposition, and more useful life. The movement is not local. It can be traced in all churches and outside of the churches, and in all lands. Its universal characteristic is a spirit of practical benevolence, and, corresponding to this, a conception of God which clothes him more gloriously than before to the thoughts of men, and expresses, with a fulness and emphasis unfelt before, that in his inmost nature and his whole administration he is Almighty Love. That conception, and the new life which it is inspiring in the world, carries with it, as surely as the rising sun brings the banishment of darkness, the ultimate denial of a hopeless eternity of misery and sin for any of God's creatures.

From such various considerations as these, it seems evident that the doctrine of eternal punishment is perishing from the living belief of men. The cause of its decadence is that the moral sense of mankind has outgrown it. It is perishing just as the belief in witchcraft did; as the belief in the rightness of slavery did; as the belief that God created men expressly that they might be damned for his own glory is perishing. There comes a time, as mankind are by the divine spirit raised into nobler ways of thought and feeling, when immoral and unworthy ideas are quietly left behind by the better mind of the race. It is not argument, it is not historical proof, it is not even exposition of the letter of Scripture that kills them. They perish because they stand convicted before enlightened christian feeling as unworthy to endure.

The doctrine that at the end of this life God shuts up some men to an eternity of suffering and of sin cannot maintain itself before the tribunal of the christian mind or heart. It is essentially and utterly foreign to any worthy conception of God. Nothing is weaker than the cry of "sentimentalism" raised against such statements. It is not the weak and unworthy side of human nature that protests against the dogma. It is the highest sense of justice, the deepest movement of the mind toward apprehending a perfect God, that is repelled and shocked by the doctrine. It is the holiest emotions of the soul that recoil most intensely from this gospel of despair. The arguments which seek to justify it to the reason and conscience wither and shrink in the light of calm reason. There are those who refuse to consider God as embodied love, from a fancy that love in its sublimest and divine development lacks something of strength, and must be supplemented by a justice which is not of love. But if we view God as embodied justice, the case stands the same. Every conception of justice is outraged by the idea of an eternity of suffering as the award for the sins of this brief life. To say that sin is an infinite evil and therefore merits infinite punishment is a quibbling as paltry as the conclusion is dreadful. It may be said that God only knows the evil of sin. If sin then be so transcendently evil, are we to suppose that the Holy One uses his omnipotence to make it perpetual?

The worst feature in the doctrine seems to be strangely overlooked by its defenders. That a just God should be supposed to inflict endless suffering for the sins of this life is bad enough; but what shall we say of the idea that a holy God shuts up men to sin forever? Any right thought of the Almighty brings us to this, that his whole infinitude of being is pledged to bringing his creatures out of sin into holiness. He cannot do other than this and be God. His whole administration of heaven, and earth, and hell, must look to this. Otherwise, God would be less good than he calls his creatures to be, less good than some of them actually are. To say that the wicked work out their own endless misery without his interference is simply to say that he lets the universe slip out of his hands just where it needs him most. The assumption that the resources of Omnipotence are exhausted in the reclaiming influences of this life is totally without foundation in observation of human nature or in any worthy conception of the Infinite One. All these attempted explanations are but the feeblest makeshifts to bolster up an assertion against which the moral sense steadily protests. Whatever line of honest and earnest thought we follow, the mind returns to its first position. The first impulse of the heart is the last word of the intellect—the doctrine is a slander upon God.

* * * * * * * *

The decline and probable extinction of the dogma of eternal punishment seems to me a ground for the deepest rejoicing. It is the removal from the divine Father of the worst imputation that his children ever cast upon him. It takes away a weight which has rested with gloom unspeakable on countless tender hearts. It opens the way—it is not necessarily and of itself the way, but it opens the way—to a religion not only of greater joy, but of firmer faith and more beneficent activity, than we have yet had. I believe too that as one effect it will give greater force to all the motives derived from the future life—those of fear as well as those of hope. At present there is very little effective use of the motive of fear by intelligent preachers, because they are overweighted by the excessive severity of the doctrine they profess. Even in attempting to preach it they recoil; their whole strength goes in nerving themselves up to an intellectual assent, and they have not strength to strike with the weapon whose weight they can barely sustain. I believe that the solemn declarations and awful imagery of Scripture will take on a new force and reality when stripped of the attribute of endless and unfruitful suffering which now repels from them altogether. And especially I believe that nothing will more promote the spread of living Christianity among men than divesting it of this excresence.

The men who zealously maintain this doctrine, with the idea that in so doing they are guarding the substance of Christianity, seem to me absolutely mistaken. They are like men in an overladen ship laboring in a storm, who should carefully protect the worse than useless ballast that is dragging the vessel down. Christianity must prevail over its adversaries by purifying itself—first in the lives of its members, and next in its conception of truth. The really dangerous unbelief of the time is that which ignores God and leaves the moral element out of the government of the universe. It is to be overtaken by a presentation of moral truth which will irresistibly attract men by its nobility and self-evident value. Central in such a presentation must be the character of God, and any conception of God which makes him leave a part of his creatures to misery which is fruitless and sin which is endless will fail, as it ought to fail, to command the belief of men.—Geo. S. Merriam, in Chris. Union.

PRAYER.

O. R. MERRILL.

"Prayer is appointed to convey
The blessings God designs to give."

To pray is to entreat, to implore, to supplicate. It is the life and power of religion. Without it there can be no true, heartfelt devotion. Yet how few there are who really pray, entreat, implore, supplicate. Those who feel the importance of living a holy and spiritual life cannot live without praying. It is a delight for such to hold frequent converse with the Father of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The Savior says—"Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father who is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret will reward thee openly." How good it is thus to do; and how many times we feel that we talk with God as a man talks with his friend; we feel as it were that Jesus is with us; we open our eyes and behold him.

Praise the Lord for the privilege of prayer! to pray "when none but God is near," to ask and receive," that our joy may be full. If we want temporal or spiritual blessings, abide in God, and have his word abide in us, then ask, and have them. The promise is—"Ask, and it shall be given." Nothing hard. The terms are easy; so easy that the weakest child of God can comply. "Let us come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in every time of need." "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." "Pray without ceasing," for it is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning us.

While I feel it good to pray in secret, I also find it blessed to call on the name of the Lord in public. None should excuse themselves from praying in public prayer-meetings, for it is the life and power of the meeting if offered in faith. Some excuse themselves by saying—"I have no gift in prayer." This is wrong. If we are filled with the Spirit, and open our mouths, we shall not lack for utterance.

If we have a willing mind, and are humble, it will be a delight to "pray for one another." Let all join with one accord in praising God, and the blessing of heaven will descend, and "we shall have a heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus." Let us "watch unto prayer," and live a good and practical life. Prayer then will be a delight, and the Lord will manifest himself a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God.

It is good to pray for the preachers. I have found it so. Try it. You will be astonished. Why, it makes all the difference in the world. Just try it, and all fault-finding will be gone. You will just begin to enjoy the preaching. I am telling you what I know. This is what I prayed one Sabbath morn. "O Lord, if thou hast helped Bro. M. to select a subject, wilt thou help him to give us something to comfort, cheer, strengthen, and build us up." The result was that I received comfort, strength, and was cheered and built up. So I say, pray for the preacher. It will have a wonderful effect. We shall enjoy the preaching. The preacher can preach better, and it is better all round. We may think that we cannot do much, but we can pray. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Let us pray for one another. Yes, pray "without ceasing," in "everything give thanks," for this is the "will of God concerning" us.

THE DAY OF CRUCIFIXION.

G. W. STETSON.

As very few, comparatively, of our brethren are thoroughly posted respecting the time of our Savior's death, and the evidence as to the day of its occurrence, I send you for publication in the Crisis the subjoined, from the pen of W. H. Hacking (Listowell, Ont.), as the clearest and most satisfactory of anything I have ever seen on the subject. I hope you will give it to your readers.

"Beginning to count from the time the wall was finished, about the 12th of Sept., the sixty-two weeks (Dan. 9: 26), or four hundred and thirty-four prophetic days, terminate near the middle of Sept., A. D. 29. . . . The 12th of Artaxerxes answered to B. C. 426, consequently the thirty-second of his reign, being just twenty years later, must synchronize with B. C. 406. Then A. D. 29, diminished by one, added to B. C. 406, make up the sixty-two weeks, after which Messiah was to be cut off; but how long after, the prediction itself gives no clue. However, we are not left to conjecture as to the length of time that must intervene between the ending of the sixty-two weeks and the cutting off of the Messiah.

"In order, then, to ascertain the exact date when 'Christ our Passover' was to be 'slain for us,' we must turn our attention to the type. We find that the 434 years from the completion of the wall must expire on the 25th of the sixth month, or Sept. 12th, A. D. 29; but Messiah was not cut off at that time, because the Paschal Lamb could not be slain on the 25th of the sixth month. So provision was made for the extension of the time to the following Passover day, by use of the word 'after,' thus showing that a part of the prophetic day must elapse before the antitypical Lamb of God could be sacrificed, according to the type in the law. Matt. 5: 17.

"The next Passover day occurred on the fourteenth of the first month of the next year, but the fourteenth, or Passover month, did not occur on Friday, ... but on a Thursday, giving time for the fulfillment of twenty-four distinct predictions relative to the time that must elapse between the death and resurrection of Christ. In the spring of the following year,—as has been astronomically proven,—the fourteenth of the first month, the Passover full moon fell on Thursday, April 4th, A. D. 30.

"The Record informs us that he was crucified the third hour of the day, which, reckoning from sunrise, would be a few minutes before nine of our time. Mark 15: 29. Then at the sixth hour, 12 at noon, there was darkness over all the land. Mark 15: 33. This darkness continued till the ninth hour, or 3 P. M. Mark 15: 33. Then when evening was come (Matt. 27: 57; Mark 15: 42), Joseph of Arimathea, one of Jesus' disciples, went to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus, and buried it ('and laid it in his own new tomb, and the Sabbath approached.' Luke 23: 53, 54. There, therefore, on account of the preparation of the Jews—for the Passover—they laid Jesus, because the tomb was near by. John 19: 42). Consequently, if he was crucified on Friday, his burial would have been on the seventh-day Sabbath, for the Jewish Sabbath began on Friday night, immediately after sunset, and continued until sunset on Saturday. Lev. 23: 32. So, then, there would be no time for the women to prepare the spices and ointments, and rest on the Sabbath (the seventh) day, according to the commandment. Luke 23: 56.

"If his crucifixion was on Friday, his burial would be about seven o'clock on Friday night (or the beginning of the seventh-day Sabbath), and thence to Sunday morning, 'while it was yet dark' (it could not have been later than five o'clock A. M., when Christ rose from the dead, for on April 7th the sun rose at 5.30), was only thirty-four hours. Thus, if the crucifixion occurred on Friday, which was the sixth day of the week, ending at sunset, then he was buried on the seventh-day Sabbath, and this would be the first day of his interment. Then the resurrection, occurring early in the morning of Sunday, would be the second day. Now where is the third? Nowhere! How, then, could such a palpable error have occurred? We will tell you how it happened.

"The notions that existed concerning the termination of the 'seventy weeks' of Daniel at the cross, and the abolition of sacrifices and oblations therewith connected, and the ending of the 'sixty-nine weeks' unto Messiah the Prince, at his baptism, required it. The baptism of Christ in A. D. 26 was a date too firmly established to be moved, but as that date only exhausted the sixty-nine weeks, as was supposed, the seventieth week must be accounted for. So, . . . the chasm of four years between his baptism and the commencement of his public ministry must be bridged over in some way, or a desperate leap made over it; and as no material could be found wherewith to construct a bridge, no alternative remained but to quietly stretch out the forty days temptation in the wilderness, call it four years, and so jump the chasm. Accordingly our Lord's return to Galilee from the wilderness is dated A. D. 30. [If you will examine the chronological dates in the margin of your Bible, you will find this to be as stated above.—G. W. S.]

"That feat being accomplished, the remaining three years of the seventieth week must terminate in A. D. 33. But as one error requires another to harmonize the first, and that a third, and so on ad infinitum, it was found that the Passover full moon of the year 33 fell on a Friday,—so on Friday it must be, no matter what our Lord had said concerning the three days and three nights of his entombment.

"So in utter disregard of inspired testimony, regardless also of the declaration of Luke, who affirms 'the women rested on the Sabbath day, according to the commandment,' the common view has them working on the Sabbath, preparing spices and ointments, contrary to the commandment which forbids any kind of work to be done on the Sabbath, by any Jew, male or female."

GLIMMERINGS.

J. H. BROWN.

The Restitution—How the thoughts of its possibilities thrill my soul as my mind is carried forward into its times. All things new renewed. How its foundation promises are laid broad and firm for the outgrowth of the stupendous and grand structure that is to rest thereon. By the grandeur of its outlines what costliness and beauty of detail are necessitated to constitute it, a structure fitting in all its minutia to be the masterpiece of beauty and glory of such an Architect as the Builder of the universe. Its foundation stones and bold outlines as given in the Scriptures of truth, only incite the mind to a yet more eager gaze, to pierce the surrounding shades thrown by its more prominent portions, to gaze on the beauty of its nearer and more delicate glory.

It is with such thoughts as these that I look at the clear main outlines, and my mind would fain grasp and my eyes behold the structure in all its loveliness.

As I look forth upon nature with its—no, not living green, but yet to be—I faintly realize that it is to be the same face of nature—nature made new, and bright, and pure; that the earth is yet to take on not its present six days working dress, but its Sabbath clothing; not the long-faced, gloomy Sabbath of Pharisaical worship, but that of joy and gladness, praise and blessing. "This day is holy unto the Lord our God; mourn not nor weep . . . go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared, for this day is holy unto our Lord; neither be ye sorry, for the joy of the Lord is your strength."

Yes, it is correctly shadowed forth. While the whole creation is delivered into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, that which is made for the creation is not neglected, but the earth, even the land which "thou hast given to the children of men," is renewed with a fitness suitable as the dwelling-place and inheritance of the children of incorruption—eternal life.

And it will be like God's gifts. No barren sands, or arid tracts of land, or thorny tangled patch, with slimy pools and noxious weeds, unsightly trees with bitter fruit; no, when he gives to man for his dominion, he gives it "very good," and in its depths, richness and fertility will be found that which will cause the hills and mountains to drop with new wine and milk, rivers to teem with life, and myrtles, pine and box abound where thorns and thistle formerly grew, yea, its corn will make joyful the hearts of the people. It shall yet blossom abundantly, and break forth with joy and singing; the trees shall clap their hands; little hills break forth in singing; fruitful fields, vine-clad hills, dales with grass, and reeds and rushes, here and there the fig trees sheen; plains of blooming flowers—these, and more, go to make up the declaration—"I will make the place of my feet glorious," and "there was no more curse."

If these are some of the littles only in one feature of the restitution—the face of nature—what must the grand whole of all its parts be? O! wondrous grace and fulness—eternal weight of glory—worthy of the dispensation of the "fulness" of times, when all things are subdued with Him who is able to do it according to the working of his mighty power that changes our vile bodies like Christ's glorious one by his Spirit that now dwells in us, changed into incorruptible, celestial bodies of power equal to the angels, having the power of an endless life perfected, and a life that even now in its sealing, and earnest, and measure, and in part only, cheers, lifts up, and vivifies the faint-hearted, restores the sick to health, works wondrous cures, and has raised the dead to life.

What mighty workings out will there be of the Spirit of God as power, and life, and cleansing, here seen and experienced imperfectly and in part. An age of wonder! Miracle after miracle in rapid succession. Do God's works decrease? Yet, even the first is of such power, wonder, magnitude, grandeur and glory that it staggers unaided faith to believe, a thing incredible to many, as it was to some of old—the resurrection of the dead.

If we cannot grasp the first of a series of events, the dawning of a dispensation, is it any wonder that when we would look at the whole in all its parts, we fail—mortality is too frail for the sight?

When John had a glimpse of the glory of Him who had been dead, he fell at his feet as one dead until the right hand of the living one was laid upon him. Daniel fainted at the appearance of one who was as the lightning, and at the vision of what should befall his people in the latter days, and required strengthening; so of Isaiah and Ezekiel; and Paul could glory of one who had visions and revelations of Paradise and the heavenly country that is to be, that it was impossible for him to utter in words.

If these were but glimpses of glory, what the full presence and manifestation? It is too great for me. I lay my hand upon my mouth feeling that He alone who can plan, has power to execute and do all his pleasure. Thou art, and there is none other beside thee. Thou wilt perform all thy will.

I WILL hazard the assertion that no man ever did or ever will become truly eloquent without being a constant reader of the Bible and an admirer of the purity and sublimity of its language.

KEEP LOW.

C. MENDENHALL.

There seems to be a tendency in all circles to aspire to some official position. The desire to rule causes men to lose their self-respect, and forget the rights and virtues of others.

In political matters we see intrigues, and every power, good or bad, brought to bear in favor of some aspirant to temporal honors. In ecclesiastical affairs the same error runs rampant; all desire high places in the synagogue, forgetting that humility and dependence are essentials which belong to christian character. Let us heed the apostle's injunction—"Be not high-minded, but fears." Rom. 2: 20.

We do well to fear lest pride gain the ascendency in our hearts, causing us to over estimate our qualities, filling us full of self-esteem and vain-glory. He who took an exalted position at the feast was abased. Let us then keep humble, lowly and meek, knowing that a lofty position is generally a dangerous one. Prominence invites the invectives of envy and the darts of jealousy.

President Edwards has truly said—"Pride causeth the professor to neglect studying the Bible, and his own heart, and to despise others; this kind of pride is the more dangerous, because perhaps it is the most secret of all sins, and the heart is more deceitful in this matter than in any other. The very nature of this sin is to work self-confidence, and to drive away simplicity and humility. It appears in many shapes undiscerned, and takes occasion to arise even from the exercise of real grace. Spiritual pride causes us to speak of the feelings of others in a bitter and severe manner, while we attempt to hide or defend the greatest improprieties in our own conduct."

God help us to root out pride, unholy ambition, love of praise or position, that we may be truly "meek and lowly in heart," as was our great Exemplar. Keep low at the feet of Jesus, as a meek and teachable student.

Be ambitious to grow in grace; seek for a place in God's great kingdom; then shall we have no time or inclination to strive for earth's fading laurels. Let our desires be centered in Christ, who will help us to successfully battle against all that savors of carnality.

If we are truly given up to Him, we are ready to be anything or nothing for his sake, and would rather hold the meanest position in church or state than that the cause should suffer by our inefficiency.

'The saint that wears heaven's brightest crown,
In deepest adoration bends;
The weight of glory bends him down
The most when high his soul ascends;
Nearest the throne itself must be
The footstool of humility."

SEARCH THE CAMP.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Up, sanctify the people."—JOSHUA 7: 13.

Holiness is required. In ancient times the Lord required his people to be holy when they appeared before him to worship. "I am the Lord your God: ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy; for I am holy." Lev. 11: 45. To sanctify means to set apart for a holy purpose.

The Israelites were not allowed to intermingle with the unholy nations around them, but they were to be separate, a holy people with whom the Almighty should manifest his presence, hence he commanded them, "Sanctify yourselves, and be ye holy." Lev. 20: 7. When the Holy One was to speak to the people from Mount Sinai, amid thunders, and lightnings, and thick clouds of darkness, he said to Moses, "Go unto the people, and sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their clothes." Ex. 19: 10. They were to be clean, to have no impurity on their person nor on their garments. And on every occasion afterward, when the divine presence was to be manifested in the tabernacle or in the temple, they were required to put away all that was evil in their midst, that they might come up and worship the Lord in the "beauty of holiness."

When Joshua was to lead the conquering hosts across Jordan, to take possession of the goodly land, he said unto them, "Sanctify yourselves; for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you." Joshua 3: 5.

Purity was essential to the divine guidance, and to their triumphant entrance into the promised Canaan, With "holiness" inscribed on their banners, they could overthrow the walls of Jericho with ram's horn trumpets, but with an Achan in the camp they were compelled to flee before their enemies, in their unsuccessful attempt to capture Ai.

Do we not see a parallel to this in the church at the present time? When ministers try to rally on Israel's hosts to overcome the world, and to discomfit the enemies of truth, they too often find their arm paralyzed, their strength gone, and their enemies too strong for them. Why is it? There is an Achan in the camp. Somebody has coveted the wedge of gold and the Babylonish garment.

There is sin in the church. God cannot work. Go through the camp, go through the camp. Search, search. Find out the Achan. There are lots of silver and gold hid in his tent. Dig it out, dig it out. Sanctify yourselves. Consecrate all to the Lord. Get right, get right. Confess. Strip off the old Babylonish garment. Dress plain. Cleanse yourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

You can conquer Ai and the devil if you have the Almighty to fight your battles. Look over Israel to-day. See what conformity to the world, to its maxims, its follies, its fashions. Go into Achan's tent and see the silver and gold hoarded up in banks, bonds, houses and lands.

Is it any wonder that there are no more revivals of religion, no more cities captured for God? Is it any wonder that ministers pray, and preach, and labor until they "faint, and their hearts melt as water,' when Israel does not come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

Holiness is required of the church to-day as much as it ever was. Hear Paul, the whole-souled reformer, and apostle to the Gentiles. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Rom. 12: 12. That is the word of God. It needs no comment.

Here is a little more. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." 2 Cor. 6: 14–18. Amen.

RELATIVELY ESSENTIAL.

We have heretofore considered things that were absolutely essential, that is, things which apart from all others must be done in order to the salvation of any person from sin and death. Those who have read them will notice one condition peculiar to them all, that is, they were all the work of God, and not of man.

We think there can be no substantial denial of the assertion that all absolutely essential work connected with the salvation of any of the human race from sin and death, is entirely a work of God and not man, and that all work on the part of man in connection with his salvation is only relatively essential. By relatively essential, we do not mean a work that is sometimes essential and sometimes non-essential, but a work that becomes essential as the circumstances bring it across the experience. For instance, circumcision became essential to Abraham from the time the command was given for it, but before that time it was nothing.

By a non-essential work we understand a work that can be done or left undone at pleasure; one which if done will bring benefit to the doer, but if left undone will bring no loss. There may be such a class of works connected with temporal affairs, but we doubt if there are any such connected with eternal life.

Relatively essential works are such as relate to man's obedience to divine commands, and these become as really essential and necessary as any others when once they are known as commands. An essential work is that which has God for its author. Absolute essentials are of God without man's cooperation, but relatively, essentials are of God and man combined.

Relatively, essentials are of two classes, tnose that relate to outward works, and those that relate to the condition of the heart. The first are natural, and the last spiritual. The first are of the law, the last of grace. And as the natural man was first, and afterwards he who was spiritual, so the law comes before grace, but the gospel is embodied in both law and grace. But as grace multiplies and abounds, the law waxes old and vanishes away. Thus, although both are relatively essential to obedience in their place, yet the "last becomes first, and the first last."
